Mr. COWAN. Then, Mr. President, I have to say that this resolution of the Senate, offered by me as an amendment, being a substitute not for a joint resolution of both Houses, but a substitute for what is a concurrent resolution, and upon a subject-matter which is peculiarly and exclusively within the control of the Senate according to the Constitution and laws, ought to be sustained. I agree that if this were a joint resolution, if it were in its nature a law to provide for some previous deficiency in the law, not exactly a statute, but something amendable and curable by a joint resolution, then my amendment would not be in order; but as this is an attempt on the part of the two Houses to do that which is peculiarly within their own province separately to be done, and to do that by means of concurrent action, I have a right to amend by appealing to the Senate to resume its separate functions, and declare in short what it intends to do by its own separate resolution.

Where is the objection to this? What do Senators desire, what do they want? Certainly it cannot be presumed that they desire any political advantages in this matter? It cannot be presumed that there is any trick or political advantage to be derived from this. They are not aiming at that. The real actual matter in hand, the subject in issue here is, whether the representatives from Tennessee shall be admitted upon this floor and upon the floor of the other House. That is the whole of it, admitted to be. If we are to admit those Senators, let us say so. If the other House wants to admit Representatives, let them say so. Where is the necessity of raising the question as to whether Congress is supreme over this matter, or whether the President is supreme, or whether the judiciary is supreme?

In truth and in fact the three branches of this Government are coördinate, equal, neither of them is supreme. The relations between the State of Tennessee and the General Government, so far as the Executive is concerned, have been restored long ago, perfectly restored. Your joint resolution has not a thing to operate upon in that behalf. You have gone on and you have treated Tennessee precisely as you have treated all the other States in the Union, so far as the executive department of this Government is concerned. Have you not been appointing assessors and collectors of internal revenue, and all other officers for that State, and confirming them here in the Senate as well as rejecting?

Then the next question is, whether relations are restored with the judiciary of the country. Is it not well known that the Supreme Court opened their docket and took up cases from the rebellious States? I believe one from Tennessee; I am not so certain of that, but it is very certain if a case had come there from Tennessee or if a citizen of Tennessee had sued in a United States court a citizen of another State he would have been entitled to be heard, and that court would have opened its doors to administer justice to him.

The only branch of the Government which has not recognized these States and their relations to the General Government is Congress. The Constitution declares that each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members. Therefore it is with the Senate to restore those relations with Tennessee which ought to exist between the Senate and that State; and it may well happen that Tennessee is entitled to Senators upon this floor when she may not be entitled to Representatives upon the floor of the House, and it might well happen that she would be entitled to representation upon the floor of the House when she would not be entitled to representation here. The Representatives to the lower House might be well elected, whereas the Legislature which elected the Senators might not be the true Legislature of the State.

But as the sense of the Senate to-day has been repeatedly declared, and by repeated votes, that Tennessee now has a government and that she now has a Legislature, and that she is entitled to representation upon this floor, why not treat the matter as it has always been treated; why not meet it squarely and fairly and say that Messrs. Fowler and Patterson are entitled to qualify and take their seats upon this floor as the representatives of Tennessee, and avoid all this contriving and all this artifice, which, after all, amounts to nothing? It will not make a point for anybody in the end, because the people are not to be deceived by this kind of maneuvering and it will not make the position of one or the other parties stronger in the least by adopting anything like these amendments, these preambles, and allegations which have been put already into the resolution.

By this course you will avoid another difficulty. You propose to have the Executive concur in this. He may make a very good point on you there if it happens that your resolution is a resolution with which he has nothing to do and upon which his approval or disapproval would have no effect. How are you going to answer to the country when he says "I have nothing to do with this; you can do all this as well without me as with me. My approval one way will make no difference." He tells you further, "I wanted you to do this six, seven, or eight months ago." I say that Senators had better hesitate and take the direct course instead of this roundabout way.

I am delighted with the proceedings to-day. Although tardy, I am willing to take it as an abandonment of the ground taken by the majority from the beginning of the session—a total and entire abandonment. When we went into session on the first of December, what was the allegation? The allegation was that a committee of reconstruction must be appointed to inquire into what? To inquire into the condition of the people of the rebellious States and to ascertain whether they were entitled to representation upon the floor of either House. That committee sat and took testimony and reported distinctly against the affirmative side of the proposition, or in other words, that committee reported—

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the Senator will yield, I will make a motion to adjourn.

Mr. TRUMBULL and others. I trust not. Let us finish this matter.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope this question of order will be allowed to be discussed. The idea of adjourning pending the discussion of a question of order I never heard of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is entitled to the floor.

Mr. COWAN. That committee decided—

"It is the opinion of your committee—

"1. That the States lately in rebellion were, at the close of the war, disorganized communities, without civil government, and without constitutions or other forms by virtue of which political relations could legally exist between them and the Federal Government."

"2. That Congress cannot be expected to recognize as valid the election of representatives from disorganized communities, which, from the very nature of the case, were unable to present their claim to representation under those established and recognized rules, the observance of which has been hitherto required."

That report was presented to the Senate of the United States on the 8th day of June, 1866, about forty days ago. Now, I should like to know what has occurred in the meanwhile to change the right of Tennessee to be represented in these Houses. Is it pretended that anything has occurred since to change what appears to have been the deliberate decision and opinion of the reconstruction committee? If so, what has it been? If nothing material has occurred, then the action of Congress yesterday and to-day is an abandonment, an utter and total abandonment of the whole ground that has been maintained by the dominant majority here during the session, and there is no escaping from it. It was said that we must have guarantees, that we must have securities, and that we must have a thousand things. Where are they, I should like to know?

It is said that Tennessee has ratified the amendment to the Constitution. That is the secret of it. That is seized upon as the pretext to do that which Senators feel they should have done long ago. It is a mere pretext, pretending that because a Legislature, scrambled up by the military, and brought in by a sergeant-at-arms and forced to sit, have ratified an amendment to the Constitution, therefore Tennessee is purged, her garments are clean, all stains are washed from her robes, and she is immediately entitled to be represented on these floors! Are you better off now than you were before? What have you got by the ratification of the amendment to the Constitution by Tennessee? Does that give it any validity? Nobody pretends that it does. There is no more amendment to the Constitution than there was yesterday, or ten days ago, or two weeks ago. Hence I say that this is an abandonment on the part of the majority of both Houses here, a distinct, clear, clean running away from their ground on this subject of the admission of members from Tennessee, and I want the country to know that, and to know it now upon this proposition.

If the Senate believe that Tennessee is entitled to representation upon this floor for any cause whatever, and if they believe that the gentlemen elected here, whose credentials are upon our table, were elected by the Legislature of Tennessee, the legitimate government, (as we have voted half a dozen times to-day that it was the legitimate government and that the legitimate Legislature,) then why hesitate for one moment to admit that State to her rights upon this floor? We have been taxing her; we have been making laws for her; and she has had no voice in the councils of the country; she has not been heard. Then, I say, to make your repentance complete, to make it effectual for salvation, to save you, it must be accompanied by works meet for repentance; and the proper work is to admit upon the instant, I think, according to the terms of the resolution, I propose to substitute for the one now before the Senate, her Senators; and I trust the House will follow your example, and that then this vexed question will be settled as the Constitution intended it to be settled, for the Constitution intended that each House should for itself, not in conjunction with the other House, determine the elections, returns, and qualifications of its members.

Here I may remark that there never was any necessity for a reconstruction committee to get at questions which gentlemen alleged lay down below the election of Senators. If we have a right to determine upon the election of Senators, if we have any right to determine upon the qualifications of Senators, are we not obliged in settling that question to determine what is a valid Legislature and what is not a valid Legislature? Could we not have done all that for ourselves?

Mr. WILSON. You wanted to do it your own way.

Mr. COWAN. You did not want to do it, I know; and you did not want to do it according to the Constitution, because you expected you could get a political advantage by getting up a kind of star-chamber committee and shutting the doors against representation from the States for some extraordinary purpose or other. The doors have been shut for seven months; and now the clamor at the doors has induced you, without any reason and upon a mere pretext, to abandon your ground that you held so long, and now you are afraid to come up to it like men and do directly what you would like to do indirectly. That is about the truth of it.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator does not, if he will permit me, call the adoption by Tennessee of the constitutional amendment we have passed a "pretext?" Is that not a cause for admission now?

Mr. COWAN. I say it is not a cause for admission, because it amounts to nothing.

Mr. CONNESS. It is for us.

Mr. COWAN. The ratification of that amendment by the State of Tennessee gives you not a single advantage; it does not give you an additional guarantee; it furnishes you no further security; and yet your House resolution here cites it as the cause, as the reason. I say it is not a valid cause, it is not a good reason, it is a mere pretext. If the amendment to the Constitution had been ratified by three fourths of the States, then I admit it would have been a good reason upon which you might have based your action; but it is only ratified by the State of Tennessee, and even that ratification is denied and assailed, and the fact of that ratification not known here except upon a telegram, and upon a telegram which may have been sent by any wag in Nashville. Who knows whether that amendment has been ratified in the Legislature of Tennessee or not, or anything about it? Who knows how it was done? Who knows what were the means used? It is perfectly certain that the military were called upon to compel the attendance of members to ratify an amendment to the Constitution. I ask in all seriousness in the American Senate whether there is a sane man in the body who believes that an amendment to the Constitution ratified in that way, ratified against the will of members who were compelled to go to the Legislature in order to do it, and ratified by a Legislature which was not elected with a view to the consideration of this question and without a fair opportunity of canvassing its merits before the people, would be worth the paper on which it is written? Suppose it was ratified everywhere. The ultimate power is with the people, and all these barriers that you attempt to build up between the people and power and their servants are as mere straw and chaff. Some day they must give way, and certainly no wise man wants the Constitution amended by any trickery or any contrivance or any unfair means of that kind. It is asserted that of the members of the quorum, the fifty-six required to constitute a quorum of the eighty-four members of the Legislature, two were actually not in the chamber, but were in the custody of the sergeant-at-arms in his room, not present in the hall when the vote was taken. How this is, I do not know; but all these doubts hang over this thing, so that I say you do not know and no man can aver to-day whether the Legislature of Tennessee ever did ratify that amendment to the Constitution or not; and if they did, it is no justification for any action on the part of Congress or the majority of Congress, and amounts, as I said before, simply to a pretext, a pretext which will be understood when it goes to the country.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will ask the Senator again if he will yield for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. COWAN. Certainly.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. NYE. If you withdraw that for a moment I simply want to put in an amendment.

Mr. WILSON. I hope this point of order will be decided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I withdraw it for the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NYE. I wish to propose an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment can be received by unanimous consent. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Now, I renew the motion to adjourn.

The question being put, a division was called for.

Mr. NYE. I should like to have the amendment read.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Some Senators ask that the amendment be read which has been offered by the Senator from Nevada. I therefore withdraw the motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the point of order and the appeal taken by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENDERSON] has asked a division on the motion to adjourn, and I withdraw the motion to adjourn until we can hear the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that it is not in the power of a Senator to withdraw a motion when a division is being had upon it. It can be done by unanimous consent. Is there any objection to the motion being withdrawn?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A division is called for on the motion to adjourn.

A division being had, the result was—ayes 18, noes 19; a refusal to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair, ruling out of order the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. COWAN,] stand as the judgment of the Senate.

The question being put, the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. NYE. Now, I offer my amendment, and I ask to have it read.

The Secretary read the proposed amendment, which was to strike out all after the word "that," in the third line of the resolution, and insert:

The people of Tennessee have organized a government for that State which is in allegiance to the Constitution and laws of the United States, and have given satisfactory evidence of their purpose and ability to maintain the same, and the same requiring the sanction of Congress to its validity, it is hereby ratified and shall be guaranteed by the United States.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President—

Mr. WILSON. Let us have the vote.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is just what I want, if we can get it; but before we take the final vote on this proposition I prefer to reconsider the vote by which we adopted the preamble moved by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. TRUMBULL.] My impression is that if you pass the resolution with that preamble, and send it to the President of the United States, the President will keep it for ten days; he will keep us here ten days from next Tuesday, and then he will send to us a veto message. He will say, "Gentlemen, you have sent to me a resolution with a preamble declaring that nothing but the law-making power of this country can settle this question; now, I dispute that proposition; all else there is in your measure is to admit Senators and Representatives from Tennessee; you have the power to do that; I have always contended that you had the power to do it as separate bodies; if you are in earnest about it, just admit them." Is not that the answer we shall get from the Executive?

Mr. WADE. I rise to a question of order. I want to know whether it is in order here to speculate upon the opinions of the President of the United States in reference to our legislation. In the British Parliament it is a breach of privilege, and always out of order. Is it in order here?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio raise a point of order?

Mr. WADE. Inquire of the Chair whether such remarks are in order.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not desire to be out of order.

Mr. COWAN. There can be nothing in the point of order. What is all this but a mere discussion of the powers of the Executive? The honorable Senator from Missouri assumes that the Executive has certain opinions as to his rights and powers under this Government. It is fair argument.

Mr. HENDERSON. If I am out of order the Chair will so decide.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not consider the Senator out of order.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was stating only a reason for our not adopting this preamble. I have fought against it all day. The Senate voted it down deliberately two or three times. We voted down the proposition to have any preamble at all. The Senator from Illinois insists that we shall have a preamble and finally gets a small majority in favor of it; and having obtained a small majority in favor of it, without any further reconsideration Senators insist that we must stay here and get through with the whole question to-night. Now, I am just as anxious to see Tennessee admitted as any member of this body; but I think we had better reconsider the preamble; or at least we had better wait until Monday morning and consider it. If Senators have made up their minds to stay ten days, it may be all well enough. I would rather not do so; and hence I rise for the purpose of moving an adjournment, and I hope the Senate will consider that this is the proper plan. A great many Senators have left the Hall; a great many more will leave; it is now six o'clock on Saturday evening, and we have had two night sessions during the week; and it does seem strange to me that just after the Senate has reversed its well-considered views, late in the evening, after many Senators have left the body, it is insisted that a vote must be had now. If the Senate acted right in voting down all preambles this morning at an earlier hour, it may possibly be that upon a reconsideration of this matter between now and Monday morning we shall vote down any preamble again. It is but recently that we have come to the conclusion that it was necessary to have a preamble. I do not think we ought to have one. I would stand up and demonstrate to Senators that there should be none, and give the very best reasons in the world for that view, because any preamble that you may adopt will leave a false implication before the people that I do not want to be committed to. When you make a preamble, of course you declare, as the Senator from Illinois said in objecting to the House preamble this morning, that other States shall be admitted upon the same terms. What did he say? He said the House amendment only declares that Tennessee has adopted the constitutional amendment, and therefore we will admit her; and if we do that, he said, we go all over the country declaring that we would admit South Carolina upon the same terms. Now I appeal to the Senator and ask him if there is anything else in his own preamble. Do you say that you will not admit South Carolina upon her adopting the constitutional amendment, whether it becomes the law of the land or not? Does not the same implication go out that would from the House amendment?

Mr. WADE. What is the question?

Mr. HENDERSON. The bill is before the Senator, the whole subject, all of it.

Mr. SUMNER. Will the Senator allow me to suggest to him a consideration in favor of his view? It is very evident that even if we shall pass this joint resolution to-night, as the House has already adjourned we shall not hasten it any.

Mr. HENDERSON. We shall not gain anything by pushing matters now.

Mr. SUMNER. We shall gain nothing. That seems to me a consideration in favor of letting it go over until Monday morning.

Mr. TRUMBULL and others. We gain a day.

Mr. SUMNER. The House is not in session to-night. The resolution cannot go to the House. I think, therefore, the Senator from Missouri is right.

Mr. WILSON. We can have next Monday to devote to other business.

Mr. CONNESS. I submit to the honorable Senator from Missouri whether he will not take the sense of the Senate at once on the motion to adjourn, and then let the Senate do as it chooses.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is the Senator tired of hearing me? I really supposed he always listened to me with pleasure—

Mr. CONNESS. I do usually.

Mr. HENDERSON. If he is at all fatigued—

Mr. CHANDLER. I call the Senator to order. He made a motion to adjourn and is now debating it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have not made any motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has not heard a motion to adjourn.

Mr. CONNESS. I will say that I do always hear the Senator from Missouri with great pleasure. I appeal to him, however, not to keep the Senate in this manner at this time.

Mr. HENDERSON. Other Senators have kept me here until six o'clock; I have had no dinner; and now when I undertake to inflict a short speech upon the Senate, other Senators feel that they are hungry, and the Senator from California feels very hungry and desires to leave immediately. If he had only thought of this a little while sooner, of course we could all have had our dinners by this time. We are not going to finish this joint resolution to-night. The Senator from Nevada has just offered an amendment.

Several SENATORS. It was voted down.

Mr. HENDERSON. There will be other amendments; we shall never get through in this way; and therefore I now move that the Senate adjourn, and I hope that we shall do so. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 15, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Edmunds, Henderson, Hendricks, Kirkwood, McDougall, Morgan, Nesmith, Sprague, Sumner, Van Winkle, and Willey—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Creswell, Foster, Howard, Howe, Lane, Morrill, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Stewart, Trumbull, Wade, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cragin, Dixon, Fessenden, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Johnson, Norton, Ramsey, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, and Wright—13.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I move to amend the resolution by striking out in the third line all after the word "is" to the word "entitled" in the fourth line. The words I propose to strike out are: "hereby restored to her former proper, practical relations to the Union, and is again;" so that the joint resolution will read:

That the State of Tennessee is entitled to be represented by Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Mr. LANE. That amendment was proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW] word for word, and voted down by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands it to be a different proposition. The Senator from Pennsylvania moved to strike out the word "hereby" and the two words "is again."

Mr. BUCKALEW. That was my proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is a different proposition, in the opinion of the Chair, and is in order.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The whole of this entire proposition is, I think, irregular; and although it may not be a violation of the Constitution, it is a proceeding ignoring the provisions of the Constitution. I agree substantially and indeed particularly with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. COWAN.] There is a State of Tennessee, an organized State within this Union where we exercise jurisdiction, where we have judges and courts established, and our own administrative department of the Government in full action. It has at the present time all the qualities of a State, and by all the conduct of the Government in this body as well as on the part of the Executive recognized as such.

Then what follows? The right of representation in the two branches of Congress; and in judging about that right, it is simply a question of qualification; and the question of qualification is fixed by the Constitution, and charged severally upon the two Houses of Congress. This is not, cannot be made legislation. It has no business to be a concurrent resolution, for the reason that it is the office of this body to act in each given case for itself, and it is the office of the other branch of Congress to act in each given case; and this rule cannot be departed from in practice without a departure from the policy established by the terms of the Constitution. I am as anxious to see the State of Tennessee admitted with her complete rights on the floor of Congress as any member upon this floor, and have been for a long time past. I wish as soon as possible to see all the States of this Union represented in the two branches of Congress, but I desire at the same time to have it done in a legitimate way, in the manner provided for by the fundamental law; and what is that manner? When Senators come here and present themselves with their credentials from the State of Tennessee, we are to determine then the question whether they are entitled to their seats or not, whether they have the qualifications. Then the question arises properly. We might ourselves, as a Senate, declare that Tennessee was entitled to representation on this floor; but that is not the legitimate way to raise the question. It is for the Senator to present himself here, and then for the Senate to determine whether he is qualified or not; and so of the House of Representatives.

I should like to vote for the proposition presented by the Senator from Pennsylvania; but as this entire proposition assumes a policy adverse to the policy inaugurated and established by the Constitution, I do not think it can have my support or should have the support of the Senate.

Again, there is a radical objection to the proposition. The preamble as it stands recites what I think the body of the Senate believe to be an untruth. As we are advised here, our best advice is that the Legislature of Tennessee has not approved of the amendment to the Constitution of this session. That is the information which we obtain, and a gentleman elected a Senator from Tennessee, who would under this resolution come in and claim his seat, informed me this morning that he did not understand the amendment to have been adopted. It assumes what is not the fact, as a cause for the conclusion arrived at; but besides, this is not, in my judgment, the true constitutional mode of arriving at a conclusion.

However, as I do not care about occupying time—I rose more particularly for the purpose of expressing my views—I will withdraw the amendment so that a vote may be had. I wished my exact views on this subject to be understood.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read the third time.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to appeal to Senators once more to drop this preamble.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If the Senator will allow me, I desire that there should be a vote on the proposition made by the Senator from California. I desire to record my vote upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California withdrew his proposition.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I desire to renew it, not to discuss it, but simply to take the vote of the Senate upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator must first move to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I should like to have unanimous consent to take the vote of the Senate on that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the reconsideration.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will agree to the reconsideration if the Senator will go under bonds not to make a speech. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I have already said that I do not desire to say anything upon it, but merely to have a vote on the proposition.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Now, if my friend from Indiana will allow me, I will renew the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I want to make an appeal about another thing.

Mr. President, I am going to vote for this resolution, not for the reasons stated in the preamble. I do not intend that your preamble, which I believe to be false in fact in some respects and false in logic throughout, shall prevent me from voting for a proposition which, although somewhat objectionable in form, arrives at a result that I very much desire; that is, the admission to representation in Congress of a State which I think ought to be admitted; but I wish to appeal to Senators again that some Senator who voted for this preamble will move to reconsider it. We shall then have no trouble. We are all willing to vote for the resolution; we are all willing to come to the result; but we do not believe in the logic of the preamble, and some of us believe that it may embarrass action on the question hereafter and possibly delay the adjournment. I feel very anxious for the adjournment, as I suppose all Senators do. The preamble does no good. It was rejected once by the Senate, but some influence or other induced the Senate to adopt it afterward. Whether it was the earnest appeal of the Senator from Illinois to save his measure or not, or what it was, I do not know; but very strangely, it was adopted after it had been once rejected.

Now, I appeal to Senators to drop that. Let us take the measure and we shall have no delays. I am going to vote for the resolution whatever is done about it. I do not consider that I am voting for the preamble. It is a thing that ought not to be forced upon us. It is not right to do it. It is not true, in my judgment; at least we have no evidence to support it; and it is a very unsafe thing, with the little information that we have, to declare that Tennessee has ratified the constitutional amendment. It is a thing that I think Senators do not approve of in their own judgments. But, although I do not like the preamble, I am going to vote for the resolution, and will appeal to Senators to strike that off. If not, I want to get through with this business.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President, what is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin moves to amend the resolution by striking out the words "hereby restored to her former practical relations to the Union and is again," the same amendment moved by the Senator from California, as the Chair understands.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Upon that question I will ask a vote of the Senate by yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I ask the Secretary to read the resolution as it will read with those words out.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it resolved, &c., That the State of Tennessee is entitled to be represented by Senators and Representatives in Congress.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll on the amendment.

Mr. NESMITH (when his name was called) said: The Senator from Maine [Mr. FESSENDEN] had to retire from the Chamber on account of indisposition, and I agreed to pair off with him; otherwise, I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 5, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Doolittle, Hendricks, and McDougall—5.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Creswell, Edmunds, Foster, Howard, Howe, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cragin, Davis, Dixon, Fessenden, Grimes, Guthrie, Henderson, Johnson, Kirkwood, Nesmith, Norton, Ramsey, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, Van Winkle, and Wright—18.

So the amendment was rejected.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time. It was read the third time.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I desire to say a single word only, as I do not wish to discuss the resolution. The amendment which was offered by the Senator from California, and which I renewed, had it been adopted by the Senate, would have relieved the resolution from what to my mind is objectionable; but the result arrived at in the resolution, to wit, the declaration that the State of Tennessee is entitled to representation, is, in my judgment, so important that I shall vote for the resolution, notwithstanding the objectionable part of it which I moved to strike out. If the preamble were a part of the resolution, there are things asserted in it that I could not vote for; but it is no part of the resolution, and I can vote for the resolution.

Mr. COWAN. I have only to say pretty much the same thing. I desire to attain the result; that is, the admission of the representatives of Tennessee on the floor of the two Houses; and I will not be deprived of casting my vote to attain that result by any kind of wrapping-paper that may be put about it. I wish to attain the substance without regard to forms. I think the preamble objectionable, and I think the language of the resolution objectionable. I think the mode by which it is attempted to be achieved altogether and totally objectionable; but I will vote for the whole to attain the desired end.

Mr. NESMITH. I did not vote for the preamble or to insert it in the resolution; but simply because I desire to see the Senators from Tennessee admitted, I shall vote for the resolution as it stands. On the previous vote I stated that I had paired off with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. FESSENDEN,] who had left the Chamber on account of indisposition. The pair was only to extend to preliminary questions. He gave me to understand that he would vote for the joint resolution, and therefore I shall vote in favor of its passage.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, it is perhaps scarcely necessary for me to restate my position on this question after having on a previous occasion discussed so very elaborately the conditions upon which, in my judgment, it would be proper to restore the rebel States to a normal relation with the General Government. But I feel as if I could not let this crisis pass without entering one word of final protest against the decision which seems about to be arrived at. You are going to recognize the civil government of the State of Tennessee and to admit her Senators and Representatives to seats in this Congress, and yet the grounds on which you are going to do so are not such as exact justice at the hands of rebellion toward those late in slavery, not such as guaranty safety to the loyal people against the numerical superiority of treasonable elements, not such as affirm the honor of this great nation in protecting the rights of its citizens and the liberties radiant from its Constitution impartially to all alike. Can I believe otherwise than that this settlement which you propose will be no settlement; that the safeguards you hypothecate will only be self-delusions; and that on the morrow you will awaken to find out that in the eager haste to cater to an imagined political prejudice, you have surrendered, most ignobly surrendered, the whole question of equal freedom that has been the inspiration of the entire conflict from first to last?

I have often announced in this Senate Chamber that, imbued with the conviction that impartial suffrage, making no discrimination of race or color, was the only solid groundwork on which reconstruction in the rebel States could proceed, and that I would never, by any vote of mine, consent to restore those States to their former Federal relations until they should first make impartial suffrage one of the muniments of their constitutions. I propose to-day to redeem in part that pledge by refusing to vote now, in advance of any such action, for the restoration of Tennessee.

Of the causes which carried Tennessee into rebellion, that kept Tennessee in rebellion through long years, and that may make it possible for Tennessee again to assume attitudes of rebellion, the most potent still remains—the disfranchisement of the largest section of her loyal population on the score of color alone. It was this disfranchising feature of the slave code that not only acted directly to degrade the laboring blacks, but also acted indirectly to paralyze the laboring whites, to destroy their political influence, to subject them to slaveholding opinion, and thus make any treason possible that was heralded as being in the interest of the dominant class. Scrutinize it rigidly, strip off deceit of names, reduce slavery to its elements, and you will find this to have been its fatal disturbing political influence. I say political influence, for it is against that you are now ostensibly erecting constitutional barriers, and yet before anything in that behalf is accomplished, nay abandoning the very idea of accomplishing anything, you are ready to readmit Tennessee to your communion and fellowship with the fatal virus of future disease lurking in her constitution, and the great instrument of class despotism there ready again to be shaped into class treason. Sir, there is no national safety in this procedure.

Mr. President, I speak these words now not in the interest of any party, but in behalf of humanity, of justice, of right; and yet were I the oracle to-day of your Republican Union organization, I would plead with you, my friends, not to make this humiliating surrender of the very life principle of your party. Republicanism means nothing if it means not impartial, universal suffrage. Republicanism is a mockery and a lie if it can assume to administer this Government in the name of freedom, and yet sanction, as this act will, the disfranchising of a large, if not the largest, part of the loyal population of the rebel States, on the pretext of color and race.

But, sir, I rose only to enter my disclaimer, to affirm that your materially modified preamble takes nothing from the bad significance of the resolution itself, to declare from my place in the American Senate that I will have no part or parcel in any such deed, and to say that while I arraign neither the conscience nor motive of any member who may differ from me, yet I take appeal to the future to vindicate the correctness of that judgment on which I act, and which finds so little of concurrence here in the present. So reliant, I shall vote against restoring any rebel State that does not guaranty impartial suffrage in its organic law. Above all I shall vote against Tennessee, where impartial suffrage was once of right the rule till abolished by the slave code.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 28, nays 4; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Cowan, Creswell, Doolittle, Edmunds, Foster, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Sprague, Stewart, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, McDougall, and Sumner—4.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cragin, Davis, Dixon, Fessenden, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Johnson, Kirkwood, Norton, Ramsey, Riddle, Saulsbury, Sherman, and Wright—16.

So the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move to amend the title so as to read, "A joint resolution concerning Tennessee."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be considered as adopted, unless there be objection.

Several SENATORS objected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question, then, will be on the motion of the Senator from Illinois to amend the title.

Mr. TRUMBULL. There was an amendment to the title reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. Let it be read.

The SECRETARY. "A joint resolution concerning the State of Tennessee."

Mr. CONNESS. I hope that amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. ANTHONY. Why?

Mr. CONNESS. I will try to state briefly the "why." It is true the resolution concerns the State of Tennessee; but the object generally is to state in the titles of bills and resolutions as succinctly as possible their purpose. To say that this resolution concerns Tennessee is very general indeed. I propose to amend the existing title, if I can, before the question is taken on the motion of the Senator from Illinois, by inserting after the word "declaring" the words "the State of," so that it will read, "A joint resolution declaring the State of Tennessee again entitled to Senators and Representatives in Congress."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first question will be on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope that will not be adopted.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do hope that the Senator from California is not going to fall into the lead set by his colleague, who says that this is nothing but simply a proposition to admit Senators and Representatives. The Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Wisconsin have been telling us that that is all there is to it, and all we have got to do. Now I insist there is something else in the resolution. There is a declaration that the State of Tennessee is restored to her former proper, practical relations to the Union. There is something more than simply admitting Senators and Representatives. I deny the position of the Executive, that he has taken all the time, that Congress has no authority over this question of reconstruction except to admit Senators and Representatives. This is a resolution in reference to the State of Tennessee, restoring her to her practical relations, and these words about admitting Senators and Representatives are of no meaning at all. They need not be in it. The legal effect of it would be precisely the same if they were out. The great point is to restore Tennessee to her constitutional relations to the Union and declare that she is restored. That is all the necessity there is for it.

Mr. CONNESS. The title of the Senator does not declare any such thing. The title that he proposes is that it concerns Tennessee.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Well, alter it then to declare it.

Mr. CONNESS. It is for the Senator to alter it. The Senator has proposed a motion. If he will declare it to be a resolution to restore Tennessee to her practical relations to the Government, that will satisfy me; it will mean something.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I would be satisfied with that. It is only longer.

Mr. HOWARD. I hope that will be adopted.

Mr. WILSON. I will suggest that the title be, "A joint resolution restoring Tennessee to her proper, practical relations to the Union."

Mr. CONNESS. That will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I accept that.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois moves to amend the title so as to make it read, "A joint resolution restoring Tennessee to her proper, practical relations to the Union."

Mr. BUCKALEW. I do not consider this question of title of any importance. No matter what you name this resolution, it speaks its own character on its face. I desired at the end of our proceedings to state an idea which is raised by this question of title, however. Whatever you may say, or whatever may be said upon this subject, the object and purpose of this measure is precisely that which was announced by the House of Representatives in the title of the joint resolution as it was sent to us. It was intended, and only intended, to produce the admission of Senators and Representatives from that State into Congress. There were no other practical relations wanting to be affected by a measure of this kind. I rose for the purpose of stating that I voted against this resolution, first, because I consider it entirely nugatory and ineffective, and invalid; that it has no legal effect and can have no legal effect whatever upon the purpose which was had in view, the admission of members; that that power being explicitly with each House, after this resolution is passed, the power must be exercised by each House and will be exercised precisely as if no such resolution had ever been passed. Viewing it in that light, I felt justified in voting against it, whatever might be my opinions upon the question of the representation of Tennessee in this Senate and in the House. I voted also against this measure because, upon the face of it, it is expressly and solemnly declared that it is passed because of the reasons given in the preamble. You cannot sever the resolution itself from the preamble which is attached to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall the title be amended as proposed by the Senator from Illinois?

The question being put, the motion was decided to be agreed to.

Mr. POMEROY. I was going to suggest that if the words "proper" and "practical" were taken out of that title it would be perfect to my mind. It would then read, "A joint resolution restoring Tennessee to her relations to the Union."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to amend it?

Mr. POMEROY. I desire to amend it in that regard.

Mr. WILSON. Very well; strike out those words.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have no objection to that amendment if I have control of the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator accept the amendment?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. HENDRICKS. There is a practical question which I desire to present to the Senate. I do not think that the historian will turn to this resolution with any degree of interest when he comes to write the political history of these times, and the title, I think, is of no more consequence than the feather that adorns the child's bonnet. The practical question which I propose is that we adjourn.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Has the title been adopted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been adopted.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I thought it was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair declared it adopted, but withdrew his decision for the purpose of allowing it to be amended, because he did not understand that the Senator from Kansas, who was on the floor at the time, desired to move an amendment. The Chair declared it adopted hastily.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope the Senator from Indiana will withdraw his motion until this matter is disposed of.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I withdraw it.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall the title be amended as proposed—"A joint resolution restoring Tennessee to her relations to the Union?"

The motion to amend the title was agreed to.

GENERAL BANKRUPT LAW.

Mr. POLAND. I desire—

Mr. HENDRICKS. I thought I had made a motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator withdrew it, the Chair understood.

Mr. POLAND. Before we vote to adjourn, I desire to take up the bankrupt bill, and make it the special order for one o'clock on Monday. ["No, no."] I will say to the Senate—"No, no." Let me be heard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont has the floor.

Mr. POLAND. I ask to have it taken up at that time because the bill has fallen in my charge somewhat, and I desire to ascertain whether the Senate are willing to proceed with it. I shall not insist upon going on with it in lieu of the appropriation bill, which is partially completed; but I desire to have it taken up at that time, and have the Senate determine whether they will undertake to go through with it and pass the bill at this session. It is merely for that purpose that I make the motion.

Mr. WILSON. I hope it will not be taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves to postpone all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 598, being the bankrupt bill.

Mr. LANE. I hope it will not be made a special order. I want to get a vote on the bounty bill, which I regard as ten times as important as the bankrupt bill. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to make a motion to which I am sure there will be no objection.

Mr. POLAND. I believe my motion is pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is pending, but it is in order to adjourn while a motion is pending.

Mr. POLAND. I hope the Senator will withdraw the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, July 21, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. Borynson.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I move to dispense with the reading of the Journal.

Mr. WENTWORTH. There is no quorum here, and therefore I object.

The Journal was read.

Mr. JULIAN. I rise for the purpose of moving to correct the Journal. I am recorded as having voted in the affirmative on the preamble to the resolution admitting Representatives from Tennessee. I voted in the negative. I move that the Journal be corrected.

The motion was agreed to.

The Journal, as amended, was then approved.

OFFICERS OF THE NAVY.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report back from the Committee on Naval Affairs Senate bill No. 269, to define the number and regulate the appointment of officers in the Navy, with some amendments.

No objection was made, and the bill was received and read. It is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the number allowed in each grade of line officers of the active list of the Navy shall be one admiral, one vice admiral, ten rear admirals, twenty-five commodores, fifty captains, ninety commanders, one hundred and eighty lieutenant commanders, one hundred and eighty lieutenants, one hundred and sixty masters, one hundred and sixty ensigns, and in other grades the number now allowed by law: Provided, That the increase in the grades authorized by this act, shall be made by selection from the grade next below of officers who have rendered the most efficient and faithful service during the recent war.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That of the number of line officers of the Navy on the active list, five lieutenant commanders, twenty lieutenants, fifty masters, and seventy-five ensigns may be appointed from those officers who have served in the volunteer naval service for a period of not less than two years, and who are either now in that service or have been honorably discharged therefrom: Provided, That if by reason of these appointments the number of officers in any grade shall exceed the number fixed by law, no more promotions or appointments to that grade shall be made until the number is reduced below the number fixed by law for that grade: And provided further, That the authority given by this section shall be exhausted when the number of volunteer officers above-named shall have been once appointed.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Navy shall appoint a board consisting of not less than three naval officers superior in rank to the officers to be thus appointed in the regular Navy from the volunteer service, which board, after examination of the claims of all candidates, shall select and report to the Secretary of the Navy the most meritorious in character, ability, professional competency, and honorable service the number to be appointed and transferred to the several grades mentioned in the third section of this act: provided they shall find that number who are suitably qualified therefor. And any officer who has served in the volunteer naval service for the term of two years or more shall have the right to appear before the examining board and present his claims and be examined for an appointment in the regular Navy.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he hereby is, authorized to retain, or to appoint under existing laws and regulations, such volunteer officers in the Navy as the exigencies of the service may require.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That lieutenant commanders may be assigned to duty as navigation and watch officers on board of vessels-of-war as well as first lieutenants of naval stations and of ships-of-war.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the annual compensation of the admiral of the Navy shall be $10,000 a year, and he shall be entitled to the services of a secretary, who shall receive the annual sea pay of a lieutenant in the Navy.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That naval constructors and first and second assistant engineers in the Navy shall be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and shall have naval rank and pay as officers of the Navy.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The first amendment reported by the committee was as follows:

Page 1, strike out all after "war" in line eleven as follows: And provided further, That the number of rear admirals, including all on the active and retired lists, shall not exceed twenty-one, exclusive of rear admirals retired after the passage of this act, and of officers now on the retired list of commodores, who have commanded squadrons by order of the Secretary of the Navy, and who may be promoted to the grade of rear admiral on the retired list; and insert in lieu thereof the following:

And who possess the highest professional qualifications and attainments. And nothing in this act shall preclude the advancement in rank now authorized by law for distinguished conduct in battle or for extraordinary heroism: And provided further, That nothing in this act, nor in the fourteenth section of the act approved July 19, 1862, entitled "An act to establish and equalize the grade of line officers of the Navy," shall be so construed as to prevent the Secretary of the Navy from promoting to the grade of rear admiral from the retired list those commodores who have commanded squadrons by order of the Secretary of the Navy, or who have performed other highly meritorious service.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I am also instructed by the committee to move to amend section two by striking out in line three the word "ten" and inserting "twenty;" in the same line to strike out "twenty" and insert "fifty;" and in line four to strike out "forty" and insert "seventy-five;" so that the section will read:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That of the number of line officers of the Navy on the active list, five lieutenant commanders, twenty lieutenants, fifty masters, and seventy-five ensigns may be appointed from those officers who have served in the volunteer naval service for a period of not less than two years, and who are either now in that service or have been honorably discharged therefrom, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I move to further amend the bill by inserting in the third section, tenth line, after the word "act" the words "provided they shall find that number who are suitably qualified."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I move to further amend by adding to the third section the words "and any volunteer officers attached to vessels at sea, or on foreign stations, may be appointed to the regular service, subject to the conditions contained in this section, after their return to the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. The last amendment which I have to offer is to strike out from section four the words "until their places can be supplied by graduates from the Naval Academy."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then read the third time and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT OF CONGRESS.

Mr. CONKLING. I rise to a question of privilege, and offer the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, on the day of —, at twelve o'clock meridian, adjourn their respective Houses until Tuesday, the 21 day of October, 1866, and that on that day, unless it be then otherwise ordered by the two Houses, they further adjourn their respective Houses until the 4th day of December, 1866.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to explain the resolution in a few words.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is this resolution debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not, without unanimous consent.

Mr. BANKS. I object to the introduction of this resolution as a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The House yesterday decided that it was a question of privilege, and the Chair is bound by that decision.

Mr. BANKS. This involves more than a question of adjournment. It provides that on a certain day hereafter the Presiding Officers of the two Houses may adjourn their respective Houses for two months more, even in the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The resolution says nothing about the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BANKS. That is the result of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The House yesterday after debate upon both sides determined, by a vote by yeas and nays, that the resolution offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] going beyond this resolution in its powers, was a question of privilege; and the Chair is bound by that decision. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. CONKLING. I would like to state the object of the resolution.

Mr. SPALDING. I object.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move to lay this resolution on the table.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not yield the floor for that purpose. I believe I have the power to accommodate the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SPALDING,] who, I understand, desires to call up another question of privilege. I will withdraw my resolution for the present, giving notice that I will offer it immediately after the question of privilege which the gentleman desires to call up shall be disposed of.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. STEVENS, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and made the special order for Monday next, after the morning hour, and from day to day until disposed of.

ASSAULT UPON A MEMBER.

Mr. SPALDING. I now ask that the order of the House be now enforced upon the member from Kentucky, [Mr. ROUSSEAU.]

Mr. ROUSSEAU. I ask leave of the House to say a word or two by way of personal explanation.

Mr. CONKLING. Before I give my consent, I desire to know whether this personal explanation is to be subject to the rules of the House, or whether consent is to be given to go beyond that. If so, then I shall object. I shall object to any personal explanation except it be made within the rules of the House and of decorum.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair has already stated, all personal explanations are subject to the rules of the House. The Chair will expect any gentleman who may object to the language which may be used to make a point of order, upon which the Chair will promptly rule.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I will make no objection.

No objection was made, and leave was accordingly granted.

Mr. ROUSSEAU. Mr. Speaker, I hope I shall not forget where I am, and I will endeavor to keep myself not only within the rules of the House, but within the rule of the strictest propriety and friendly regard for every member of this House.

Now, sir, that the trial of this matter in which I have been involved is over, and the decision of the House has been rendered, I not only feel myself at liberty, but I deem it my duty to the House and myself to say a word or so in reference to it. And here, sir, I must express my regret that I should be called upon to remark upon a matter which has given me so much pain and mortification since its occurrence; and I think nothing would prompt me to speak at this time but a desire that members may understand the feelings and motives which prompted me, and as far as possible my whole conduct in the premises.

I have been compelled to sit and hear myself denounced on this floor in a way in which I regret that any member should denounce a brother-member. I do not rise to complain of this; but I wish to say that such a course does not tend to good feeling, and I think I may add in all courtesy that the conduct complained of was unfair and unjust. When the discussion on this subject was closing the other day, the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] who rose with a proclamation of personal friendship for me, seemed in the course of his remarks as if he were prosecuting a criminal. Such appeared to be the whole tenor of his argument, as well as that of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON.] Now, sir, I conceive that this was unfair and unjust toward a member of this House. The members were my judges, and they ought to have come to the decision of my case uninfluenced by passion and unclouded by prejudice.

Mr. STEVENS. I must object to this. I submit that criticisms on the judgment of the House and the action of members by a man under sentence are not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky intimating that members were influenced by passion are certainly out of order.

Mr. ROUSSEAU. If I have said anything improper I take it back. I have said that members should have considered and argued my case without prejudice and without passion. If I was in error in this position I am ready to withdraw it. If members should not deliberate and determine on a matter of this importance and delicacy uninfluenced by passion or prejudice then I am in error.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope, as I remarked at the outset, that I shall say nothing improper. I appeal to this House to decide whether those gentlemen did not show far more passion in words and actions than I have shown in anything I have said, or, judging from the course of these remarks, what I am likely to say. Why, sir, in the midst of the argument of the member from Ohio—

Mr. STEVENS. I must again object to this course of remark. It is simply a criticism upon what was done by this House in passing judgment upon the case of the gentleman; and the gentleman has no right to criticize it.

Mr. ROUSSEAU. Mr. Speaker, I do not criticise the judgment of the House. I am saying nothing about the judgment of the House. I am speaking of the manner of the argument of the gentleman who prosecuted this case.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that for the gentleman from Kentucky to impute passion to other members in the argument in his case is not within the rule.

Mr. ROUSSEAU. Under the ruling of the Speaker, I will withdraw the obnoxious remark. I was going on to say that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] in the midst of his argument, when certainly greatly excited—

Mr. MERCUR. I call the gentleman to order, and raise the point whether it is in order for him to criticize the speeches or conduct of members in passing upon his case.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already indicated to the gentleman from Kentucky that such language is not within the proper line of remark.

Mr. ROUSSEAU. Well, Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to say, while my case was being tried, and a good deal of excitement was aroused in the House, that an account of a fist fight in some part of the basement of this Capitol between outsiders, alleged to have occurred on the instant, was introduced in the midst of the debate by the member from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] with intense emotion and a labored and not unsuccessful effort at dramatic effect to influence the minds of members, and that said assault was by him characterized as "brutal and bloody?" May I say that, sir?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has said it. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROUSSEAU. Then I will adhere to it. The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is not out of order.

Mr. ROUSSEAU. I am very glad of that, sir, and I will proceed with my remarks. I was sorry to see, sir, that when the House of Representatives of the United States was engaged in the trial of one of its members an effort was made to influence its decision by bringing into the debate such extraneous influences as this. Now, sir, was that either a proper or a timely proceeding?

Sir, the member from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS,] when everybody else was cut off by the previous question from saying a word, seemed to me, and I hope I may be allowed to say it in all courtesy, to be lying in wait in the argument; and when my mouth was doubly sealed by the proprieties of the case and by the previous question, he made a concluding appeal, such as one rarely hears in any court of justice where the case is one of murder or of the highest crime known to the law. That he had a right to do, but though I am ruled out of order if I should characterize that speech of the gentleman as animated by undue "passion," yet I trust I may be allowed, without interruption, to remark that I should have been better satisfied, and that the House could have determined the matter with equal justice and with better temper without such an excited appeal.

The prosecution in this case I must say I think has been entirely unjust to me. I will not allege more for I may be called to order. In the outset the gentleman from Massachusetts—

Mr. STEVENS. I insist this is out of order. He is criticising the mode by which the House arrived at its judgment, what was done by members, what took place here before judgment which a man called for sentence has no right to refer to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order; and will read from page 74 of the Journal:

"No prior determination of the House is to be reflected on by any member unless he means to conclude with a motion to rescind it."

Mr. ROUSSEAU. That is the furthest from my intention.

Mr. STEVENS. There is no mistaking the course of his argument, and I object. Instead of the House I ask the Speaker whether the respondent is not to be reprimanded according to the order of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read another sentence from the Manual:

"The consequences of a measure may be repudiated in strong terms; but to arraign the motives of those who propose to advocate it, is a personality, and against order."

Mr. ROUSSEAU. I have found no fault, and did not intend to find fault, with the decision of the House. It had the right to make it, and I will submit to it. I am speaking of other facts. Am I allowed to do that? Am I not allowed to say that members of this House who were to be my judges went before the committee and prosecuted the case against me? Am I allowed to say that?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the gentleman has the right to denounce the motives of members who voted on this proposition.

Mr. ROUSSEAU. Why, sir, how often must I repeat that I am trying to conform to the ruling of the Speaker? I am speaking of the manner by which the judgment of the House was sought to be influenced. If I am not allowed to discuss that, then I have nothing to say. My argument will not require me to impugn motives.

Mr. BANKS. I do not doubt the gentleman from Kentucky means to do exactly as he says, to speak in vindication of himself, and not to impugn the motives of the House or the members of the House; but he certainly does do that when he says the member from Massachusetts lay in wait.

Mr. ROUSSEAU. I said "lying in wait in the argument." I did not mean the words as personally offensive, and so stated.

Mr. BANKS. The member from Massachusetts spoke on that question because he was violently assailed, and because the committee was violently assailed, in the report made, and because by accident the gentleman from Ohio, who was entitled to an hour to close the debate, stopped before that time had expired and yielded to him. There was no arrangement; it was pure accident.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman give way for one moment?

Mr. ROUSSEAU. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have never doubted that the remarks made by me on the subject before the House a few days ago, to which the gentleman refers, were in order. I am not aware that any sentence I then uttered was out of order. I do not know that my motive for pursuing any given line of argument on that occasion is a proper matter for comment by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. ROUSSEAU.] I certainly was not conscious of using any unfair argument, nor of being influenced by passion or any unworthy motive. I shall not enter into that question, but I desire to say that if the action of the House in this matter can be reviewed, and the motives and suggestions of every gentleman who has spoken on the subject can now be animadverted upon by the party under censure, it is simply reversing the order, and subjecting the House to the reprimand of the offender, instead of his being reprimanded by the House. I hope, sir, that the House will command that obedience to its authority which is due from every member.

Mr. ROUSSEAU. I will relieve the gentleman from any further trouble on the subject. I should be very sorry to abuse the evidently liberal courtesy of the House.

I wish to say a single word to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS.] I remarked, with all courtesy, that he seemed to have lain in wait in the argument. The gentleman says I do him injustice, and perhaps, if he understood me as he states he did, I do. I must, however, be allowed to express, in view of his remarkable disclaimer, my amazement that his whole argument, or almost the whole of it, seemed to be devoted to me, and not, as he alleges, to members who assailed him.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to the beginning of this matter. The gentleman the other day—and I merely allude to it as a preface to what I wish to say—remarked that I had waited four days to redress the grievance complained of. It will be seen that he was mistaken by a day—though that perhaps is a small matter. The discussion took place on Monday and on Thursday evening the collision took place. It is assumed that in that interval my feelings had time to cool. I think gentlemen will agree with me in this, that no time is long enough for "cooling" when one is defamed and maligned upon the record of the nation. When a man has been outrageously attacked in his reputation, especially in the enduring form of a record to be handed down to posterity, he is not likely to learn temperance by a frequent recurrence to that unredressed wrong. The passage of three days had no such effect; it could have had none. I waited, as I thought I ought, to permit this House to take the matter into its own hands. Did the House expect me to supplicatingly call attention to what members now seem so sensitively alive to, in regard to the dignity and privileges of this House? The indignity had occurred on this floor and members had stood by and allowed it to remain to stain their proceedings. In my judgment injustice was done me in that no gentleman brought the matter before the House in such form as to punish both the member and myself—if I deserved such censure.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I rise to a point of order. The House has already passed judgment upon the remarks made on that occasion as well as upon the conduct of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the consent of the House to make a personal explanation, but the Chair does not think it goes to the extent of reprobating the action of the House of Representatives. If that could be allowed, then the gentleman who is now before the bar of the House would have the right to inflict a reprimand and censure upon the House for dereliction of duty in some particular.

Mr. ROUSSEAU. I am not reprobating the action but the non-action of the House. Nor can I understand that reference to the mode in which my case has been prosecuted by particular members of this House is a reprimand upon the collective House or a reflection on its judgment; yet I will pass the matter by.

Mr. JENCKES. Is it in order to withhold the consent of the House to allow the personal explanation?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The House has consented to allow a personal explanation. The gentleman can require that a majority of the House shall consent to his proceeding further in order. When the Chair sustains the point of order that ends his power. Any member can then require a vote of the House whether the member shall proceed in order.

Mr. ROUSSEAU. I was going on to say, Mr. Speaker, that I felt aggrieved by the abuse that I thought I had received upon this floor; but I waited for the House to take action in the matter. I was also informed on the day after the occurrence took place, that the member from Iowa would tender me a written apology. That, together with the reasons assigned, caused the delay, and I waited until Thursday. No member of the House having called the matter up or taken any steps to assert the dignity of the House, assailed as it had been, perhaps by myself as well as the other member, I thought the matter had assumed an entirely personal aspect, and, as such, my only remedy was in my own hands. But I wish the members of the House to believe that it was the last thing in my mind, to offer an indignity to this body. I think I evinced my respect to the House. I think I could not have given a higher evidence of my regard for the peace and dignity of this House than I then manifested; and I assert my belief that scarcely a member on the floor would have submitted to what I did. I went beyond the walls of this Chamber to adjust the matter. I did not think it was a privilege secured by the Constitution of the United States to members of this House to denounce, defame, and slander any person upon this floor. I did not believe that it was the privilege of one member of Congress to slander the character of another member.

Mr. PRICE. I make the point of order that my colleague [Mr. GRINNELL] not being present, and the remarks of the gentleman being calculated to reflect upon him very severely, they are not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order. The House has passed judgment on the entire transaction, and it is not now open to review.

Mr. ROUSSEAU. Very well; I did not intend to be out of order. I wish to read from Judge Story on this subject.

Mr. STEVENS. As it seems impossible to confine the gentleman within the ruling of the Chair, I ask that he be required to take his seat.

Mr. WARD. I move that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROUSSEAU] be allowed to proceed in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated what he regards as in order.

The question was taken on Mr. WARD's motion; and there were—ayes 78, noes 31.

So the motion was agreed to; and Mr. ROUSSEAU was allowed to proceed.

Mr. ROUSSEAU. I am much obliged to the House for giving me this permission, and I shall occupy its time but a few minutes further.

I wish to know, now, if it is in order to have read those extracts from Mr. GRINNELL's speech, which are included in the report of the committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. It is opening up the question anew, and the Chair would have to give the floor to the gentleman from Iowa to reply.

Mr. ROUSSEAU. Very well; I yield, then, the whole matter, since the ruling of the Chair manifestly excludes about all that I wish to state by way of explanation.

I wish to say now to the House that I am here to-day to submit to the punishment the House has chosen to inflict upon me, but I am unwilling that my constituents in my person shall be subjected to reproach in this way, and I look upon a seat in Congress as worthless when coupled with an imputation which rests alike upon constituents and Representative. I have sent my resignation to the post office in this building, and I send a copy of it to the Clerk's desk and ask that it may be read. In thus resigning my seat I wish to add with emphasis that I am not seeking to avoid, much less to evade, the judgment of the House, for I am here to receive it. I shall submit cheerfully to your final action in the matter.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 21, 1866.

GOVERNOR: The majority in the House of Representatives of the United States have directed the Speaker to have me brought to the bar of the House and there reprimand me for an assault on the member from Iowa for unbearable insults offered me by that member. I feel that this sentence is unjust to the people I represent, as well as to myself, and I am unwilling they should be thus humiliated in my person as their Representative. I therefore respectfully resign my office as member of Congress from the fifth congressional district of Kentucky, and beg leave to forward the same to you.

I have the honor to be, &c.

LOVELL H. ROUSSEAU.

HIS EXCELLENCY THOMAS F. BRAMLETTE,
Governor of Kentucky.

Mr. SPALDING. The resignation of the member from Kentucky [Mr. ROUSSEAU] having been tendered by him, I move that he be discharged from the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. STEVENS. The resignation has not yet been accepted, and therefore he is still a member of this House. Even if his resignation had been accepted, and he was no longer a member of this House, it would make no difference. The motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] is a most extraordinary one, and I hope the House will not think of adopting it.

Mr. SPALDING. I wish to say one or two words upon my motion. I think the resolution of this House was intended to operate upon a member of this House, a Representative from the State of Kentucky, from the fifth congress-sional district of that State. We have no longer a Representative here from the fifth congressional district of Kentucky to deal with, and the resolution, therefore, becomes inoperative. And I do not know how this House can come to any other conclusion than to dismiss the gentleman from the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms. I made the motion in good faith; if I am wrong I am open to conviction.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SPALDING,] who has made this motion, offered a resolution, as chairman of the select committee, which was adopted by this House, which directed that persons not members of this House be brought to the bar of this House to be dealt with as the House has directed. The mentioning a person as a member of this House from Kentucky was a mere description of the man.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is this motion debatable? The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. STEVENS. It makes no difference whether it was LOVELL H. ROUSSEAU or any other man who attacked a member of this House for words spoken in debate, the House has the same power over the matter. And while I cannot account for many things that took place during the trial, this motion made by the chairman of the committee is still more unaccountable to me.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. At this stage of the case, I suppose every member of the House will require temperate remarks. It has been suggested by some gentleman on the other side that perhaps the Governor of Kentucky has not yet accepted the resignation of my late colleague. Now, it seems to me that there is nothing whatever in that suggestion. My late colleague did not receive his office as Representative here from the Governor of Kentucky. The Governor has no power over him at all. My late colleague has resigned his office to the constituency that conferred it upon him; and it is not in the power of the Governor to prevent the resignation. I can to-day resign my office as a Representative from the State of Kentucky, make that resignation public, and whether the Governor accepts the resignation or not, my constituents have returned to them the office which they conferred upon me. The sending the resignation to the Governor is only one method of making it public. That is all there is of it.

Now, in support of the sound view of this matter taken by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SPALDING,] I beg leave to suggest that the judgment of this House is that LOVELL H. ROUSSEAU, a member from the State of Kentucky, be brought to the bar of the House and there be reprimanded. Now, I ask whether that is not a punishment peculiar to the character of a man as a Representative in this body? If an outsider, a stranger, commits a violation of the rules of the House, you would punish him appropriately by fine or by imprisonment. But a simple reprimand is a punishment peculiarly adapted to the character of a member of this House. My colleague is no longer a member of this body; therefore he cannot be reprimanded as such.

But gentlemen may say that in accordance with the practice in judicial proceedings, when any tribunal acquires jurisdiction it can go on and complete its action. With some exceptions, this may be true. But when a court has ordered a fine to be inflicted, if the man dies the sentence cannot be executed. This House took jurisdiction of my colleague as a Representative, and in that character it has attempted to punish him by inflicting upon him the censure of the House. But now the representative character of the gentleman is dead. He is now an individual, and you cannot punish him as a Representative, as a member of this House.

Mr. HIGBY. I have listened to all that the gentleman has said, and I would like to ask him a question. I desire to know in what capacity the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROUSSEAU] has come here and addressed the House this morning for half an hour—whether simply as a private citizen or as a member of this House. If the gentleman from Kentucky has ceased to be a member of the House, and become a private citizen, I would like to know at what precise time he ceased to be a member.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. In response to the gentleman, I will say that my colleague did not come here at all. He has been in custody, and he has been kept here. He has been in the custody of this House; and no matter what his character may be, he was allowed by the courtesy of this House to make a personal explanation. But, sir, that does not change the law of the case at all. It is sufficient to know that, before this House proceeds to execute judgment, my colleague ceases to be a Representative; and you cannot, therefore, execute the judgment of the House on him in that character at all, no more than you can execute the judgment of a court after the culprit has departed this life. When the culprit dies, the judgment of the court also of necessity dies. So the representative character with which my colleague was clothed, and in which this House tried him and sought to punish him, has departed before the execution of the judgment, and he is now, to all intents and purposes, a private citizen.

Mr. HIGBY. I understood the gentleman to say that his colleague had been in custody. I suppose he means of an officer. If such is the fact, it is news to me.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I mean constructively in custody.

Mr. BANKS. I would like to occupy a very few minutes upon this question.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BANKS. Mr. Speaker, I cannot sustain the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SPALDING,] the chairman of the select committee, on the question of privilege. That motion, as I understand, is based on the theory that the gentleman from Kentucky is not a member of the House. Sir, he is a member of the House. He cannot dissolve his connection with this House as a member by any act of his own. The resignation of a member must be accepted by the House in order to release the member from his obligations to the House. This is well-established parliamentary law. This House is created by the Constitution and according to the forms of the Constitution; and it cannot be dissolved by any other act than its own during the time for which it is appointed. It cannot be dissolved by the voluntary act of any number of its members who may choose upon their own judgment to resign their positions. I understand it to be a well-established principle, and I believe it to have been acted upon by this House, that a member cannot of his own will, without the consent of the House, resign his office and be absolved from his obligations as a member.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. Well, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] is an experienced parliamentarian—perhaps a much better parliamentarian than lawyer; I do not know how that is. But is not the doctrine which he has advanced most strange? What does it amount to? That a member of this House cannot resign his position to his constituents without the consent of this House. Sir, from whom did the gentleman receive his power, whom does he represent? His constituents at home most certainly. They clothed him with the office. I do not suppose that side of the House will oppose that position, that the power of representation belongs to the people, and it is not within the power of the nation or any State to trammel it.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. For a question.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask the indulgence of the gentleman for a moment for the purpose of inviting attention to what was the informal action of that side of the House at a former stage of the present case. It so happened Mr. GREEN CLAY SMITH paired himself on this question with two gentlemen.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I decline to yield further. Mr. SMITH has gone to Montana.

Mr. KELLEY. He had gone to Montana and resigned. Those gentlemen submitted it to this side of the House whether his having forwarded his resignation, to which fact I certified, released them from the pair, and Kentucky then held that a member did not cease to be such until his resignation had been accepted. So the two members were kept silent by a pair with what is now called a dead or non-member.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say whether he has any knowledge that Mr. GREEN CLAY SMITH has resigned. I am told he has not.

Mr. KELLEY. I then stated on the floor that Mr. GREEN CLAY SMITH had forwarded his resignation to Kentucky, and was about entering on the discharge of his duties as Governor of Montana.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I was informed of the reverse at that time when his pair came up; I was informed that he had not resigned. The gentleman did not state it then, and I do not believe now that he has resigned. I believe he ought to have resigned. [Laughter.] My belief is now that he has not resigned.

Mr. BENJAMIN rose.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. Let me answer one gentleman at a time. If the gentleman had said he had knowledge of the fact that Mr. GREEN CLAY SMITH had resigned, I myself would have opposed his voting here. It is well known that I never sought to have his vote or action here. [Laughter.] He may go to Montana, or anywhere else, for me. I was told he had not resigned. As a matter of fact, when it comes to be looked into, I think it will be found he is drawing his salary to-day as a member of Congress. I hope I may be mistaken in regard to that.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman fails to note that I had announced Mr. GREEN CLAY SMITH had informed me he had forwarded his resignation.

Mr. ROGERS. Has the gentleman from Pennsylvania a right to address the House?

The SPEAKER. He has, if the gentleman from Kentucky does not object.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. The gentleman did not state within my hearing that Mr. SMITH had resigned.

Mr. KELLEY rose.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I do not yield. If the gentleman stated the fact, it did not come to my hearing. I think Mr. SMITH ought to have resigned. I believe he has not resigned. I am told he has not. I have made these remarks to explain my own position. I hope he has resigned, but I do not believe he has. But so far as that case is concerned, it makes no figure here.

I return, then, for a moment to the gentleman's most extraordinary position that a member of this House cannot resign at all or vacate his seat in the House. I would suggest whether it will not be most fortunate or convenient at this time never to grant leave to any man on that side of the House to resign, for just as certain as he goes home and a new election is ordered, the copperheads will beat him and you will never get him back again. So you had better practice on that doctrine and let no member of this pure body vacate his seat lest you should fail to get as good a man back again.

Mr. PRICE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. For what purpose?

Mr. PRICE. I merely want to verify a statement.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. What statement? I do not want any indorsers.

Mr. PRICE. I wish to say to the gentleman from Kentucky that this is a verification of the prophecy which says that "in those days false prophets shall arise." [Laughter.]

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield?

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. For a moment.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I suppose it is well settled that this House has power to punish for contempt, and in the exercise of that power it may order a member to be committed to jail and held in custody for a time. There is no doubt about that. Suppose the House in its judgment in this case had ordered him to be kept in jail or in confinement for one month. Does the gentleman from Kentucky hold that he could the next day after being committed offer his resignation, and make it the duty of the marshal to turn him out of jail?

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. What I hold is very plain and the gentleman need not misunderstand it. I hold that no act of Mr. ROUSSEAU after judgment is executed, can have any effect upon that judgment. But prior to it, suppose a man dies; sentence has gone against him, and the sheriff on a day certain is to execute it. Now, sir, I appeal to every fair-minded man if this is not a case against my colleague to affect him, if judgment is to be pronounced and executed against him in his representative character or in any other character. It was never contemplated for a moment by any man concerned in this transaction that he was to be punished as a private individual. I grant, when you take a man as a private individual you may punish him as such, but who does not know that the judgment of this House is peculiarly appropriate for the punishment of its own members?

Mr. NIBLACK. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I will in a moment, but not now. When I was interrupted, I was proceeding to say that every man must admit that the judgment of this House was intended to operate on my former colleague in his representative character, and he having resigned that character is gone, and therefore, that character having departed, it seems to me that no punishment can be executed now under the judgment on him in his representative character.

But I have this to say in addition, that certainly all the purposes of public justice are answered when the judgment of this House has been executed to the extent that General ROUSSEAU is no longer a member, but has abandoned his place here by resignation. That is equivalent to the first and strongest resolution reported by the committee. The committee sought to expel him. By his own act he is now expelled. Is there any man who feels a disposition to pursue him further? Does not charity require that we stop there? We sought to expel the man. Failing in that, we passed a resolution less severe than that, and now, by his own act, he is expelled; he has forfeited his seat. Ought not that to satisfy all proper feeling? Can there be any purpose to go further and torture this man as an individual when he is no longer a Representative? Why, surely not.

But, sir, I do not want to detain the House, as I know there are several other gentlemen who desire to make some remarks. I want, however, to say this: that since I have been on the floor, it has been suggested to me in regard to GREEN CLAY SMITH having resigned, that he left here before his nomination was confirmed. One of my colleagues informs me that Mr. Dillon, the clerk of the Sergeant-at-Arms, informed him that he intended to hold his seat and draw his pay until the 1st of August—or not to draw his pay, but to hold his place.

I will yield now for five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. NIBLACK.]

Mr. NIBLACK. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HARDING] has already so fully gone over the ground which I proposed to go over that I shall have a very few words to say to the House. I submit to the House that inasmuch as the first effort of the House to inflict punishment in this case has failed, and inasmuch as a substitute was adopted, that the gentleman from Kentucky be reprimanded, and the gentleman from Kentucky has resigned his seat, the effect of the resolution originally adopted has been attained. The departure from the House of the member from Kentucky practically operates as an expulsion from his seat. Now, I submit to gentleman upon all sides, that if we should attempt to go beyond that, and to inflict this penalty upon the late Representative from Kentucky, he no longer being practically a member of this House, it would savor too much of persecution, of a personal infliction of penalty; and the moral effect that has been accomplished by the adoption of the resolution in the first place will be destroyed. I therefore, as the member from Kentucky [Mr. HARDING] has remarked, submit that in fairness and charity, and as a matter of good taste, we ought now to discharge the late Representative from Kentucky from the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and allow him to go free without further mortification. In all conscience we have humiliated him enough when we have adopted such action as has driven him from his seat.

I do therefore think that waiving all question of right or power, waiving the question as to whether his resignation has taken effect or not, whether technically he is to-day a member of the House or not, we ought in fairness and in justice and in courtesy to discharge him, and not insist upon this reprimand which certainly was only intended to operate upon him as a member of this body.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HARDING] yield to me for a few minutes?

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I will yield for five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON. The proposition before the House is to discharge the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROUSSEAU] from the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms. That proposition may be based upon two ideas: it may be based upon the idea that he has resigned his office as a member here. Upon that proposition I think we can have no trouble at all; for if it be true legally that he has resigned his office, parted with it, surely we ought not to exercise jurisdiction over him, even if we had the power so to do. Gentlemen say that he cannot be considered as having resigned until his resignation has been accepted. Now, I differ upon the legal proposition. The matter of resignation is similar in many respects to the question of losing one's residence. It is a question of intention entirely. A person may part with his residence, and have a residence nowhere until it attaches to some other place. He may lose his residence in one place by his own act for a considerable time, during which it may not attach to any other place. The question is, has the office of Representative, a member of this body, parted from the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. ROUSSEAU?]. He has resigned his office; he has written his letter of resignation; he has laid down the office by his own act. It is no answer that that resignation may not have yet been received and accepted by the proper party. The office has gone from him.

Mr. SPALDING. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JOHNSON] yield to me for a moment?

Mr. JOHNSON. I hold the floor by the courtesy of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. HARDING.] If he will consent I will yield.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I have no objection.

Mr. SPALDING. I will modify my motion so as to have it read that the resignation of LOVELL H. ROUSSEAU, a member from the fifth congressional district of the State of Kentucky, be accepted by this House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that if the resolution, as now modified by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SPALDING,] should be adopted, the Chair will be compelled, upon the demand of any member, to proceed to execute the order of the House. In the Thirty-Fourth Congress, with only seventeen votes in the negative, the House of Representatives expelled a member after he had resigned, and after his letter of resignation had been read in the House; and if the gentleman from Ohio modifies his motion as he has indicated the Chair will feel required, upon the demand of any member, to execute the order of the House.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I now desire—

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to a point of order, and that is that this House has no right to accept a resignation of one of its members, and therefore it is not in order to submit such a motion.

Mr. BANKS. Yes, we have the right to accept a resignation. As there is a question about the right of a member to resign his seat in this body, I think it should be settled deliberately. I ask that a paragraph be read from Cushing's Manual upon the subject of resignations.

The Clerk read as follows:

"After the meeting of the Assembly"—

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. There is one point of order already pending.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. The Chair ruled the other day, when I wanted to have a statute read which this House was about repealing, that it was not in order, as being in the nature of debate.

The SPEAKER. The House was then acting under the operation of the previous question; it is not now so acting.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I understand that a question of order is not debatable.

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I object to the reading of this extract as being in the nature of debate.

The SPEAKER. A member who has raised a point of order has a right to give his reasons for making the point.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I object to the reading of this extract as being in the nature of debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The Clerk then read as follows:

"After the meeting of the Assembly, and the acceptance and qualification of the members, any one may at pleasure resign his office, which will, at all events, be effectual if accepted, unless there is some express provision of law or otherwise to the contrary. If a member desires to resign while the Assembly is in session, his resignation should be made to the Assembly itself; if afterward, to the officer, if there is one, specially provided or appointed by law to receive it; and if there is no such provision, it would seem that the right of resignation in such a case cannot be exercised. A resignation takes effect from the time when it is accepted, or presumed to be so; or, it may be, when it is received, or when there is a presumption that it has been received."

Mr. ROGERS. I desire to ask whether the extract which has just been read has not relation exclusively to the Legislatures of the States.

Mr. BANKS. No, sir; it is universal parliamentary law.

Mr. Speaker, if there be a vacancy by the resignation of a member of the House, it cannot be filled until the Governor of the State is notified by the Speaker that there is such a vacancy; that is, it cannot be legally filled. For this there is a precedent in the English books.

Mr. RADFORD. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts to the case of Mr. Stebbins, who was a few years ago a member of this House from the State of New York. He resigned during a recess of Congress, and this House had no notice of his resignation, and no action was taken by it on the subject.

Mr. BANKS. That is very probably true, because generally no question is made. When a resignation is sent in it is generally accepted as a matter of course.

Mr. RADFORD. In the case I speak of no resignation was sent to this House at all, and no action was taken by the House on the question.

Mr. BANKS. The resignation, I presume, was accepted as a matter of course.

Mr. ROGERS. I desire to make a single suggestion to the gentleman. In the case of the Senators and Representatives who resigned just before the breaking out of the rebellion it was not questioned, I believe, by either House that they had the right to resign and vacate their seats in Congress, and that neither House, nor both Houses together, had any power or control over the matter.

Mr. BANKS. The resignation of those members was accepted because no objection was made.

Mr. ROGERS. If my recollection is correct, the question was raised, and it was decided almost unanimously that there was no power in either House or in both Houses to prevent those members from withdrawing.

Mr. CONKLING. Yes, "withdrawing;" but they did not resign.

Mr. BANKS. The case suggested by the gentleman from New Jersey is one of revolution. It is not a case applicable to the view I am now presenting.

Mr. TRIMBLE. I desire to ask the gentleman whether there is any law in this country to compel a man to hold an office against his will.

Mr. BANKS. No, sir, there is not.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Has not any member of this House, then, the right to resign to the people who elected him?

Mr. BANKS. A member of this House cannot resign without the consent of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to read a passage from May's Parliamentary Practice, which states the practice of the English House of Commons as late as 1852:

"In December, 1852, several members accepted office under the Crown against whose return election petitions were pending. After much consideration it was agreed that where a void election only was alleged a new writ should be issued, but where the seat was claimed the writ should be withheld until after the determination of an election committee on that claim."

Mr. RAYMOND. I desire to call attention to a case which occurred in the House some years ago—the case of Preston S. Brooks. In that instance a resolution of expulsion was brought before the House, but failed to receive the requisite two-thirds vote. After that Mr. Brooks asked permission to make a personal explanation, which was granted; and at the close of his speech he made this announcement:

"And now, Mr. Speaker, I announce to you and to this House that I am no longer a member of the Thirty-fourth Congress."

No objection was made by any member; all proceedings were suspended; no further resolution was adopted. How far that case may be a precedent I leave the House to determine.

Mr. BANKS. Permit me to say, Mr. Speaker, that the case constitutes no precedent whatever. The proposition was to expel Mr. Brooks. The two-thirds vote necessary for expulsion was not obtained. Mr. Brooks expressly desired to withdraw from the House as a member, and no objection was made. His resignation was tacitly accepted.

Mr. RAYMOND. That appears to me a precisely parallel case.

Mr. BANKS. Not at all. In this case the House has resolved that the member shall be reprimanded, and the order of the House is yet unexecuted.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will only say a word, and then surrender the floor to any gentleman who wants it. A member of this House—

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. Is the gentleman from Ohio entitled to the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio has the floor to state his point of order, but he cannot go into any elaborate argument.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. Is there not one point of order pending?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts had extracts read for the purpose of supporting the point of order.

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to support the point of order on this ground: that the resolution submitted by my colleague [Mr. SPALDING] accepting by this House the resignation of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROUSSEAU] is not in order, because this House has no power to accept his resignation. He holds his commission or right to membership here, not from the House, but from the people of his district. When he came here he brought credentials from the Governor of his State; and when he resigns he must resign to the power that put him here. He must resign through the Governor who gave him the credentials by which he was recognized here. The officer who introduced him to the House, namely, the Governor of his State, who sent him here with credentials, is the person to whom and through whom his resignation goes back to the people. The Constitution declares that when vacancies happen in the representation of any State the executive authority shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies. The Governor of the State is the officer to announce the vacancy and call an election for filling that vacancy. It seems to me, therefore, that the matter is within the power of the House, according to the precedent cited, where a member of another Congress was expelled after he had resigned.

Mr. JOHNSON. I rise to a question of order. I submit to the House the impropriety of our discussing the acceptance of a resignation which is not here. It is not on the Speaker's table. There is no resignation tendered to this House at all. The gentleman from Kentucky has informed the House that he has resigned to the proper party, the Governor of Kentucky, for notice to the people who sent him here. He presented a copy to this House, but he has not tendered his resignation to the House. He has only informed the House that he had forwarded his resignation to the Governor of Kentucky. Yet we are talking about the gentleman's resignation when he has not sent it to us. He has no right to send it here. It is not necessary that he should resign to the House. We have no custody of the matter at all.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order that the House has no right to accept the resignation of the member from Kentucky, and the Chair submits the question to the House.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. Is it in order to make remarks on the point of order?

The SPEAKER. It is if confined strictly to the point.

Mr. SCHENCK. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Kentucky has already occupied the floor.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. This point of order was sprung upon me and I had to surrender the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to twenty-one minutes on the original proposition. The Chair understands that he wants to submit a few words on the pending point of order.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I do not see why there should be any anxiety about my saying a few words. I am not asking the gentleman's courtesy for that privilege.

In regard to the point of order, I understand the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SPALDING,] the chairman of the committee, to be that, having resigned, (of which he was glad,) the House should accept the resignation without proceeding to execute the judgment against the gentleman from Kentucky. That is the whole of it, and I hope it will be adopted. The idea that a man is tied up and cannot resign his seat without the House accepting the resignation is merely ridiculous, and does not deserve argument. A man receives his power and authority from his constituents, and to them and them alone he resigns. The Governor cannot prevent it. The only question is whether he has done it. It is a right that he can avail himself of any moment, and this Congress has no sort of power over that right.

Mr. STEVENS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. Well, sir, I have not "any generosity" at this moment, and cannot yield. [Laughter.] I believe, however, I will be generous and yield. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEVENS. I believe with the gentleman, that this House has no power over a resignation. It is always made to the Governor, and to him alone, and he accepts it. But I ask the gentleman whether he has not heard of a dozen cases where after resignation has been tendered it was withdrawn. I have known several in this House.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. The gentleman concurs with me, as I was sure he must, that it is little less than absurd to contend that this Congress has any power or control over a member's right to resign. Then, the only remaining question is, whether he has resigned or not. The Governor has no power to control his resignation, and the authority read by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] related to the legislative body of some State.

Mr. BANKS. No, sir.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. It is very certain that if a precedent can be found where Congress has assumed to control the right of a member to resign to his constituents, it is an absurdity, and does not deserve to be argued, because no such thing can properly exist, and I would hold it as an authority long since overruled and exploded.

But I do not understand it that way. The gentleman having a right to resign, the only question is, whether he has resigned or not. Whenever notice is given to his constituents by any sort of publication that he has resigned, the seat is vacant. I know you may, by State legislation, provide that when a member of Congress resigns he must tender his resignation to the Governor, the secretary of state, or some other officer; but in the absence of any such legislation nothing of that sort can be required of him. According to the law of Kentucky, there is no power in the Governor any more than in the constable to control that right, and the only reason why a letter of resignation is addressed to the Governor is that that method of making it public is resorted to in order that the gentleman's constituents may know it, and thereupon, the resignation having been published, the Governor can order a special election. Now, then, this is as clearly and fully brought before the House as it is possible. The letter of resignation has been mailed to the Governor of Kentucky, and a copy of it retained and has been read to the House. Now, in the face of all that, has any one a right to say or insinuate that my colleague has not resigned? If he should return next week to this House and say he had not resigned, you would have power to act upon it. He cannot take advantage of his own wrong action. His letter has been read to the House, and he has declared that it has been transmitted to the Governor; and it is a humiliating and dark insinuation to throw out against any man under those circumstances that he may, notwithstanding all that, return and seek a seat here. But even if he should seek to do so no injury can result, because having resigned he has lost the character of Representative, and the judgment of the House cannot be executed upon him as a Representative.

But what I wanted to say more particularly, after having said this much, is this—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has concluded his remarks on the point of order. The Chair has already decided that if this resolution should be agreed to, as the House of Representatives claims jurisdiction even where a member has resigned, and has, in the Thirty-fourth Congress, expelled a member after resigning, the Chair would be compelled, on the demand of any member, to execute an order of the House.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. Unless the House has discharged him from custody.

The SPEAKER. That is not the question before the House. The gentleman from Ohio has modified his resolution, so as to propose that the House accept the resignation. His colleague has raised the question that the House has no right to do it.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. The time has not come for the execution of the reprimand. The SPEAKER. When the time comes that will be subject to appeal.

Mr. GARFIELD. I demand the previous question.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the position of the original resolution?

The SPEAKER. It is modified, so that instead of discharging the member from the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, it now proposes that the House accept the resignation. Upon that the gentleman from Kentucky raises the point that the House has no power to accept it.

Mr. SPALDING. I withdraw the resolution altogether.

Mr. GARFIELD. I insist upon the previous question.

The SPEAKER. There is nothing before the House.

Mr. ROGERS. I renew the resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the order of the House be enforced.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask the gentleman from Iowa to yield to me for a few minutes.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order. I was cut off in the middle of an argument on this point of order.

The SPEAKER. That is very true, but the gentleman from Ohio had a right before the vote or decision to withdraw his resolution or to modify it.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I ask the privilege of renewing it.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. How did the gentleman from Ohio get the floor?

The SPEAKER. He had the right to withdraw it.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. But not to take a gentleman off the floor?

The SPEAKER. Certainly; he would, perhaps, have no other opportunity. That is too clear even for a point of order to be made upon it. If a member has the right to modify his proposition the recognizing of another gentleman on the floor cannot cut off that right. The gentleman from Kentucky proposes to renew the proposition. The gentleman from Iowa has demanded the execution of the order, and unless that order is rescinded the Chair will proceed to execute it.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I appeal to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to withdraw the previous question, and then I will renew the resolution.

The SPEAKER. It is not the previous question; it is the execution of the order of the House.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I ask the gentleman to allow me to renew the resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. I cannot yield.

Mr. ROSS. I raise the question of order that sentence cannot be executed until the members from Tennessee are admitted and the oath of office is administered to them. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. No Representatives can be admitted from the late confederate States except by joint resolution under the action of both Houses.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I submit a question of order. The gentleman from Iowa insists that the order of the House be now executed. I inquire whether it would not be in order for any member of the House to move that the further proceedings in that connection be dispensed with.

Mr. ROGERS. Is it not in order to move to lay the proposition on the table?

The SPEAKER. It certainly is not in order. The Chair is of opinion that a motion to rescind must be made by some member before the execution of the order of the House shall have been required by any member. Therefore it is too late, unless with the consent of the gentleman who demanded the execution of the order.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman from Iowa will allow that to be offered in good faith, without any disrespect.

Mr. ALLISON. I regret that I cannot yield for that purpose.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Would it be in order, inasmuch as the relation of Mr. ROUSSEAU has changed since this report, to move to recommit this whole matter to the committee?

The SPEAKER. It would not. There is nothing before the House except the execution of the order. The only method would be to raise the point of order as to whether the Chair could execute the order, and upon that the Chair would rule.

Mr. TRIMBLE. The Chair decides that the motion to recommit is not in order.

The SPEAKER. Certainly. This resolution was adopted several days since, and in regard to the execution of the order it has been subject at any time, from the hour of the adoption of the resolution, to be called up and its execution demanded by any member. The Chair has waited the action of the committee. During all that interval any gentleman could have moved to rescind the resolution, and any member could have demanded the execution of the order. But the motion to rescind not having been made before the gentleman from Iowa demanded the execution of the order, the Chair will proceed to execute the order. That is subject, however, to appeal.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I raise another question of order, and I will state it as briefly as I can. It will be remembered very distinctly by the Speaker that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] had moved his resolution; that was pending, and on that I had the floor. While I had the floor, and was yielding it to some members a few minutes at a time, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] arose in his seat and said he would withdraw his motion. Assuming that he had the right to do so, I immediately stated that I wanted to renew his first motion, but in the noise and confusion here I suppose I was not heard. Now, am I to be cut off from my right to renew that motion, when I had the floor at the very moment the gentleman from Ohio withdrew his last motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide the point of order, and in doing so will make a statement of the facts of the case, which he will call upon the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HARDING] to verify. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] originally moved that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROUSSEAU] be discharged from the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and relieved from the further operation of the order of the House. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HARDING] took the floor to speak upon that motion. After a time the gentleman from Ohio appealed to him to yield for the purpose of allowing him to modify his motion. The gentleman from Kentucky yielded to him, and the gentleman from Ohio modified his motion so as to make it a motion to accept the resignation of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. ROUSSEAU.] Thereupon the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] arose to a point of order upon the motion as modified. That point of order was argued at some length, and then the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] arose and withdrew his motion as modified, which he had a right to do. The Chair then stated that there was no motion before the House. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] then arose and demanded the execution of the order of the House. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HARDING] if that statement is incorrect in any particular.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. A little, I think.

The SPEAKER. In what respect?

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. Just in this respect: the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] modified his motion with my consent; that is all correct. Then I retained the floor and debated the question some ten or fifteen minutes before any point of order was made. Yielding momentarily to a few gentlemen around me, I was then interrupted and stopped by this point of order. Now, when that point of order had been disposed of I had a right to be placed back just where I was before it was raised. But the Speaker would not decide that point of order, but was about to submit it to the House. Pending that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] arose without consulting me, and said he withdrew his motion. I immediately said I desired to renew his original motion, still being on the floor, still having a right to it. Now, can the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] run over my right and demand the execution of the order of the House while I am upon the floor?

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman from Kentucky yield the floor to the gentleman from Ohio to modify his motion?

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. Not to withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman yielded to have the motion modified?

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I did yield for a modification, and then argued in favor of it for some ten minutes.

The SPEAKER. Was not the point of order made on the motion as modified?

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. After I had argued the motion for some minutes.

The SPEAKER. That point of order was debated, and the question was about to be submitted to the House when the gentlemen from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] withdrew his proposition, which took the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HARDING] from the floor, there being nothing before the House for its action. Thereupon the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] obtained the floor and demanded the execution of the order of the House.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. Was I not entitled to the floor to renew the original motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SPALDING]?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] had preference, from the fact that he had not spoken at all upon this subject, while the gentlemen from Kentucky [Mr. HARDING] had spoken both upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] and upon the point of order. The Chair therefore recognized the gentleman from Iowa, as he would have done any day since the order of the House was made had he arisen and announced that it was for that purpose. The Chair did not put himself forward to execute the order, because the duty devolved by it upon the Chair was such that he did not, as the Presiding Officer of this House, desire to exhibit any special zeal in the matter.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I want to inquire whether it would be in order for me to move that the execution of the order of the House as demanded by the gentleman from Iowa be postponed for the purpose of allowing me to then move that further proceedings under that order be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to move a postponement of the execution of the order. That is the only manner in which its execution can be arrested when called for by any member. A special order, even though made such by unanimous consent, can be postponed by a majority vote of the House.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. To show that I have no disposition to trifle with the House, I move that the execution of its order upon the gentleman from Kentucky be postponed for fifteen minutes.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend that motion by striking out "fifteen" and inserting "ten"; and I will endeavor to assign my reasons for wishing a postponement of only ten minutes, instead of fifteen.

Mr. Speaker, I have desired to say to this House that I think we have been engaged this morning in a very unprofitable discussion, not touching the merits of the question before us. I hold, sir, that no resignation, whether it be made to the Governor of a State or to this House, can in the slightest degree affect the question of the execution of the order of this House. I do believe that the resignation ought to be made to the Governor. I do believe that a resignation is capable of being stopped in transitu. I do believe that a member, having deposited his resignation in the post office, may afterward take it out if he thinks proper, though I acquit the gentleman from Kentucky of any such design; I do not suspect him of any such purpose. But, if he were to do so, in what position should we find ourselves placed? If we considered that his resignation as a member had relieved him from the execution of our order, and if he should, after being thus relieved from the execution of the order, recall his resignation and reappear here, it would be a beautiful flanking of the House.

Now, sir, supposing the resignation to have been made to the Governor of Kentucky; supposing the Governor to have accepted it; supposing the proof of that acceptance to have come here; supposing a writ of election to have been issued and another member sent here: I hold that, in spite of all these circumstances, LOVELL H. ROUSSEAU would still be amenable to the execution of the order of this House.

What is it that the House has done? It appointed, in the first place, a select committee of five to investigate an assault upon a member of this House—

"And to report the facts, with such resolutions in reference thereto as, in their judgment, may be proper and necessary for the vindication of the privileges of the House and the protection of its members; and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers, and to examine witnesses on oath."

The question is not whether a particular man is or is not a member of this House. The question is whether anybody—member or private citizen, official, high or low, or no official at all—has interfered with the freedom of discussion in attacking a member of this House for words spoken in debate. After a report by the committee and due consideration of the question in this House, we have adopted a resolution—

"That Hon. LOVELL H. ROUSSEAU"—

"With no description as to what or who he is—
"be summoned to the bar of the House, and be there publicly reprimanded by the Speaker for the violation of the rights and privileges of the House, of which he was guilty in the personal assault committed by him upon Hon. J. B. GRINNELL for words spoken in debate."

Now, sir, if the resolution had described General ROUSSEAU as "a member of this House from the State of Kentucky," that language would simply have been, as the lawyers say, descriptio personee. I hold that even if he be now stripped of his official functions, that fact can have no effect whatever upon the execution of the order which this House has made in his case. If this were not so, it would be, as I have already remarked, within the power of a member to evade the execution of the order of the House by a resignation, which he might subsequently recall, and then he might reappear here.

Let me illustrate the principle in another way. Here are three persons—private citizens, persons holding no official character, whom we have directed to be called before this House. Suppose that one of these persons on being brought up here should plead as a bar to your authority that after the order of the House directing him to be brought before it he had been elected a member of Congress. "Your proceeding," says he "was against me as a citizen. Now I am a member of Congress, and I defy you to apply your order to me, a member of Congress, because I was a citizen when you made your order." The argument is as good one way as another.

Take another illustration. Suppose a man to be indicted for embezzlement of public funds as an officer of the Government, and when convicted and called up for judgment, produces evidence he has resigned his commission as an officer of the Government, will you say he is not to be punished? Not at all. He has been convicted as an officer of the Government; it is true; he has been convicted on the evidence provided for in the statute, and he can no more rid himself in this case than in that of the consequences after the rendering of the verdict against him. He cannot escape the execution of the judgment after it has been passed in the case of an officer who has thus been convicted any more than in the case of a member of this House. Well, sir, what will this House do? Suppose you decide your proceeding has been against LOVELL H. ROUSSEAU, member from Kentucky, although it is not recited in your resolution, does anybody doubt some one has committed a breach of the privileges of the House by an attack upon one of its members for words spoken in debate? It stands upon your record. Is the House bound, in the assertion of its dignity, to turn round and order the rearrest of LOVELL H. ROUSSEAU, citizen of Kentucky? If so, the House puts itself in the position of enabling a person convicted to get rid of the execution of the judgment of the House, and strips itself of all power to proceed.

Gentlemen talk as if we ought to be satisfied because enough mortification has been brought home to the gentleman from Kentucky, enough of punishment in being made to go from this House—that we ought to consider our feelings as sufficiently satisfied. Sir, I have no feeling in this matter. I say it is purely a question of right, of law, of the prerogatives of this House, whether we will permit him to go to the country or not; that its orders may be affected by the action of any one against whom an order has been made, and which remains to be executed. The Speaker cites a case in point. Mr. Matteson, of New York, finding the decision likely to be against him—actually against him—resigned his office, yet the House said it was not to be thus foiled, and proceeded to expel him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will allow the Chair to make a correction. In that case the House did not expel the member, but censured him.

Mr. SCHENCK. I thought they expelled him. No matter; they censured him. The House considered no action of the defendant, as he may be termed, affected the question of sustaining its dignity, which it is bound to sustain against officials, against citizens, against all persons, by whatever description they may be known, who shall assault members of the House and thus interfere with its privileges. I should like to call the previous question, but I do not know that I should after presenting this view of the question.

I repeat, whether LOVELL H. ROUSSEAU is or is not a member of this House to me is not a particle of matter if he be the person in reference to whom this House has made this order, the execution of which is now called for. And it becomes the duty of the House to execute its order, either to postpone it or to make some disposition of it regardless of the question what may be the official character or the non-official character of the man against whom the order has been made.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. Is not the gentleman mistaken in stating that this proceeding was against LOVELL H. ROUSSEAU?

Mr. SCHENCK. No, sir; the resolution passed was in these words:

"Resolved, That Hon. LOVELL H. ROUSSEAU be summoned to the bar of the House and be there publicly reprimanded," &c.

He is not described there at all as a member of the House.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I beg the gentleman's pardon; the preceding resolution, the one originally reported by the committee, did specify his official character.

Mr. SCHENCK. Suppose an officer of the Government be indicted for and convicted of embezzlement, and before judgment is rendered in his case, can he then resign? Can he by resigning escape the judgment of the court?

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow the whole proceedings in this case to be heard? They will show that the whole proceeding against my colleague was in his character as a Representative.

Mr. SCHENCK. I certainly have no objection to anything being read.

Mr. MOULTON. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to have it read as a part of his speech.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I want merely to say a few words to the House as to the reasons which induced me to make this motion. I agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] that the mere fact of General ROUSSEAU's resigning does not give him immunity from the punishment which the House has determined to inflict. It is to be inflicted upon him as the member from the fifth district of Kentucky, it is true, but the power still is vested in the House to punish him as a citizen for the acts which he committed. This is my position, and the motion which I propose to make is that further proceedings be dispensed with in this case. It is a mere question now of propriety; a question whether sufficient has not already been inflicted upon General ROUSSEAU for the act which he committed.

Mr. DAWES. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania what has transpired since that judgment was rendered by the House that should lead the House to modify its judgment.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I do not clearly comprehend the question of the gentleman.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman proposes by his amendment that the House dispense with the execution of its own judgment. I inquire of him, what has since transpired that would lead the House to dispense with that judgment?

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I merely gave notice that I intended to offer such a proposition when in order. When offered, if I have the opportunity, I will explain the reason for it to the gentleman.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I yield for a moment or two to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHELLABARGER.]

Mr. ROGERS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot make that motion now. The floor is held by the gentleman from Kentucky, and he yields it to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. Mr. Speaker, since I sought the floor, by requesting the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield to me, I do not know but that my entire motive for seeking the floor has been taken away by the fact that the remarks just made by my colleague [Mr. SCHENCK] present in effect precisely the same legal propositions I intended to suggest to the House; and, besides, the proposition I designed to maintain seems now to be conceded on both sides of the House. What I designed to maintain was that the right and the duty of this House to execute its order of reprimand did not, in any degree, depend upon the question which has been so long debated to-day, whether the gentleman from Kentucky is now any longer a member of this body. Mr. Speaker, that question really has nothing to do with the question of the power or the right of this House to execute its order of reprimand. A very little reflection upon the source and nature of this power and jurisdiction of the House will show this clearly. Whence does this House derive its power to punish this or any other breach of its privileges? "It is remarkable," says Justice Story, "that no power is conferred to punish for any contempts committed against either House." (1 Story on Constitution, section 845.) Neither, sir, is there any act of Congress giving us power to inflict any punishment in this case. The jurisdiction in this case and in all others like it, is wholly a common-law jurisdiction. The same learned author (Story) says:

"By the common law the power to punish contempts of this nature belongs incidentally to the courts of justice and to each House of Parliament.

No man ever doubted or denied its existence as to our colonial Assemblies in general, whatever may have been thought as to particular exercises of it. Nor is the power to be viewed in an unfavorable light. It is a privilege not of the members of either House, but, like all other privileges of Congress, mainly intended as a privilege of the people and for their benefit."

He adds:

"A power in the supreme courts of justice to suppress such contempt, &c., results from the first principles of judicial establishments, and must be an inseparable attendant upon every superior tribunal."

And the same reasoning has been applied with equal force by another learned commentator to legislative bodies. "It would," he says, "be inconsistent with the nature of such a body to deny it the power of protecting itself from injury or insult. If its deliberations are not perfectly free its constituents are eventually injured. The legislative body is the proper and exclusive forum to decide when the contempt existed and when there was a breach of its privileges; and that the power to punish followed as a necessary incident of the power to take cognizance of the offense."

I have alluded thus fully to the nature and source of this jurisdiction and power of Congress to punish for breaches of its privileges as a preparatory statement to the proposition I now state, to wit, that the right of this House to inflict upon any delinquent any punishment whatever does not at all depend upon nor grow out of his being a member or an officer of this House; nor out of his being therefore or thereby made amenable to its jurisdiction; but the jurisdiction in every case of punishment, whether by reprimand or otherwise, comes from this incidental power of the House to punish every man, whether member, officer, or citizen, who has violated its privileges. When the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROUSSEAU] called the member from Iowa [Mr. GRINNELL] to account for words spoken in debate, this act made him amenable to the jurisdiction and punishment of this House; and it was not at all the fact that he was a member of Congress that so subjected him to our jurisdiction and reprimand. Being a member, doubtless, is a circumstance to be considered in affixing the punishment; but it has nothing whatever to do with our right originally to pronounce the order of censure which the House has pronounced, nor with our right now to execute it.

That order and its execution are both alike directed against a man, a delinquent, one who has called a member to account for words spoken in debate, and is not directed against anybody because he is a member of Congress. What gives the jurisdiction is that the delinquent has come near enough to this body to violate its privileges. He who does that, wherever he may be and whatever may be the act of violation, is near enough to this House to be subject to its arrest and punishment, and this, too, whether he be officer, member, or citizen; and the punishment which he is subject to, whether member or citizen, is that one which the House may affix in its discretion. Mr. Speaker, the reprimand is not a punishment confined either by its nature or by the practice of this House to those who are members. Anybody who is a delinquent, subject to the punishment of the House, may be reprimanded. So you have it laid down in the Manual of the Rules of this House, page 155. This House has again and again reprimanded men who were not members. This was done in the Fifteenth Congress in the case of one not a member of Congress.

Mr. DAWES. It was also done in the case of Sam. Houston when he was not a member of the House.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. My friend from Massachusetts says it was done in the case of Houston. I had it in my mind that Houston was a member when he was reprimanded, but I assume that the gentleman is right. There is, therefore, not a shadow of a doubt of the power of this House to reprimand any one, whether member or not, who has violated its privileges. But it is said the proceedings have been hitherto against him as a member, and that now that he is not by reason of his resignation a member (as is alleged) it is insisted that the power to execute the order is gone. That is, one whom you may punish as a delinquent for violating the rights of this House, without regard to the question whether he is a member or not, and whom you have convicted of the offense which gives the jurisdiction to this body, may escape punishment because you described him as a member (a thing you need not to have done at all, and which is mere descriptio personæ) by throwing off the office by which you have described him. It would be just as reasonable to say that he could escape punishment by removing from Kentucky to Ohio so as to render the description of him in the resolution as from Kentucky a false one after he had removed from Kentucky.

I have said what I have, Mr. Speaker, not for the purpose of securing any punishment of the gentleman from Kentucky. I have never cast a vote so reluctantly since I have been in Congress as that to punish this gallant soldier. I have only spoken in order to assist in coming to what I deem a right conclusion upon an important question of law as to the privileges of this House.

Mr. SCHENCK. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] moved to postpone the execution of the order for fifteen minutes. That motion was made more than fifteen minutes ago.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. The fifteen minutes date from the moment that the House orders the execution of the order to be postponed.

The SPEAKER. That is the parliamentary rule. The Chair will state, however, to members of the House that under the rule the question of postponement admits of but a very limited range of debate.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I have tried to strictly follow the directions of the Speaker.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall ask that the rule of the House just referred to by the Speaker shall be enforced.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DELANO.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read from the Journal of the House the resolution which was adopted by the House, and which was called for a few moments since.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Resolved, That Hon. LOVELL H. ROUSSEAU, a member of this House from the State of Kentucky, be summoned to the bar of this House, and be there publicly reprimanded by the Speaker for the violation of its rights and privileges of which he was guilty in the personal assault committed by him upon the person of Hon. J. B. GRINNELL, a member of this House from the State of Iowa, for words spoken in debate."

Mr. SCHENCK. Allow me a moment for an explanation. I perceive that I was mistaken in regard to the description of the person contained in the resolution which was at last adopted by the House. I was not present when the resolution was adopted, but supposed it was the resolution reported by the minority of the committee. I wish to say, however, that it makes no difference in the point I made.

Mr. DELANO. I now ask that the Clerk read a resolution which I have sent to his desk.

Mr. ALLISON. Is that in order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] yielded the floor to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DELANO,] who can have the resolution read as a part of his argument.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas Hon. LOVELL H. ROUSSEAU has forwarded to the Governor of Kentucky his resignation as a Representative for the fifth district of the State of Kentucky, a copy of which has been read: Therefore, Be it resolved, That the said LOVELL H. ROUSSEAU be discharged from the custody of this House, and all further proceedings in the case be suspended.

Mr. DELANO. Whether the House has now or not legally the right to inflict the punishment that has been ordered upon the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROUSSEAU] I do not propose to consider. I know that according to the parliamentary precedents that have been referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BANKS,] a member cannot resign while the legislative body of which he is a member is in session without the consent of the body. But I am not quite clear that those precedents are applicable to us.

I remember that a few years ago, on a certain occasion which must be fresh in the recollection of my honorable colleague from the Dayton district, [Mr. SCHENCK,] a number of the members of the Ohio Legislature resigned and broke up the quorum for the purpose of preventing a very unjust system of districting the State for representation in Congress. I know that the result of that was to cause the insertion of a provision in the present constitution of Ohio requiring all members of the Legislature, when the Legislature is in session, to resign to the presiding officers of their respective bodies, and requiring that such resignations shall be accepted before taking effect.

Now, sir, I will not undertake to say positively what is the law of Congress on this subject; but I think that it is a question of great doubt whether a member of Congress may not resign to the Governor of his State and cease to be a member of this body without any action of the body upon the question. My impression is that a member has this right. If so, sir, this resolution, in the form in which we now have it, would, in my opinion, be improper to be passed, because it avers that LOVELL H. ROUSSEAU is a member of this House, and we are bound to punish him as such. If he has resigned the resolution would be false in its terms.

But, sir, passing by this question, I beg to call the attention of the House to a question of policy and propriety. The House has now before it the noteworthy fact that LOVELL H. ROUSSEAU has resigned and ceases to be a member of this body. He stands before the House condemned for a breach of its privileges. I am no apologist for anybody who violates the privileges of this House. But there exist in many cases certain extenuating circumstances which no just man can fail to consider. Now, sir, I do not desire to reflect upon the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. GRINNELL,] but I do say that the circumstances which caused the assault made by the gentleman from Kentucky—

Mr. PRICE. I rise to a question of order. My point is that the question now under discussion before the House is the question of postponement, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DELANO] is not arguing that at all, but is seeking to reflect upon my colleague [Mr. GRINNELL] who is not present.

Mr. DELANO. Very far from it, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must remark that under his ruling this morning, which is now to be regarded as the ruling of the House, since it has not been appealed from, no gentleman has the right to reopen the question which was decided by a vote of the House.

Mr. DELANO. I do not propose, sir, to reopen it. I am seeking now to show that the execution of this order ought to be postponed with a view to the passage of the resolution which at my request has been read, and with the view of declaring to the world our belief that under the circumstances we have gone far enough in punishing this man; that a soldier, an officer, a gentleman, who has done so much for his country, having received the condemnation of this House for an assault made upon a member, improperly, I admit, but under circumstances of provocation known to the House, ought not to receive any further punishment.

Sir, we are all of us but men, and in dealing with men we are bound to look at the motives which actuate men; and I submit whether, when we take into consideration the history of this man as an officer of our Army, the circumstances in extenuation of his offense, and the manner in which it was done; whether in view of all this the punishment which has already been inflicted is not amply sufficient to satisfy the House, the country, and the world; whether this body will not stand better before the nation by declaring: "We will proceed no further in this matter." Understand me, sir; I do not justify the assault; very far from it. But all punishment should be meted out according to the circumstances under which the offense was committed. In accordance with this principle, what would otherwise be murder, is, by extenuating circumstances, reduced in the law to the grade of manslaughter. I ask the House whether, in consideration of all the circumstances—I will not review them; they are fresh in the recollection of the House—whether we have not done enough toward this man already, and whether, now that he has resigned, we shall not stand badly before the world if we show a disposition to go further and inflict what may by some be regarded as needless penalties. I appeal to the magnanimity, I appeal to the honor, I appeal to the glory of the American people whether it be necessary to pursue this matter further.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question recurred on Mr. SCHENCK's amendment to strike out "fifteen" and insert "ten," and being taken it was disagreed to.

Mr. ALLISON demanded the yeas and nays on the motion to postpone the execution of the order of the House for fifteen minutes.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I give notice if the execution of the order be postponed I shall yield the floor to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DELANO] to submit his proposition.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 48, nays 62, not voting 57; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Anderson, Boyer, Bromwell, Dawson, Delano, Eckley, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Hogan, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Johnson, Kerr, Kuykendall, Latham, Le Blond, Marshall, Marston, McRuer, Miller, Newell, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Raymond, Ritter, Rogers, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Spaulding, Strouse, Taber, Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, Robert T. Van Horn, and Wright—43.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Baker, Baxter, Benjamin, Bidwell, Broomall, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Davis, Deffoes, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferry, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, Ketcham, Koontz, Lathin, William Lawrence, Loan, Lynch, McClurg, Mercur, Moorhead, Morrill, Moulton, Myers, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Plants, Price, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Stevens, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Welker, Wentworth, Williams, James F. Wilson, and Windom—62.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Beaman, Bergen, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Buckland, Bundy, Chanler, Cook, Cullom, Culver, Darling, DeLoane, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Driggs, Dumont, Eggleston, Farguhar, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Hart, Hayes, Henderson, Hill, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, John B. Hubbard, Hulburd, Johnson, Kerr, Kuykendall, Latham, Le Blond, Marshall, Marston, McRuer, Miller, Newell, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Raymond, Ritter, Rogers, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Spaulding, Strouse, Taber, Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, Robert T. Van Horn, and Wright—57.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa having demanded the execution of the order of the House, the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. ROUSSEAU, will present himself at the bar of the House.

Mr. ROUSSEAU appeared at the bar of the House.

The SPEAKER. General ROUSSEAU: The House of Representatives have declared you guilty of a violation of its rights and privileges in a premeditated personal assault upon a member for words spoken in debate. This condemnation they have placed on their Journal and have ordered that you shall be publicly reprimanded by the Speaker at the bar of the House. No words of mine can add to the force of this order, in obedience to which I now pronounce upon you its reprimand.

Mr. ROUSSEAU then retired.

39TH CONG. 1ST SESS.—No. 252.

RECESS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. CONKLING. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives on the day of —, at twelve o'clock meridian, adjourn their respective Houses until Tuesday, the 2d day of October, 1866, and that on that day, unless it be then otherwise ordered by the two Houses, they shall further adjourn their respective Houses until Saturday the 1st day of December, 1866.

Is the resolution debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask to make an explanation.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object.

Mr. ANCONA. I move the resolution be laid upon the table.

Mr. FINCK. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 43, nays 64, not voting 65; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Ancona, Baxter, Boyer, Davis, Daves, Dawson, Eldridge, Finck, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Hogan, Chester D. Hubbard, Johnson, Kerr, Latham, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Marston, Morrill, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, Pike, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Raymond, Ritter, Rogers, Rollins, Ross, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Strouse, Taber, Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, Woodbridge, and Wright—43.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Deffoes, Donnelly, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferry, Hart, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, Koontz, William Lawrence, Loan, Lynch, McClurg, Mercur, Miller, Moorhead, Morris, Moulton, Myers, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Plants, Price, John H. Rice, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Spaulding, Stevens, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Welker, Wentworth, Williams, James F. Wilson, and Windom—64.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Barker, Beaman, Bergen, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Buckland, Bundy, Chanler, Cook, Cullom, Culver, Darling, DeLoane, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Driggs, Dumont, Eggleston, Farguhar, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Hart, Hayes, Henderson, Hill, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Humphrey, Jenckes, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Lathin, Longyear, Marshall, Marvin, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, Newell, Patterson, Phelps, Pomeroy, Alexander H. Rice, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stilwell, Thayer, John L. Thomas, Upson, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Wentworth, Stephen F. Wilson, and Winfield—65.

So the House refused to lay the resolution on the table.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered on agreeing to the resolution.

Messrs. ELDRIDGE and ANCONA demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. ROSS. I would inquire—

Mr. CONKLING. I object.

Mr. ROSS. To an inquiry?

Mr. CONKLING. I object to anything from that quarter.

Mr. ROSS. I suppose I have a right to inquire in relation to the effect of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question to the Chair.

Mr. ROSS. I want to know if it gives mileage to members. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not consider that a legitimate inquiry.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DAVIS. I raise the question of order, whether we have power now to direct that when the House meets on the day designated it shall adjourn to a future day.

The SPEAKER. That depends entirely upon whether a majority of the House shall vote for the resolution; if they do they will have ordered it, and the Chair will have power to execute the order.

The question being taken on agreeing to the resolution, it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 59, nays 52, not voting 70; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Benjamin, Bidwell, Boutwell, Broomall, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Deffoes, Donnelly, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Jones, Kasson, Koontz, William Lawrence, Loan, Lynch, McClurg, Mercur, Miller, Morris, Moulton, O'Neill, Orth, Perham, Plants, Price, John H. Rice, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Spaulding, Stevens, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Welker, Wentworth, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Windom—59.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Banks, Baxter, Boyer, Bromwell, Buckland, Davis, Daves, Dawson, Eldridge, Ferry, Finck, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Hogan, Chester D. Hubbard, John B. Hubbard, Hulburd, Johnson, Kerr, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Lathin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Marston, Moorhead, Morrill, Myers, Newell, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, Paine, Pike, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, Rollins, Ross, Shanklin, Strouse, Taber, Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, Whaley, Woodbridge, and Wright—52.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Barker, Beaman, Bergen, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Cullom, Culver, Darling, DeLoane, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Driggs, Dumont, Eggleston, Farguhar, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Hart, Hayes, Henderson, Hill, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, Longyear, Marshall, Marvin, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, Patterson, Phelps, Pomeroy, Ritter, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stilwell, Thayer, John L. Thomas, Upson, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, and Winfield—70.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, their Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the following bills of the House:

An act (H. R. No. 615) legalizing marriages, and for other purposes, in the District of Columbia;

An act (H. R. No. 124) authorizing the construction of a jail in and for the District of Columbia;

An act (H. R. No. 601) to grade East Capitol street and establish Lincoln square; and

An act (H. R. No. 559) to authorize the extension, construction, and use by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company of a railroad from between Knoxville and the Monocacy Junction into and within the District of Columbia.

The message further informed the House that the Senate had passed the following bills, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (H. R. No. 230) to amend an act to amend the charter of the Alexandria and Washington railroad, passed March 3, 1863;

An act (H. R. No. 564) to amend the thirty-fourth section of the declaration of rights of the State of Maryland, so far as it applies to the District of Columbia;

An act (H. R. No. 365) granting the right of way to ditch and canal owners over the public lands in the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada;

An act (H. R. No. 379) to establish in the District of Columbia a Reform School for boys;

An act (H. R. No. 779) to incorporate the National Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Home;

An act (H. R. No. 587) to incorporate the Soldiers' and Sailors' Union, of Washington, District of Columbia; and

An act (H. R. No. 775) to incorporate certain post roads.

The message further informed the House that the Senate had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 134) extending time to the Alabama and Florida Railroad Company for the payment of duties on railroad iron;

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 123) in relation to the settlement of accounts of William P. Wingate, collector at the port of Bangor, Maine;

An act (S. No. 289) to provide for probate and for the recording of wills of real estate situated in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

An act (S. No. 384) to incorporate the Washington Land and Building Company of the District of Columbia;

An act (S. No. 214) to incorporate the General Hospital of the District of Columbia;

An act (S. No. 380) to incorporate the Washington County Horse Railroad Company, in the District of Columbia;

An act (S. No. 393) to incorporate the Metropolitan Club of the District of Columbia; and

An act (S. No. 424) to incorporate the Washington Temperance Society, of the city of Washington, District of Columbia.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. ROGERS. I rise to a question of privilege with regard to the rights of a member of this House upon a committee. There has a misunderstanding grown up between myself as one of the members of the Judiciary Committee and at least one other member of that committee with regard to my rights in that committee in the examination of the testimony taken by order of the House in relation to the connection of Jefferson Davis and others with the assassination of President Lincoln. I have endeavored for ten days at least faithfully at different times to have an opportunity to investigate that evidence in order that I might know as a member of the committee how to arrive at a deliberate and just judgment. The first information I had was from seeing in the New York Herald a statement that the matter had been referred to one honorable member of the committee to make a report. I at once felt it my duty, as it was an important matter and as considerable testimony had been taken in my absence, to see at least that part of the testimony which had not been taken in my presence, in order that I might conclude whether I would join in the majority report of the committee or whether I would ask the privilege of presenting my views, together with the views perhaps of some other members of the committee as a minority.

When I first made application to see the testimony the gentleman who was appointed to make the report would not even give his consent to my going to his room for that purpose. So at last I told him unless his consent was given I would bring the matter before the House. He then said he would not object to my coming to his room and seeing the testimony. And, by the way, there is a great mass of evidence, hundreds of folios, and in order to arrive at a correct judgment it is important and necessary that members of the committee should have full opportunity to investigate it. Yesterday I went to the committee-room and found the papers there in the possession of a reporter who had been employed by the gentleman who is to make the majority report.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I suppose the gentleman wishes to state the fact.

Mr. ROGERS. I do, sir; and I do not intend to state anything else. If I misstate anything—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts, if he is alluded to, that he had better reserve any remarks until the gentleman from New Jersey has concluded.

Mr. ROGERS. I have no desire to throw any reflection upon the committee at all, or in any way disparage their action, but simply to ascertain my rights as a member of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point.

Mr. ROGERS. I am coming to the point. Yesterday, as I stated, I went to the committee-room and there found the papers in the possession of the reporter, who informed me that he had been spoken to or employed by the gentleman who was to make the majority report to make some notes from the evidence for him. I asked him to allow me to sit down and look at the testimony. He said his orders were peremptorily that I nor anybody else should see the evidence. I then went to the clerk of the committee and told him I would like to look at the evidence. He refused to allow me to look at it. I then said I would go to the gentleman who was to make the majority report. I went to him. He sat down and gave me an order to look at the papers, but not to take them out. In the mean time, for the purpose of obtaining some minutes from which I could, if I saw fit, present to the House a minority report, I employed a stenographer to come and take down some points of the evidence that I wanted to refer to, as the honorable gentleman had also a stenographer. While I was taking them down the clerk of the committee left the room and returned with the gentleman who immediately snatched up the papers from me and refused to allow me to read or look at them, or to allow the stenographer to take down a single word. He took the papers and put them up in the tin box where they had been previously locked up.

The ground the gentleman took was that he did not know who this stenographer was, and he was not willing to allow him to look at the papers. That may have been very proper. I am not prepared to say whether it was or not. At any rate the stenographer went away. I proposed before he went away that he should be sworn that nothing should be divulged, but all should be kept secret; but the gentleman would listen to no proposals. I confess I thought he was a little excited, and I left the room. I hope, however, there is no feeling on his part, as there certainly is none on mine.

Now, I presume the House will adjourn or take a recess soon. There is an immense mass of testimony, and I feel it my duty, where the lives of individuals are concerned, Jefferson Davis and others, that the truth should be known to the public in regard to that whole testimony. There are facts in the case that may not appear in the majority report, and I may deem it my duty when I investigate the whole evidence to present my views. I want to arrive at a correct judgment so as to conscientiously discharge my duty. I am willing to go to the expense of paying a stenographer to take such parts of the testimony and evidence as I want. I want to have the stenographer sworn by any kind of oath that may be prescribed by the committee or the House. My object is, not to divulge anything. I have never been charged with divulging anything except some cross-examinations which were decided by the committee to be irregular, and which I supposed to be of no sort of importance. I made the proper explanation, and I believe the committee were satisfied with it.

I presume the Speaker will say I have a right to investigate the testimony. How can I? I have not time, if I wait till the majority report is made at the close of the session, to arrive at a correct judgment on that great mass of testimony. I am willing to furnish a stenographer at my own expense, who shall be sworn and under the control of the House, or the House may furnish a stenographer to take down such parts of the testimony as I may want.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. Speaker, the House is aware that the Judiciary Committee has been for a long time engaged in the investigation of facts concerning the assassination of the late President of the United States. It must be apparent that in the prosecution of that investigation the secrets of the War Department especially have been laid open to the committee. Now it has happened that on two occasions, without so far as I know any fault upon the part of any member of the committee, the substance of papers, copies of which have come into the hands of the committee, have found their way to the public. It must be apparent that it is of prime importance that the knowledge of the contents of those papers should not be disclosed to the public until they have been thoroughly examined by the committee. They are voluminous; they relate to important interests of the Government, and the committee felt bound to exercise all the care that was practicable.

Some four or five weeks since the committee, against my own wishes, charged me with the duty of preparing a report upon this case. I may say that the committee has never yet reached a conclusion as to what should be advised, if, indeed, anything should be advised, for the action of this House. The work in which, during that period, I have been engaged has been the examination of these papers for the purpose of ascertaining, as far as I might be able, the value, if any, which they possessed with reference to the elucidation of the matter referred to. To that duty I have devoted myself with such assiduity as I possess, and with such leisure as I could command. The examination into the archives of the War Department, which contain the documents and papers found at Richmond and elsewhere in the eleven rebellious States, has, from day to day, developed new testimony concerning the assassination of the President and matters which are supposed to have some relation thereto. I felt, after these papers were put in my charge, that I became in a certain degree responsible for them. They were very voluminous, and I had arranged them with reference to an examination for the purpose of preparing a report. It was not, in the first place, convenient, even if there had been no other consideration involved, that those papers should be submitted to the examination of anybody else.

I may say here that I should have felt myself bound to treat any other member of the committee precisely as I treated the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROGERS.] I did not understand that we were engaged in the preparation of a majority report. But I understood that I was charged with the examination of those papers, which, as the House can well understand, are of a peculiar character. Many of them were published in some of the northern papers, and in some of the southern papers. There are letters written over assumed names, involving an examination of the handwriting for the purpose of ascertaining the authors of them; others are couched in ambiguous and uncertain language, the nature and purport of which would not be fully understood from a mere cursory reading. Others are written in cipher, which were, of course, examined and translated, so far as they could be translated at all, at the War Department. Under these circumstances, I think the House will see that when I was charged with this work, for which I was responsible to the committee and to the country, I had the right for the time being, without infringing the rights of this House, or of any member, to keep the control of these papers. Hence I have, during all this period of time, whenever approached by the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROGERS,] declined to put these papers in his possession.

Mr. ROGERS. Did I not simply ask to have the privilege of examining this evidence, and informing myself, as I ought to be informed, before passing judgment on this case?

Mr. BOUTWELL. That is very true. But as I have already said, it seemed to me that when the number and character of these papers were considered, when the nature of the work confided to me was taken into consideration, it was not the proper thing for the gentleman from New Jersey to ask that he, simultaneously with me, should be permitted to examine and arrange and extract from those papers. And therefore I always declined to allow him to do so. Yesterday the gentleman from New Jersey came to me and renewed the request. It so happened that I had yesterday a confidential clerk from the War Department, who has heretofore had the control of these papers, who understands them better than anybody else, and who was examining them with me.

Mr. ROGERS. I desire, with the gentleman's permission, to ask him one question: whether the clerk to whom the gentleman refers had control of the evidence taken before the committee, or only of papers which had come from the War Office. The latter constitute only a part, and a minor part, of the voluminous evidence in the case.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. Speaker, that is not strictly true. The testimony taken before the committee was more or less connected with the documentary evidence which was received by the committee from the War Department. This gentleman, understanding perfectly well—better, indeed, than anybody else—the nature, the value, and the relations of the evidence in the War Department, was engaged in examining these papers, in connection with the testimony which had been taken before the committee, for the purpose of aiding me in solving difficulties, that I might present a clear report. At the time the gentleman from New Jersey came in I had given directions to this gentleman to allow no person to examine or take possession of these papers. In this, I think, I did no more than I ought to have done. Still, under the circumstances, I gave to the gentleman from New Jersey a written order—if you choose so to call it—to the gentleman who had charge of these papers, saying that the gentleman from New Jersey might examine the papers in the room of the Judiciary Committee, but that he was not to take any of them away.

Very soon after that the clerk of the Judiciary Committee came to me at my seat and informed me that the gentleman from New Jersey had with him a phonographic reporter, a person who was unknown to the clerk of the committee, but who, so far as he could judge, was engaged in taking in phonographic characters copies of some of the papers relating to the case under consideration. I went immediately to the committee-room, and found there a man whom I did not know, who said that he had no connection whatever with this House; yet he was engaged then in copying or taking extracts from the papers connected with this case. I at once interposed. I told him, I told the gentleman from New Jersey, that while the papers were in my charge nothing of the kind should be done; and I took up the papers, I dare say with some feeling, but not with any animosity toward the gentleman from New Jersey. I thought that the interests of the Government were unnecessarily and improperly exposed: and I took possession of the papers, placing them in a trunk where they had been kept and closing the trunk. I have since made some inquiries concerning the person who was yesterday in the employment of the gentleman from New Jersey, and I ask the gentleman from New Jersey whether that person is not an Italian or a Frenchman named Cazauran.

Mr. ROGERS. His name is Cazauran, and he is a stenographer. That is all I know.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I ask whether it is not known to the gentleman from New Jersey that Cazauran was for a long time in the rebel service; that he edited a rebel newspaper at Memphis, Tennessee—

Mr. ROGERS. This is the first time I ever heard of it.

Mr. BOUTWELL. That he was sent out of Tennessee by the United States authorities—

Mr. ROGERS. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. BOUTWELL. That he was afterward found within the United States lines at Norfolk, Virginia; that he was taken by the military authorities of this Government and sentenced to something like sixty days at hard labor in that vicinity.

Mr. ROGERS. I never heard any such thing before. I never heard a word against him.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I do not know anything of the man. If my information should prove to be false, I would willingly retract, in the presence of this House and the country, all that I have said in reference to the phonographic reporter whom I found yesterday in the room of the Judiciary Committee; but such is the information which on inquiry I have received from sources in which I place confidence.

Mr. ROGERS. I will state to the gentleman my acquaintance with the reporter I employed. I do not know whether he is a Democrat, a Republican, a Know-Nothing, or anything else. The first I knew of him he was connected with the Boston Post. I will add that I proposed to have him swear to an oath of secrecy.

Several MEMBERS. Swear a rebel!

Mr. ROGERS. Oh, I guess he was no rebel; I guess that is not so.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I make this statement from information I have received, and from no knowledge of my own. If it turns out to be erroneous I shall feel it to be my duty, as well as my pleasure, to retract it before the House. I only introduce it as a fact.

Mr. ROGERS. I have only one question to propose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will rule on the question, as time is very precious at this late period of the session. He thinks he has now a correct conception of the matter. Committees, in order to facilitate their business, often appoint sub-committees to examine into bills or other subject-matters which may be referred to them, and to make report to the committee in full session before they report to the House. When they do, the papers pertinent to the subject are put in the hands of the sub-committee, and no member has a right to demand to see those papers until the sub-committee reports to the committee. When the sub-committee reports to the committee the gentleman, in common with the other members, has a right to demand to see the papers for examination.

Mr. ROGERS. I have a motion to make. I ask the House to grant me a stenographer, to be paid by myself or by the House, so that I may be enabled to make a minority report if necessary. I think it is only just to me that it should be done.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest to the gentleman that he move, in addition, that a stenographer be allowed to each member to help him prepare his speeches. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROGERS. I am willing to pay for the stenographer.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. I object.

JAMES C. COOK.

Mr. MYERS. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the consideration of the bill reported on Friday last from the Committee on Patents, (H. R. No. 760,) for the relief of James C. Cook, upon which the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HUBBARD] has the floor.

PRIVILEGED QUESTION—AGAIN.

Mr. ROGERS. I wish to say that I was one of the sub-committee of three appointed to collect this evidence.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has made his decision, and, if the gentleman wants to, he can take an appeal.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I wish to state to the House that the gentleman from New Jersey is not a member of the sub-committee to which these papers have been referred.

Mr. FINCK. I rise to a point of order. Do I understand the Speaker to rule that a member of the committee, before they do important business, has no right to examine the papers connected therewith?

The SPEAKER. The Chair repeats exactly what he has stated. Where a committee appoint a sub-committee to investigate a certain matter the papers referred to the sub-committee are within their power, and no member of the committee has the right, as a matter of right, to take them from the sub-committee for examination.

Mr. ROGERS. I do not want to take them—I only want to see them.

Mr. FINCK. I do not think the decision goes far enough.

The SPEAKER. The point has been decided, but the gentleman can take an appeal.

Mr. FINCK. I rise to a point of order. The Speaker has not decided the precise point presented.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided the precise point presented.

Mr. FINCK. I think not.

Mr. ROGERS. I have a right to ask for the papers.

The SPEAKER. The House has passed away from the case.

Mr. FINCK. I advise my friend to resign from the committee if he can have no rights there.

Mr. ROGERS. I only want the country to know how the matter stands.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has allowed the gentleman to present his case at great length.

Mr. ROGERS. I do not find fault with the Speaker.

JAMES C. COOK—AGAIN.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. If the House will give me their attention for about five minutes by my watch, which is a fast one, [laughter,] I think I can satisfy them of the justice of the present claim.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will first read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

That James C. Cook have leave to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for an extension of his letters-patent, which were issued for the term of fourteen years, from the 27th day of July, 1852, for an improvement in machines for forming button backs and connecting the eyes thereto, in the same manner as if he had filed his petition for an extension at least ninety days prior to the expiration of said patent, and that the Commissioner of Patents be authorized to consider and determine said application in the same manner as if it had been filed ninety days before the expiration of the patent.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. I can yield now to neither of my friends, for I desire, in the first place, to finish the report which I had commenced when this report was up some two weeks ago. I do not design to take up much time. The petitioner has really had under his patent the benefit of about three years.

Mr. STEVENS. When does his patent expire?

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. This year. He lost a good deal in consequence of the difficulty of introducing this patent, and also from an error in the original specification. It is a patent for button backs and connecting them with the eyes. I know nothing myself about the manufacture of buttons, but I know this: that when this patent was issued the law was that the patentee might apply for an extension to the Commissioner at any time before the expiration of his patent. The patentee supposed, therefore, that it was safe for him at any time within fifty days of the expiration of his patent, to apply for a renewal of his privilege. He did apply to the Commissioner of Patents some eighty-three days before the expiration of his patent, and then he learned, for the first time, that the law had been changed, and that, by the act of 1851, ninety days were required.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that under the law of 1848, under which this patent was issued, the patentee had a right to apply to the Commissioner for an extension of his patent at any time not less than sixty days before the expiration of his patent. In the year 1861 the law was changed, making it necessary for him to apply ninety days before the expiration of his patent. He did not know of that; he is a laboring man living out in the country; he knew the law of 1848, under which he obtained his patent; he did not know that that law had ever been changed; and in consequence of that want of knowledge he applied to the Commissioner for an extension of his patent at a time outside of that prescribed by law. It was by mere accident and mistake that he failed to apply in time; he supposed that he had a right to apply for it at a later date than he had under the law, and now he calls upon the great American Congress to exercise its remedial power in permitting him to make application to the Commissioner of Patents to permit him to make this extension. [Cries of "All right—we'll pass it."] Then, sir, I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut, demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the House proceed to the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. STEVENS. I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that he allow us to have an evening session.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the gentleman will not object, for if we are to adjourn at the time which has been fixed on by the House, it is indispensably necessary that we have evening sessions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the resolution of the House providing for evening sessions makes no provision for evening sessions on Saturday. It would require, therefore, unanimous consent.

Mr. FINCK. I object.

The motion of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, was then agreed to.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury in reply to a resolution of the House of the 9th instant, transmitting a statement of receipts and expenditures from July 1, 1865, to March 1, 1866, and an estimated statement from March 1, 1866, to June 30, 1866; which was laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGING OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

The House then proceeded in execution of its order to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table, the first business being bill of the Senate No. 236, to authorize the construction of certain bridges, and to establish them as post roads, returned from the Senate with amendments to the amendments of the House.

Mr. ALLEY. I believe there is no objection to the amendments proposed by the Senate. I believe both the friends and opponents of this measure concur in them. I therefore move the previous question on the amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments of the Senate to the amendments of the House were agreed to.

Mr. MOULTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate to the amendments of the House were agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TRANSPORTATION OF DISCHARGED SOLDIERS.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce and put upon its passage a bill which I am sure no gentleman here will object to. It is a bill to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish transportation to discharged soldiers to whom artificial limbs are furnished by the Government. Let me state that the Secretary has no power under the law as it now exists to furnish this transportation to discharged soldiers. The bill I offer embraces not more than five or six lines, giving him this power. It certainly will occupy no time, and I ask the unanimous consent of the House for its consideration now.

No objection being made, the bill was received and read a first and second time. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to furnish to discharged soldiers of the United States, disabled in the service, transportation to and from their homes and the places where they are required to go to obtain the artificial limbs provided for them under the authority of law.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CAPTURED REBEL FLAGS.

Mr. KETCHAM. I ask unanimous consent of the House to introduce a joint resolution in relation to certain flags captured during the late war. I make this request at the request of the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read for information, after which it will be considered if there is no objection.

The joint resolution was read. It authorizes the Secretary of War to transfer from the War Department to the Executives of the several States, for safe-keeping, the rebel flags captured during the late war, sending to each State such flags as were captured by the volunteer regiments from those States.

No objection was made.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. HOTCHKISS moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. ELEANOR C. RANSOM.

The House then resumed the execution of the order to proceed to business on the Speaker's table; the next business being Senate amendment to the bill of the House No. 709, for the relief of Mrs. Eleanor C. Ransom. The amendment of the Senate was to decrease the sum appropriated from $500 to $400, as a compensation for care and attendance upon sick and wounded soldiers while on a vessel of the United States.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

RAILROAD COMPANY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business upon the Speaker's table were the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 230, to extend the charter of the Alexandria and Washington railroad, passed March 3, 1863.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

Strike out all of section one, after the word "authorized" in line six, and also all of section two down to and including the word "authorized" in line two, in the following words:

To extend said railroad from the track as now laid, or as the same may hereafter be laid, through Maryland avenue at the intersection of Sixth street west, through and along said Sixth street west in a northerly direction to a point at or near its intersection with Pennsylvania avenue which may be suitable for the location and construction of a depot for the receipt and discharge of passengers and freight.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That said railroad company be, and the same is hereby, authorized.

So that the first section will read:

Be it enacted etc., That the Washington, Alexandria, and Georgetown Railroad Company, a corporation lawfully succeeding to the charter, rights, and privileges of the Alexandria and Washington Railroad Company, be, and the same is hereby authorized to extend said railroad from the track, as the same is now or may hereafter be laid, through Maryland avenue at its intersection with Virginia avenue, through and along said Virginia avenue in an easterly direction to its intersection with D street south; thence along D street and across the Washington canal, to New Jersey avenue; thence by a curve to the left, of not less than one thousand feet radius, to a point in square number seven hundred and thirty-two; thence by an underground excavation or tunnel, passing under squares number seven hundred and thirty-two, seven hundred and sixty-two, seven hundred and sixty-one, seven hundred and sixty, seven hundred and eighty-seven, seven hundred and eighty-six, eight hundred and sixteen, eight hundred and fifteen, eight hundred and thirty-nine, eight hundred and thirty-eight, eight hundred and sixty-six, eight hundred and sixty-five, eight hundred and sixty-four, and the different streets and avenues intervening, to a point in square number eight hundred and ninety three; thence, by a curve of not less than one thousand feet radius, into Eighth street east; thence by the most direct and eligible route to an intersection with the Washington branch of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad.

In section [three] two, lines six and seven, strike out the words "Sixth street, and also at its intersection with," so that the section will read:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of sections three and four of the act to which this is an amendment shall be applicable to the extension of said road or tracks as hereby authorized, and that it shall be lawful for said company to construct a draw or other bridge across the Washington canal at its intersection with D street south, of such plans and dimensions as may be approved by the corporation of Washington, and also not to interfere with the navigation of said canal. And also to use steam power in the transportation of passengers and freight over said railroad and branches, subject, however, to such restrictions and regulations as may be imposed by the corporate authorities of the city of Washington in respect to such portion thereof as may be located in said city.

Insert as section three the following:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the consent of Congress be, and the same is hereby, granted for a period of eighteen months from the passage of this act to the Alexandria, Washington, and Georgetown Railroad Company, to use steam power in drawing the cars of said company on the structure across the Potomac river erected by said company under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to extend the charter of the Alexandria and Washington Railroad Company, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1863, and along the railway now laid by said company, or which may be hereafter laid, under the provisions of the said act, along Maryland avenue and First street west, in the city of Washington, to the present depot of the Washington branch of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, subject always, and in all particulars, to such restrictions and regulations concerning the use of such steam power as the corporation of the city of Washington may, by its ordinances, at any time impose on the railroad company: Provided, That, the said company shall not propel their engines at a greater rate of speed than five miles per hour within the corporate limits of Washington city.

Strike out the fourth and fifth sections of the bill, as follows:

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the said railroad company shall be required to pay any and all damages that may result to private property from the extension of said road, and the tunneling under the several lots and squares of ground as heretofore provided, and that in the event the owner or owners of such property and the said company cannot agree as to the amount of such damages, or the value of any private property so appropriated for the purposes of such extension of said road, such proceedings shall thereupon be had for the appropriation and assessment of the damages thereof as are authorized and required under the laws now in force in the District of Columbia regulating appropriations and assessment of damages for opening roads, streets, and alleys in said District. That upon the payment to the owner or owners of the amount of such award of damages, or the lawful tender thereof, together with the payment of all costs of such proceedings, the said company shall acquire the right to use and occupy for the purposes of said railroad all such lands so appropriated, in such a manner as may be necessary for the proper working and running of said road.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That if, at any time, any other railroad company shall or may desire to use and occupy the said tunnel so authorized by this act, either on the same track or another one alongside thereof, any such company shall have the right to do so upon such fair and reasonable terms as may be agreed upon by said parties to such joint occupancy. In case parties cannot agree on terms, the supreme court of the District of Columbia shall fix the terms.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move the amendments of the Senate be concurred in; and upon that motion I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. INGERSOLL moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

The next business upon the Speaker's table were Senate amendments to House bill No. 379, to establish in the District of Columbia a Reform School for boys.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

In section one, lines four, five, and six, strike out the words "an institution for the instruction, improvement, and reformation of juvenile offenders, to be called the Reform School for boys," and in lieu thereof insert the words "a fit and convenient house of correction, suitably and efficiently ventilated, with convenient yards, workshops, and other suitable accommodations adjoining or appurtenant thereto, for the safe-keeping, correction, governing, and employing of offenders legally committed thereto by authority of the courts and magistrates of the District of Columbia;" so that the section will read:

That there shall be established in the District of Columbia, on the tract of land known as the Government farm, a fit and convenient house of correction, suitably and efficiently ventilated, with convenient yards, workshops, and other suitable accommodations adjoining or appurtenant thereto, for the safe-keeping, correction, governing, and employing of offenders legally committed thereto by authority of the courts and magistrates of the District of Columbia: Provided, That the building already erected on that land for the purpose of establishing a similar institution, together with all the other property there collected for the same purpose, shall be transferred to the trustees appointed according to the provisions of this act, at a cost not exceeding $1,500.

In section four strike out the word "to," in lines three, six, and eight respectively, and in lieu thereof insert "they may;" so that the section will read:

That it shall be the duty of the said board of trustees to take charge of the general interests of the institution; they may appoint a superintendent, steward, a teacher, or teachers, and such other officers as may be found necessary, and may be approved by the Secretary of the Interior; they may fix the salaries of said officers, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior; they may prepare such by-laws as may be necessary to regulate and direct the management of the institution, which, however, shall not be valid until approved by the Secretary of the Interior; and exercise a vigilant supervision over the institution, its officers, and its inmates.

Strike out "Reform School" wherever these words occur in the bill, and insert "House of Correction."

In section eight, lines six and seven, strike out "a term of time not less than one year and not to exceed the period of his minority," and insert "his sentence," so as to read:

That when any boy under the age of fourteen years is found guilty in a court in the District of Columbia of any crime punishable by imprisonment other than imprisonment for life, he shall be committed to the said House of Correction, and there held in custody of the superintendent for the term of his sentence, &c.

Strike out the following proviso at the close of the eighth section of the bill:

Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to prevent the discharge from the Reform School, by the trustees, of any boy, as reformed, whenever in their judgment he ought to be so discharged.

Strike out the ninth section of the bill, in these words:

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That any boy under the age of fifteen years, residing in the District of Columbia, who may be brought by his parents or guardian before the judge of the orphan's court, or either of the judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and there shown to be habitually disorderly, and defiant of the control of his parents or guardians, or for any sufficient reasons greatly in need of a stronger and more wholesome restraint and discipline, shall by said judge be committed to the Reform School, there to remain for such a term of time as the trustees may deem best, not to exceed the period of his minority.

Strike out the fourteenth section, in these words:

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That every boy committed to the Reform School shall be there retained, governed, instructed, and employed, under the direction of the trustees, until the expiration of the term for which he was committed to the school, unless sooner discharged by the trustees as reformed; and the discharge of a boy as reformed, or on his arriving at the age of twenty-one years, shall be a complete release from all penalties and disabilities created by the sentence.

In section sixteen, lines twenty-three to twenty-eight, strike out the words, "the Secretary of the Interior shall secure an assessment of taxes in such delinquent city or county sufficient to cover the amount required and the expenses of collecting the same, and appoint a collector, who shall collect the taxes assessed in such manner as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior," and in lieu thereof insert the words, "the party so making default shall be liable to summary proceedings before the supreme court of the District of Columbia, at the instance of the United States attorney for said District, to enforce the same, with interest thereon after the date of default;" so as to make the section read:

That for the purpose of securing a transfer of the building and other property to the trustees, preparing the premises and building for occupancy, and for the payment of other necessary expenses, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $12,000, to be paid only on the order of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That $6,000 of said appropriation is hereby declared to be the sum that shall be assessed and paid by the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and the county of Washington; and it shall be the duty of the proper authorities of the city of Washington to raise, by tax or otherwise, and pay into the Treasury of the United States, at or before the time when the premises shall be ready for occupancy by the House of Correction, the sum of $4,500; and it shall be the duty of the proper authorities of the city of Georgetown to raise and pay in like manner the sum of $1,000; and it shall be the duty of the proper authorities of the county of Washington to raise and pay in like manner the sum of $600; and in case of default of such payment into the Treasury of the United States by either of said cities or by the said county of Washington, the party so making default shall be liable to summary proceedings before the supreme court of the District of Columbia, at the instance of the United States attorney for said District, to enforce the same, with interest thereon after the date of default.

Amend the title of the bill by striking out the words "Reform School" and inserting the words "House of Correction."

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move the amendments of the Senate be concurred in; and upon that motion I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. INGERSOLL moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RELIGIOUS GIFTS AND DEVISES.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was the amendment of the Senate to House bill No. 564, to annul the thirty-fourth section of the declaration of rights of the State of Maryland so far as it applies to the District of Columbia.

The amendment of the Senate was to add to the bill the following:

Provided, That in the case of gifts the same shall be made at least one calendar month before the death of the donor or testator.

The amendment was concurred in.

DITCHES AND CANALS IN PACIFIC STATES.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was the amendment of the Senate to House bill No. 365, granting the right of way to ditch and canal owners over the public lands in the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. Mr. Speaker, this bill as originally introduced, had relation to mining ditches in the mining districts of the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada. The amendment of the Senate proposes to extend the provisions of the bill to some other matters relating to mining. The bill, as amended by the Senate, is substantially Senate bill No. 257, which has already been passed by that body and is now pending before the Committee on Public Lands of this House. A bill precisely similar in form was introduced in this House by the gentleman from California, [Mr. HICKEY,] and having been referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining has been unanimously agreed to by that committee. The Committee on Territories of this House have the same question before them, and concur in the propriety of such a measure.

The bill as now before the House has relation simply to the manner in which the men now working mineral lands in our section of country shall secure their titles thereto. It is a measure which receives the approval of all the Representatives of the States interested. It is a measure of the utmost importance to the people on the Pacific coast. We have been without a regular system of law there for seventeen or eighteen years. There has grown up a sort of common law, which has been recognized by our courts. It has answered our purposes. Under it our country has grown up, producing for the nation sixty or seventy million dollars annually. We now simply ask that the rights which have grown up under that system shall be secured to us.

Sir, as this question cannot be very fully discussed at this late stage of the session, I ask the gentlemen to have some confidence in the united delegation from the Pacific coast. We have no interest as against the United States. On the contrary, our interest is all with the United States. As to the peculiar mode of disposing of the public lands to miners in our section of the country, the members from that region are better entitled to speak than men who have never dug the soil, as have most of the Representatives from the Pacific coast. I trust that the amendment of the Senate will be concurred in, and I move the previous question.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. Yes, sir.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to ask whether by this bill the sovereignty of the United States, in regulation of the production of the gold of its mines, is taken away as completely as its sovereignty over other lands which are sold is taken away?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. It is not taken away. The bill simply legalizes the rights of the men who occupy that land, subject to the ultimate disposition of the United States.

Mr. KASSON. Then, if I understand the gentleman, we can, notwithstanding the passage of this bill, at any time regulate the use that shall be made of the mineral; that is to say, we can oblige the miners to develop the mineral at so much per year for so many years.

Mr. JULIAN. No, sir; there is nothing of the kind in the bill.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to know whether the fee is transferred.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. In answer to the gentleman from Iowa, I ask for the reading of the last section of the bill as amended.

The SPEAKER. The whole amendment must be read, unless the reading be waived by unanimous consent.

Mr. JULIAN. I desire to move the reference of the bill to the Committee on Public Lands, which now has the subject before it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nevada is entitled to the floor, and gives way for the reading of the amendment.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the mineral lands of the public domain, both surveyed and unsurveyed, are hereby declared to be free and open to exploration and occupation by all citizens of the United States, and those who have declared their intention to become citizens, subject to such regulations as may be prescribed by law, and subject also to the local custom or rules of miners in the several mining districts, so far as the same may not be in conflict with the laws of the United States.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That whenever any person or association of persons claim a vein or lode of quartz, or other rock in place, bearing gold, silver, cinnabar, or copper, having previously occupied and improved the same according to the local custom or rules of miners in the district where the same is situated, and having expended in actual labor and improvements thereon an amount of not less than $1,000, and in regard to whose possession there is no controversy or opposing claim, it shall and may be lawful for said claimant or association of claimants to file in the local land office a diagram of the same, so extended laterally or otherwise as to conform to the local laws, customs, or rules of miners, and to enter such tract and receive a patent therefor, granting such mine, together with the right to follow such vein or lode with its dips, angles, and variations, to any depth, although it may enter the land adjoining, which land adjoining shall be sold subject to this condition.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That upon the filing of the diagram as provided in the second section of this act, and posting the same in a conspicuous place on the claim, together with a notice of intention to apply for a patent, the register of the land office shall publish a notice of the same in a newspaper published nearest to the location of said claim, and shall also post such notice in his office for the period of ninety days; and after the expiration of said period, if no adverse claim shall have been filed, it shall be the duty of the surveyor general, upon application of the party, to survey the premises and make a plat thereof, indorsed with his approval, designating the number and description of the location, the value of the labor and improvements, and the character of the vein exposed; and upon the payment to the proper officer of five dollars per acre, together with the cost of such survey, plat, and notice, and giving satisfactory evidence that said diagram and notice have been posted on the claim during said period of ninety days, the register of the land office shall transmit to the General Land Office said plat, survey, and description; and a patent shall issue for the same thereupon. But said plat, survey, or description shall in no case cover more than one vein or lode, and no patent shall issue for more than one vein or lode, which shall be expressed in the patent issued.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That when such location and entry of a mine shall be upon unsurveyed lands, it shall and may be lawful, after the extension thereto of the public surveys, to adjust the surveys to the limits of the premises according to the location and possession and plat aforesaid, and the surveyor general may, in extending the surveys, vary the same from a rectangular form to suit the circumstances of the country and the local rules, laws, and customs of miners: Provided, That no location hereafter made shall exceed two hundred feet in length along the vein for each locator, with an additional claim for discovery to the discoverer of the lode, with the right to follow such vein to any depth, with all its dips, variations, and angles, together with a reasonable quantity of surface by local rules: And provided further, That no person may make more than one location on the same lode, and not more than three thousand feet shall be taken in any one claim by any association of persons.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That as a further condition of sale, in the absence of necessary legislation by Congress, the local Legislature of any State or Territory may provide rules for working mines, involving easements, drainage, and other necessary means to their complete development; and those conditions shall be fully expressed in the patent.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That whenever any adverse claimants to any mine located and claimed as aforesaid shall appear before the approval of the survey, as provided in the third section of this act, all proceedings shall be stayed until a final settlement and adjudication in the courts of competent jurisdiction of the right of possession to such claim, when a patent may issue as in other cases.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to establish additional land districts, and to appoint the necessary officers under existing laws, wherever he may deem the same necessary for the public convenience in executing the provisions of this act.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That the right of way for the construction of highways over public land, not reserved for public uses, is hereby granted.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That whenever, by priority of possession, rights to the use of water for mining, agricultural, manufacturing, or other purposes, have vested and accrued, and the same are recognized and acknowledged by the local customs, laws, and the decisions of courts, the possessors and owners of such vested rights shall be maintained and protected in the same; and the right of way for the construction of ditches and canals for the purposes aforesaid is hereby acknowledged and confirmed: Provided, however, That whenever, after the passage of this act, any person or persons shall, in the construction of any ditch or canal, injure or damage the possession of any settler on the public domain, the party committing such injury or damage shall be liable to the party injured for such injury or damage.

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That wherever, prior to the passage of this act, upon the lands heretofore designated as mineral lands, which have been excluded from survey and sale, there have been homesteads made by citizens of the United States, or persons who have declared their intention to become citizens, which homesteads have been made, improved, and used for agricultural purposes, and upon which there have been no valuable mines of gold, silver, cinnabar, or copper, discovered, and which are properly agricultural lands, the said settlers or owners of such homesteads shall have a right of preemption thereto, and shall be entitled to purchase the same at the price of $1 25 per acre, and in quantity not to exceed one hundred and sixty acres; or said parties may avail themselves of the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 20, 1862, entitled "An act to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain," and acts amendatory thereof.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That upon the survey of the lands aforesaid, the Secretary of the Interior may designate and set apart such portions of the said lands as are clearly agricultural lands, which lands shall hereafter be subject to preemption and sale as other public lands of the United States, and subject to all the laws and regulations applicable to the same.

Amend the title by striking out the words "in the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "and for other purposes."

Mr. KASSON. Does the gentleman insist on the previous question?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. I do.

Mr. JULIAN. I hope the previous question will be voted down. This bill is an outrage, a wholesale abandoning by the nation of its authority and duty respecting its vast mineral domain.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 25; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER, under the rule, ordered tellers, and appointed Mr. ASHLEY of Nevada, and Mr. JULIAN.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 57, noes 12; no quorum voting.

The previous question, by unanimous consent, was considered as having been seconded.

Mr. JULIAN demanded the yeas and nays on ordering the main question.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. JULIAN moved that there be a call of the House.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, demanded tellers. Tellers were not ordered.

Mr. GLOSSBRENNER moved that the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 43.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question then recurred on the motion that there be a call of the House.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 50; no quorum voting.

Mr. JULIAN moved that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 40, nays 57, not voting 85; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Boyer, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Deftrees, Donnelly, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Finck, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Julian, Kasson, Kerr, Latham, William Lawrence, Loan, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, Orth, William H. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Schenck, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Thornton, Trimble, Ward, Henry D. Washburn, Stephen F. Wilson, and Windom—40.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Benjamin, Bidwell, Boutwell, Broomall, Bundy, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Dawes, Eliot, Ferry, Garfield, Hart, Higby, Holmes, Hulburt, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Ketcham, Kelley, Koontz, Lynch, McClurg, McRuer, Mercier, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Paine, Perham, Plants, Price, Alexander H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Stevens, Strouse, Taber, Taylor, Trowbridge, Van Aernum, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Wentworth, James F. Wilson, Woodbridge, and Wright—57.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Bergen, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Bromwell, Buckland, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Cullom, Culver, Darling, Delano, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eldridge, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Hayes, Henderson, Hill, Hogan, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James B. Hubbell, Humphrey, Johnson, Jones, Kelso, Kuykendall, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Longyear, Marshall, Marston, Marvin, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, Patterson, Phelps, Pike, Pomeroy, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, John H. Rice, Scofield, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stilwell, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Upson, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Welker, Whaley, Williams, and Winfield—85.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs, Shall the main question be now put? on which no quorum has voted.

Mr. JULIAN. I appeal to the House to allow me thirty minutes to explain the bill. I ask it as a matter of justice, on a great measure which proposes to revolutionize our whole land policy.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada, and Mr. McRUER objected.

Mr. HIGBY. I hope the House will, by unanimous consent, allow another half hour on the other side. I hope no one from the mineral district will object.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not desire to object, but I submit a proposition. I think this bill can be explained in less than half an hour. If the objections are stated, I think the House can understand the provisions of the bill. If half an hour is required, I think we ought to have a session this evening in order to clear the Speaker's table. Business on the Speaker's table has been accumulating for about a week, and we ought to get rid of it. Much of it will require but little time to dispose of, and it seems to me we ought not to be asked to allow an hour's discussion.

Mr. JULIAN. Say twenty minutes.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I suggest ten minutes, or at most fifteen.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I object to more than twenty minutes being occupied; ten minutes on each side.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to allowing ten minutes on each side?

Mr. JENCKES. I object.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I suggest that a recess be taken till half past seven o'clock. If we do that I think we can adjourn early next week, by getting this business off the Speaker's table.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I object.

On ordering the main question there were—ayes 58, noes 36.

Mr. McRUER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. A quorum has voted.

Mr. McRUER. I withdraw the demand.

Mr. JENCKES. I renew it.

Mr. JULIAN. I move the House adjourn.

On the motion to adjourn there were—ayes 45, noes 48.

Mr. JULIAN. I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were refused.

Mr. JULIAN. Tellers.

Tellers were refused.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on agreeing to the Senate's amendment.

Mr. JULIAN. I ask the House to allow me ten minutes.

Mr. HIGBY. I will not object, provided the same time is allowed to the other side.

Mr. JENCKES. I object.

Mr. JULIAN. I demand the yeas and nays on concurring in the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to lay the bill and amendment on the table; and on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. ORTH. Will the gentleman withdraw the motion a moment to allow me to ask leave of absence?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Yes, sir.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ORTH asked and obtained leave of absence for his colleague, Mr. WASHBURN.

The SPEAKER asked and obtained leave of absence for Mr. DEMING.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I renew the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 49, noes 39; and thereupon (at four o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITION.

The following petition was presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committee:

By Mr. MORRILL: The petition of M. W. Davis, and 50 others, citizens of Westminster, county of Windham, Vermont, praying for increased duties on wool.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, July 23, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.

On motion of Mr. GRIMES, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of Saturday last was dispensed with.

OFFICERS OF THE NAVY.

Mr. GRIMES. Senate bill No. 269 has been returned from the House of Representatives with two or three amendments; and with a view to act upon them I move that the bill be now taken up.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 269) to define the number and regulate the appointment of officers in the Navy, and for other purposes.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were read, as follows:

Strike out all of section one after the word "war," in line eleven, and insert in lieu thereof the following: And who possess the highest professional qualifications and attainments. And nothing in this act shall preclude the advancement in rank now authorized by law for distinguished conduct in battle or for extraordinary heroism: And provided further, That nothing in this act nor in the fourteenth section of the act approved July 18, 1862, entitled "An act to establish and equalize the grade of line officers of the Navy," shall be so construed as to prevent the Secretary of the Navy from promoting to the grade of rear admiral, on the retired list, those commodores who have commanded squadrons by order of the Secretary of the Navy, or who have performed other highly meritorious services.

In section two, strike out in line three the words "ten" and "twenty" and insert "twenty" and "fifty," and in line three of section two strike out "forty" and insert "seventy-five."

In section three, line ten, insert, after the word "act," the words "provided they shall find that number who are suitably qualified therefor."

At the end of section three, add:

And any volunteer officers attached to vessels at sea or on foreign stations may be appointed to the regular Navy, subject to the conditions contained in this section, after their return to the United States.

In section four strike out lines five and six, as follows: "until their places can be supplied by graduates from the Naval Academy."

Mr. GRIMES. The only material amendment that is made to the bill by the House of Representatives is to double the number of volunteer officers authorized to be introduced into the regular Navy from those who served during the war. The first long section is only to put in more appropriate language, as it was believed by the House of Representatives, the same provisions that were contained in the original bill as sent to them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Iowa whether this bill has any provision increasing the pay or emoluments of the officers of the Navy.

Mr. GRIMES. No, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the inquiry because by some bill that we passed without consideration, it appears, without our knowing it, their pay was increased; and I am desirous to know whether this bill in any way provides for any further increase.

Mr. GRIMES. It does not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made to the bill by the House of Representatives.

The amendments were concurred in.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HENDERSON presented the petition of O. N. Cutler, of Hannibal, Missouri, praying for compensation for property taken from him for the use of the Army of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ANTHONY. I presented on Saturday the memorial of Sylvester Mowry, praying for remuneration for losses sustained by him in negotiating drafts on the Assistant Treasurer at New York, in 1861, while United States and California boundary commissioner, which I see in the Globe was laid on the table. The Journal was not read this morning so that I do not know how it stands there. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. RIDDLE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 272) to authorize the corporation of Washington to reduce the width and improve the avenues and streets of that city, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the petition of John McNally and others, employés around the President's House and grounds, praying for compensation for extra services rendered during the administration of President Lincoln, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. NESMITH, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the descendants of Joseph Sherman, an officer of the Rhode Island troops during the revolutionary war, praying for compensation for supplies furnished to the American Army in the year 1778, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

SOLDIERS' ORPHANS' FAIR BUILDING.

Mr. MORRILL. The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 191) relating to the building lately occupied for a national fair, in aid of the orphans of the soldiers and sailors of the United States, have directed me to report it back without amendment, and recommend its passage, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee on the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

It proposes to appropriate the building recently occupied for the national fair in aid of the orphans of the soldiers and sailors of the United States, with the materials of which it is composed and the tools used in its construction and necessary to keep it in repair, to the use of the directors of the National Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home, for an additional fair in aid of the orphans, and for such other purposes as may be deemed expedient and proper by the directors in furtherance of the national charity in aid of which the Orphans' Home has been organized; and provides that the building be allowed to stand upon its present site, at the corner of Pennsylvania avenue and Seventh street, in the city of Washington, for the uses stated, until May, 1867.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate have an evening session, beginning at half past seven o'clock, for the purpose of considering business from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Name the hour when the recess shall commence.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will say that the Senate, at half past four o'clock, take a recess until half past seven.

Mr. SUMNER. I suggest to my friend from Michigan whether on the whole that is expedient. We do not know now when we shall adjourn. The motion of the Senator goes upon the idea that we are to adjourn immediately. If we are not to adjourn immediately, why should we sit in the evening?

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senate will give me the day to-morrow for the purpose of considering business from the Committee on Commerce I shall be satisfied.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that at half past four o'clock to-day the Senate take a recess until half past seven for the purpose of considering business reported from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will add to my motion that no other business shall then be in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest to the Senator whether he had not better leave blank the time for taking the recess, so as simply to provide that we shall meet this evening at half past seven. We may not wish to close our session at half past four; we may wish to go on with the business then before us, and therefore I suggest that we had better not fix the hour at which the recess shall commence.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well; I move that we meet, then, at half past seven.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope not. I hope the hour for the recess will be fixed for half past four o'clock, so that we can go and get our dinners and know when to come back.

Mr. SHERMAN. Some bill may be pending at that time.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If it is, let us take a recess, and not have a squabble about it at that time.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well; I insist on my original motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is, that the Senate take a recess at half past four o'clock to-day until half past seven o'clock in the evening, then to consider business from the Committee on Commerce exclusively.

The motion was agreed to.

UNION PRISONERS OF WAR.

Mr. WILSON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred a joint resolution (H. R. No. 190) in regard to rations of Union soldiers held as prisoners of war, to report it back with an amendment, and I should like to have it put on its passage now.

By unanimous consent, the resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is in these words:

Whereas, by general order of the War Department of February 14, 1862, rations to Union soldiers held as prisoners of war in the rebel States were commuted at a cost price during the period of their imprisonment; and whereas a large number of the said prisoners have been paid under said order, but many equally worthy with them, and who have suffered in rebel prisons, have not been so paid: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all Union soldiers who were held as prisoners of war in the rebel States, and who have not received any commutation of rations at a cost price during the period of their imprisonment: Provided, That no person who has sold or transferred any interest in the claim for commutation shall be benefited by this resolution, and no purchaser or assignee of such claim or interest shall be benefited by this resolution; and that such commutation be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs was to strike out all of the resolution after the resolving clause, and in lieu of the words stricken out to insert the following:

That all United States soldiers, sailors, and marines who were held as prisoners of war in the rebel States shall be paid commutation of rations at cost prices during the period of their imprisonment: Provided, That no person who has sold or transferred any interest in the claim for said commutation, nor any purchaser or assignee of such claim or interest shall be benefited by this resolution; and the amount of such commutation shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. WILSON. I will simply say that the resolution, as it came from the House, starts with the idea of doing something and does not. There is an error in it which we have corrected by this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the resolution read a third time. The resolution was read the third time and passed.

GOVERNMENT WATER-PIPES.

Mr. BROWN. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 776) in relation to unlawful tapping of Government water-pipes, to report it back without amendment, and ask for its present consideration. I will simply state that it is a simple measure which is necessary to be passed in order to protect the water-pipes that supply the Capitol. They are in danger of being cut, and there is some police regulation necessary.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It declares the unlawful tapping of any water-pipe laid down in the District of Columbia by authority of the United States a misdemeanor and an indictable offense; and any person who may be indicted for and convicted of that offense in the criminal court of the District of Columbia is to be subject to such fine as the court may think proper to impose, not exceeding $500, or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year; and it is made the special duty of the Commissioner of Public Buildings to bring to the notice of the attorney of the United States for the District of Columbia or to the grand jury any infraction of this law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CIRCUIT COURT IN WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 133) to change the place of holding the terms of the circuit court for the district of West Virginia, have directed me to report it back with an amendment; and as it will take but a moment to dispose of it, I ask for its present consideration. It merely changes the place of holding a court.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was to insert in line four, after the words "West Virginia," the words "heretofore held at Lewisburg, in the county of Greenbrier;" so that the joint resolution will read:

Resolved, &c. That the terms of the circuit court for the district of West Virginia, heretofore held at Lewisburg, in the county of Greenbrier, shall be hereafter held at the city of Parkersburg, at the time now fixed by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. RAMSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 444) to reorganize and fix the pay of certain officers of the Post Office Department; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. WADE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 140) directing the Secretary of War to deliver to Norman Wiard certain damaged cannon for the purposes of experiment; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

ILLINOIS SOLDIERS' COLLEGE.

Mr. TRUMBULL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 139) for the benefit of the Illinois Soldiers' College and Military Academy; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate, which I have no doubt I shall have when it is read—it is very short—to put that resolution on its passage.

Mr. GRIMES. Let us hear it read.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will state in a moment what it is. The Illinois Soldiers' College and Military Academy has been organized under the authority of the State of Illinois by a charter. They have purchased at Fulton, in the northern part of the State of Illinois, in Whiteside county, a large hotel and other property there, which has cost between one and two hundred thousand dollars. I have a letter in my hand, from the general agent of the society, stating that they have five hundred applications from soldiers, many of whom are disabled, and many of whom they propose to educate without cost, and stating that there are at Springfield quite a number of cots and bedding that are being sold, and bring the Government but a trifle, and they ask that the cots and bedding necessary to accommodate five hundred free students, if there be that surplus on hand which the Government has no use for, be transferred for the benefit of the free students, formerly soldiers, at the institution. That is all there is in the resolution.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the resolution; which authorizes the Secretary of War to transfer to the Illinois Soldiers' College and Military Academy, from the surplus fund on hand and not needed for the public service, cots and bedding necessary to accommodate five hundred persons, for the use of free students, disabled by the war, in that institution.

Mr. MORRILL. I think this is all right; but I ask the Senator from Illinois whether the same difficulty does not arise here as arose the other day on another resolution as to the question of authority.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The authority we have to do this?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not propose to discuss it. If the Senator from Maine doubts the authority of appropriating money or bedding, or anything else, to the disabled soldiers of the last war, I shall not try to enlighten him upon it. I think we can pension them and do anything for them, and we have not done half enough for them.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not propose to debate the question; but as this was a State institution it occurred to me that the objection which the honorable Senator raised to the resolution for the sufferers by the fire at Portland might arise here.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This is stated to be for the use of these persons.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not think that makes any difference. I think the same objection arises that was made the other day. The only difference is between Maine and Illinois, a question of latitude.

Mr. HOWE. The resolution ought to be amended so as to require a receipt from the proper officer of the college—I do not know who he is—to be taken for what is turned over to him; otherwise there will be no possible mode of settling the account.

Mr. TRUMBULL. There will never be any account to settle. These cots and bedding are to be given to the institution. I do not suppose they are to be returned. The Secretary of War is authorized to do this.

Mr. HOWE. But the trouble is that for every one of those cots and beds some officer of the Government is charged to-day, and has got to account to the Government for them.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is to be all under the charge of the Secretary of War, and he can do it by a rule.

Mr. HOWE. Not at all; he cannot do it by a rule. The accounting officers require something more than a rule.

Mr. TRUMBULL. As they are to be disposed of under an act of Congress, will that not be sufficient for the accounting officer.

Mr. HOWE. What will be the evidence whether a million or five hundred or fifty cots be disposed of unless you make somebody's receipt the evidence.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Suppose they are sold, how then? These are all now being sold.

Mr. HOWE. The returns of the quartermaster show that he sold so many.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Very well; you will have the return of the quartermaster in this case that he transferred so many to this institution; what is the difference? They are now being sold.

Mr. HOWE. They are now being sold; but the quartermaster who is charged with the sale of them is charged with every one of them, and he has got to give an account of the sale of every one of them and the price it brings. Now, if he deducts from the whole number in his hands fifty or one hundred or five hundred and turns them over to this college, it seems to me he wants some evidence to present that he has turned over so many in order to get his accounts settled. If the Senator really objects to a receipt being taken—

Mr. TRUMBULL. Not at all. I have not the slightest objection to it if the Senator thinks it necessary.

Mr. HOWE. Let it go.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ABANDONED PROPERTY IN REBEL STATES.

Mr. HOWARD. I offer the following resolution and ask for its present consideration; it is merely a resolution directing an inquiry which I think it is very necessary to make:

Resolved, That the joint committee on retrenchment be instructed to inquire into the mode of collecting and the disposition made of captured and abandoned property in the States lately in rebellion, by officers, agents, and employees of the Treasury Department; and that said committee is hereby invested with full power to send for persons and papers for that purpose.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

NEUTRALITY LAWS.

Mr. CHANDLER. On some day in December last I gave notice that I should introduce a bill enacting the present British neutrality laws. I spent several weeks in examining and comparing the British neutrality laws with our own, and ascertained at last that they were identical. It is the same law precisely which sent the Alabama and her colleagues to prey upon our commerce, that seized the Meteor the other day for fear she might aid the Peruvian Government in opposition to Spain! It is the same law verbatim which enlisted men for the Alabama and all the rebel pirates of England, and arrested the Fenians on our frontier! The British neutrality laws and ours, as they stand to-day, are the same. Now, sir, it will be seen at a glance that it is a mere farce as these laws are construed in Great Britain and as they are construed here. I desire, therefore, to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be directed to inquire into the expediency of repealing our present neutrality laws.

They are a farce as they stand, and I hope the committee will decide that it is expedient to repeal the whole of them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent to consider the resolution at this time.

Mr. COWAN. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made the resolution lies over.

RELATIONS WITH BRITISH PROVINCES.

Mr. MORRILL. I submit the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the President be requested, so far as the same may be practicable, to enter into arrangements with the British Provinces of North America touching the fisheries, and also the commercial relations of the Provinces with the United States.

Mr. BROWN. I object.

Mr. MORRILL. I want it referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BROWN. It is not in the shape of a resolution of inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the resolution?

Mr. BROWN. If it was a resolution of inquiry in the usual form I should have no objection; but as it is not in the usual form and takes the shape of a resolution of instruction I do object to it.

Mr. MORRILL. I stated that it was a resolution for reference. I introduce it with a view of having it referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, to report as they choose in regard to it.

Mr. SUMNER. There can be no objection to that.

Mr. MORRILL. It is simply to request the President, if the thing is practicable.

Mr. BROWN. I object to the consideration of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution lies over.

Mr. BROWN subsequently said: I desire to withdraw the objection I entered just now against the resolution offered by the Senator from Maine. The resolution was not exactly in the usual form, and I was led into a mistake in regard to it. I never desire to seem capricious or illiberal in my dealings with other Senators, and I therefore withdraw the objection.

The resolution was taken up and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

S. H. FESSENDEN.

Mr. WILSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Sewell H. Fessenden, and that the petitioner have leave to withdraw the same.

CUSTOMS FINES AND FORFEITURES.

Mr. POLAND. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to furnish to the Senate a copy of the account of fines, penalties, and forfeitures returned to the Treasury Department by the collector of the district of Vermont, from the 1st day of April, 1864, to this date, together with a statement of the dates at which the sums due to the United States thereon were paid into the Treasury.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to amend that resolution by adding after "Vermont" the words "and the collector of the district of Kentucky."

Mr. POLAND. I trust the Senator from Kentucky will put his amendment in the form of a separate resolution. This is a very small matter which I design to reach by my resolution, and I would not like to have it encumbered.

Mr. DAVIS. I will say to the honorable Senator that I think it will pass in this form without any question; if it still be objected to, I will withdraw it.

Mr. POLAND. I would prefer that the Senator would embrace the subject of his amendment in a separate resolution.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like very much to have that information in relation to my own State, and I think now is as convenient a time to obtain the information as any other. If it is at all objected to by any gentleman I will withdraw it.

Mr. POLAND. It will be quite easy for the Senator from Kentucky to get the information that he desires by offering a separate resolution. I would rather it should not be added to this.

Mr. DAVIS. I have no idea that the Senate would accord to me any such favor as that, disconnected with the company of the Senator from Vermont. I hope he will allow the question to be put in the present form, and if there is any obstruction to the passage of the resolution in consequence of my amendment, I will withdraw it.

Mr. POLAND. Certainly if the Senator thinks that he will be more likely to get what he desires by having it attached as an amendment to my resolution, I shall not object.

Mr. ANTHONY. There is only one objection to resolutions of this kind; I do not know whether it applies to this or not, although I think it is more applicable to the amendment than to the original resolution.

Mr. DAVIS. If the Senator will allow me, I will withdraw the amendment I have offered.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know that I wish the Senator to withdraw it, I merely wish to make a statement. These resolutions of inquiry sometimes cause the diversion of large numbers of clerks from their appropriate duties for weeks and months together. If this is a resolution that is to take a great deal of time and to involve the employment of a great many clerks, I should prefer it would not pass. If not, I have no objection to it. I suppose the Senator from Kentucky can answer that question himself. I have no desire to embarrass the Senator or to withhold any information he desires, but I do not wish, and I presume he does not wish that the clerks of the Departments shall be taken from their proper occupations to furnish large masses of information that are sent here and never read, merely putting us to the expense of printing. Perhaps the colleague of the Senator from Kentucky who has himself been Secretary of the Treasury can answer the question which I desire to have answered.

Mr. DAVIS. I am satisfied that there is a great deal of information of the class embraced in the resolution offered by the Senator from Vermont that ought to be laid before the Senate and before the country. It seems to me there is a very great disposition among some members of the Senate to suppress all such information. Now, I believe in relation to my own State that there has been received by the officers of the Government and their employes there large sums of money that never have been reported, to the Senate at least; whether they have been reported to the Treasury or not I do not know; and I want to know whether the money collected by the officers in Kentucky within the scope of the resolution offered by the Senator from Vermont has been accounted for at the Treasury Department or not.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the Senator has any reason to suppose that state of things, I withdraw the objection, and hope the resolution will pass with the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was adopted.

COMMITTEE ON RETRENCHMENT.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the President of the Senate be authorized to appoint the committee on the part of the Senate provided for by the concurrent resolution of the two Houses, on retrenchment. I supposed it to be contained in the resolution itself, but I see on looking at the resolution that that authority is not contained in it. I move that the committee on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair. The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bill and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 792) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish transportation to discharged soldiers to whom artificial limbs are furnished by the Government; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 192) relative to certain flags captured during the late war.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 123) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific railroad of California to Portland in Oregon;

A bill (S. No. 236) to authorize the construction of certain bridges and to establish them as post roads;

A bill (S. No. 269) to define the number and regulate the appointment of officers in the Navy, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 615) legalizing marriages, and for other purposes, in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 280) to amend an act to amend the charter of the Alexandria and Washington railroad, passed March 3, 1863;

A bill (H. R. No. 261) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 601) to grade East Capitol street and establish Lincoln square;

A bill (H. R. No. 709) for the relief of Mrs. Eleanor C. Ransom;

A bill (H. R. No. 564) to annul the thirty-fourth section of the declaration of rights of the State of Maryland so far as it applies to the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 559) to authorize the extension, construction, and use by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company of a railroad from between Knoxville and the Monocacy Junction into and within the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 124) authorizing the construction of a jail in and for the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 477) further to provide for the safety of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, to regulate the salaries of steamboat inspectors, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 379) to establish in the District of Columbia a House of Correction for Boys; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 159) authorizing the Commissioner of Public Buildings to employ three additional watchmen in the Smithsonian grounds.

UNIFORM BANKRUPT LAW.

Mr. POLAND. I desire to ascertain whether it is the purpose of the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the bankrupt bill which has passed the House of Representatives. I am not specially desirous to have it taken up for consideration at the present time, but I do desire to ascertain whether it is the purpose of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of that bill at the present session. I know that some of the friends of the measure fear that we have reached so late a period in the session that it may not be possible to pass the bill. For myself I regard it as a measure of so much importance that I should be willing to remain here long enough to consider and pass the bill; but I desire to ascertain now whether it is the purpose of the Senate to proceed to its consideration during this session, and I therefore move to take it up, and I desire that the vote on this motion shall be regarded as a test vote whether the Senate intend to proceed to consider it and pass it, if a majority are found to be in favor of it, at this session. If the vote shall be in favor of taking it up, I shall not insist upon proceeding with its consideration at the present time, but shall myself move to lay it over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator restate his motion?

Mr. POLAND. I move to take up the bill (H. R. No. 598) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States; and I desire that it may be understood that the vote upon this motion to take up is to be a test vote of whether we are to proceed to consider it at this session. I will myself move, if it is taken up, to lay it over until to-morrow, so as not to antagonize it with any other measure to-day.

Mr. SHERMAN. I rise simply to give notice that at one o'clock I shall call up the miscellaneous appropriation bill, whatever may be the result of this vote.

Mr. POLAND. I desire that this vote may not be influenced by the order of business merely. I wish to have the sense of the Senate on this motion, as to whether the bill shall be considered at this session.

Mr. JOHNSON. I understood my friend from Vermont to say that if the bankrupt bill was taken up he would ask to have its consideration postponed until to-morrow, not to interfere with the proceedings of the Senate to-day. I rise merely for the purpose of expressing a wish that the bill should be taken up. I think that the condition of the country imperatively demands that we should pass a law of this kind. Whether the particular bill upon the table the sense of the Senate will approve can only be ascertained after it shall be presented to the Senate; but I am satisfied that the people of the country almost universally desire a law of this description, and that it is important to the true interests of the country that some such measure as this should be adopted. In every commercial country, particularly in England, there has been a similar law, and, as I understand, at the last session of Parliament a law for the amendment of their old system was reported by some of the most enlightened men of that body, which is nearly the same with the provisions of this bill. They have almost literally copied the bill that was before us at the last session, and I think that that of itself, independent of our own judgment founded upon our own knowledge of the antecedent English system, should be considered as very persuasive evidence that the bill itself is one proper to exist in a country so much commercial as our own.

Mr. SUMNER. The bill to which the Senator from Vermont alludes, I believe, has been matured with singular care; it embodies everything that is good or important on the subject derived from the experience of England and the different States of our own country. I think that that bill with some possible amendments ought to pass, and we ought not to adjourn until it has passed. The Senator from Vermont reminds us that we are drawing toward the end of the session, and he does not know, or he suggests a doubt, whether we may have time to consider it. I would say that we ought to find time or make time for its consideration. At any rate we ought not to leave these seats until we have considered it and done our best to put it among the laws of the land.

Mr. COWAN. I hope the bill will not be taken up, and I hope it will not be taken up for consideration because it is this bill. I think the bill itself, so far from being a good one, is a very bad one, and if enacted into a law it would not exist upon our statute-book two years before it would be repealed. It would meet the fate of the bankrupt law of 1841, and it would meet that fate because it contains within itself the same inherent defect that that law did. This law it is proposed shall be administered in the United States courts; and I think that whenever that is done in this country with a bankrupt law, it will be fatal. If a uniform system or rule could be adopted, so that it might be administered in the State courts the same as the laws of naturalization are administered there, where the operation of it could be brought home to the people at their own doors, where they could go into court without the great expense and trouble necessarily attending upon the courts of the United States, then I think the people would acquiesce in the law and it would be a good law; but if it is to be administered in the United States courts it will meet with the fate of the old law, and I think will be fatal to anybody who will vote for its passage.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Mr. President, I think the United States ought to have a bankrupt law; but I think the last one they had, which provided for a voluntary system of bankruptcy, was the very worst one we could have. If we have a bankrupt law passed by the United States, it must necessarily be administered in the Federal courts and cannot be administered in the State courts. In the first place, the United States cannot impose upon the State courts the duty of administering it; they must administer it in their own courts. It must be administered for a series of years, so as to be generally understood and become the rule of action for those entitled to the benefits of bankruptcy throughout all the States, in order that merchants and lawyers and business men in all the States may come to understand it. But I do not think that we are now in a situation to consider this bankrupt bill and give it that deliberate action that we ought to do; and I am against taking it up now or considering it at this session. I rather expect that if the bill is drawn as carefully as I understand it is, when it comes to be acted upon at the next session it will have my vote; but I have not determined to vote for it, and I am not now prepared for final action.

Mr. POMEROY. I believe we have had this question here for four years past, and there was a general understanding when the bill introduced by the Senator from Connecticut, who is now the Presiding Officer of this body, was before us, that after the close of the war we would consider it; that there would be new cases calling for a law of this kind that we could not turn away from on account of the exigencies of the war, men in hopeless bankruptcy for no fault of their own. Now, I say we ought to take up the bill, and I do not intend to vote for an adjournment until it is taken up and considered. We have had it here every year for four years, and we agreed that at the close of the war we would consider a bill of this character. I trust we shall now proceed to do so.

Mr. HOWE. I agree with the Senator from Kentucky that the United States ought to have a bankrupt law, and in about a minute and a half I shall be ready to vote to proceed to the consideration of this bill; but for that time I want to exert myself to save myself from bankruptcy if I can. I have been struggling for an hour to get the floor to submit a motion that the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution for the relief of Joseph Segar, and that he have leave to withdraw the papers in that case; and I appeal now to the magnanimity of the Senator from Vermont and the justice of the Senate to allow me to submit that motion.

Mr. CRESWELL. Will that save you from bankruptcy? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWE. Yes; I am then all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The consent of the Senator from Vermont does not enable the Senator from Wisconsin to submit that motion without the consent of the Senate.

Mr. HOWE. I said that I appealed to the magnanimity of the Senator from Vermont, and to the justice of the Senate, to allow me to submit this motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now move, with the consent of the Senator from Vermont, it being one o'clock, to take up the miscellaneous appropriation bill. He can make his motion at some other time.

Mr. POLAND. No, sir, I desire to get a vote upon it now.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I submit a motion to take up the appropriation bill now, if such a motion is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Another motion being before the Senate, the Chair thinks it is not in order. The pending motion must be disposed of.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move, then, to lay the pending motion on the table.

Mr. POLAND. We are ready to take the vote, I think.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to the vote being taken if it can be done at once, but it is being discussed.

Mr. POLAND. I do not think anybody desires to discuss this question further; certainly I do not. Let us have a vote.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not see any object in taking up the bill now, because the vote to take it up is not a definite vote.

Mr. POLAND. We desire to make it so.

Mr. SHERMAN. It ought not to antagonize the appropriation bill.

Mr. SUMNER. I suggest to the Senator from Vermont that his motion be to take up the bill with a view to make it the special order for to-morrow at one o'clock.

Mr. POLAND. I call for the yeas and nays on my motion.

Mr. CLARK. I may vote to take up the bill or I may not vote to take it up; but I entirely refuse to have the vote I shall give on that motion made a criterion as to how I may be in regard to the bankrupt bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is another matter.

Mr. CLARK. So I understand. I object to its being regarded a criterion as to whether I will consider the bill at this session. I do not see any object in moving to take it up at the present time if we are to immediately lay it aside and take up another bill. I am willing to take it up in the regular order of business when we can do it and give it consideration, and if it comes to that stage of the session that we can pass it, I shall be ready then to act upon it; but I do not see anything to be gained by taking it up merely to lay it aside, because I do not understand that is to be an indication how the Senate may be upon it.

Mr. POLAND. I do not desire that the vote upon this motion shall be a test of whether Senators are in favor of the bankrupt bill or against it; but I desire that it shall be a test of whether the Senate design to proceed to the consideration of the bill at this session. So far I desire to have it a test.

Mr. CLARK. So far as I am concerned, I cannot consent to that, because the miscellaneous appropriation bill now is in the order of business to be considered, and I do not understand that the Senator from Vermont proposes to consider his bill now. But if presently we shall come to that condition of business in the Senate that we can take it up and go on with its consideration, I will agree with him to do so; and then if we can dispose of it at this session I shall cheerfully do that.

Mr. LANE. This is a motion, as I understand, to take up the bankrupt bill. I am opposed to the bankrupt bill now or at any other time. I am opposed to taking it up now because it antagonizes with the miscellaneous appropriation bill, which must be passed, and I wish to consider the bounty bill, which is an important bill, and the Army bill, that must be passed before we adjourn. I therefore move to amend the motion of the Senator from Vermont by postponing the consideration of the bankrupt bill until the first Monday in next December.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is not before the Senate, and a motion to postpone is not in order until the bill shall be before the Senate.

Mr. LANE. I move to amend the motion to take up by a motion to postpone.

Mr. SHERMAN. I take it it is in order for me to move to lay on the table the motion to take up. It certainly must be within the power of a legislative body at any time to come to a direct vote. I move to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the motion of the Senator from Vermont be laid upon the table. The Chair is a little in doubt in regard to the propriety of the motion, but is strongly of impression that the late Vice President ruled such a motion to be out of order. There must be some tangible subject before the Senate that can be laid on the table by the motion to lay on the table. Still, the Chair will entertain the motion, but with some hesitation. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Vermont. That is not a debatable question.

Mr. POLAND. I am perfectly willing that the question shall be taken in that form. I merely desire to get the sense of the Senate, whether they will proceed to the consideration of the bill at this session, and I call for the yeas and nays on this motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOWE. I rise to inquire if there is now any objection to my submitting the motion which I asked leave to submit awhile ago.

Mr. JOHNSON. You can do that afterward.

Mr. HOWE. It is objected to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Vermont, and upon that question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 17, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Clark, Cowan, Davis, Guthrie, Henderson, Kirkwood, Lane, Morrill, Sherman, Sprague, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Willey, Williams, and Wilson—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Creswell, Edmunds, Foster, Grimes, Harris, Johnson, McDougall, Morgan, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sumner, and Yates—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Conness, Cragin, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Riddle, Saulsbury, Stewart, Wade, and Wright—17.

So the motion to lay on the table prevailed.

APPROVAL OF BILLS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. COOPER, his Secretary, announced that the President had approved and signed, on the 23d instant, the following acts:

An act (S. No. 137) to amend the acts approved August 6, 1861, and July 16, 1862, establishing a Metropolitan police in the District of Columbia, to increase the efficiency thereof, and for other purposes;

An act (S. No. 145) for a grant of lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Northern Kansas railroad and telegraph;

An act (S. No. 178) to incorporate the Metropolitan Mining and Manufacturing Company;

An act (S. No. 246) relating to public schools in the District of Columbia;

An act (S. No. 277) for the relief of William Cook; and

An act (S. No. 325) to give certain powers to the levy court of the county of Washington, in the District of Columbia.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 760) for the relief of James C. Cook—to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

A bill (H. R. No. 792) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish transportation to discharged soldiers to whom artificial limbs are furnished by the Government—to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 192) relative to certain flags captured during the late war, was read twice by its title.

Mr. WILSON. If there is no objection, I should like to have that resolution put on its passage now.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let it be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War be requested to transfer from the War Department to the Executives of the several States for safe-keeping the rebel flags captured by volunteer regiments during the late war, sending to each State the colors captured by the regiments from such State.

Mr. GRIMES. I trust that resolution will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I am aware that in two or three instances there are regiments from two or three States claiming that they were the captors of flags, and it will only involve us in an infinite deal of trouble if we undertake to distribute them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) Objection being made, it cannot be considered at this time. The joint resolution is referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 737) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. WILSON to the amendment of Mr. DAVIS to the second section of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the question is taken on the pending amendment, I desire to suggest that there is an amendment of the Committee on Finance not yet disposed of, and I hope it will be acted upon before the other vote is taken. It is an amendment on page 21.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was to insert after line four hundred and ninety-four of section one—

To enable the Commissioner of Public Buildings to reimburse the corporation of Washington for expenses incurred in improving streets and avenues passing through and by property of the General Government, $47,255 81.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "Government," the words "under the third section of the act approved May 5, 1864, entitled 'An act to amend an act to incorporate the inhabitants of the city of Washington,' passed May 15, 1820."

The amendment to the amendment was adopted.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, and the amendment to it offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The Secretary read Mr. DAVIS's amendment, which was to add to the second section of the bill the following clause:

To pay bounties to the loyal owners of slaves mustered into the military service of the United States, according to the act of Congress approved February 24, 1864, $5,000,000.

The amendment of Mr. WILSON was to strike out all of this amendment, and substitute for it the following:

That so much of any moneys in the Treasury known as the commutation fund as may be necessary be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the payment to loyal persons claiming service or labor from colored volunteers or drafted men, the amounts heretofore or hereafter to be awarded them under the provisions of section twenty-four of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes,'" approved February 24, 1864, for each person so claimed to be held to service or labor, who has enlisted or been drafted into the military service of the United States; but such payment shall in no case be made to any person except upon satisfactory proof that the claimant has firmly and faithfully maintained his or her adherence and allegiance to the Government of the United States by defending its cause against the government and forces of the so-called confederate States of America, in all suitable and practicable ways, and according to his or her ability and opportunity.

Mr. SUMNER. I will inquire of my colleague whether in his amendment he contemplates the examination of these claims by commissioners, as I think was proposed by the original statute. There is no reference to commissioners in his amendment.

Mr. WILSON. The payment is to be under the provisions of the act of 1864.

Mr. SUMNER. I merely wish to understand whether in the contemplation of my colleague that was embraced.

Mr. WILSON. I so understand; that was the object, to comply with the provisions of the twenty-fourth section of the act of 1864, which authorized the appointment of commissioners to report upon these claims. I am clearly of the opinion that commissioners must be appointed.

Mr. SUMNER. Then, as I understand my colleague, this amendment of his is nothing more than to carry out the obligation or contract of the Government in that original act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This original law, the twenty-fourth section of the act of 1864, only provides that compensation for the loss of the service of slaves shall be paid out of the moneys derived from commutations of drafted persons for military service; so that the whole question of the obligation of the Government is to hold that fund in trust for the payment of those claims; and it provides for the appointment of a commission to ascertain those claims. My point of objection to this present way and manner of payment is, that it does not appear that this fund will be sufficient for all the claims; and therefore it appears to me that we ought not to make provision for the payment of any of this money out of the fund which is held in trust for all until these commissioners shall have made their report of all the claims which may be made under the authority of the twenty-fourth section of the act of 1864, so as that if the fund turns out to be insufficient, the loyal slave-owner of Kentucky who happens to be behind in his application will not find that the money has been all paid over to the loyal slave-owners in Maryland, where the commission has been held. I think, therefore, we are premature in authorizing the payment of this money out of the Treasury until it shall have been ascertained, in the manner provided by law, what is the whole extent and amount of these claims, and who are the claimants. For this reason I am opposed to the amendment and to making any provision at this time, because the faith of the Government in this pledge is limited by the commutation money, the military fund derived in that way. There is no other obligation of any description; and fairness requires, as well as the law, that we should not pay one claimant who happens to be a little more diligent than another in getting before the commission and having his claim approved, until it is ascertained what is the total amount of the claims, so that a just disposition can be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not see why the yeas and nays should be called upon this particular amendment. The amendment is to a provision of the same sort in the original bill, which is more obnoxious than this particular amendment. The particular amendment, if I recollect aright, is the one offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, and I suppose that those who may be opposed to the provision in any form would prefer that to the form in which it stands in the bill, or will stand if it shall not be amended. My friend from Vermont therefore will accomplish his purpose better by suffering this particular amendment now to be adopted, and then making the objection, if he continues to entertain the opinion that the objection is well founded, to the adoption of the amendment as amended.

Mr. BROWN. I only desire to say for myself that I am opposed to both of the amendments. I am opposed to the compensation in toto. I do not believe it a contract under the law as it exists, and if it were a contract, it would be a contract against good morals. I differ, however, with the Senator from Maryland in this: I think if it is desired to defeat both of them, the better way is to defeat the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, because I think it very certain that thereafter we can defeat the other.

Mr. JOHNSON. That does defeat the other.

Mr. DAVIS. I understand the argument of the Senator from Missouri to be simply an argument in favor of repudiation.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 29, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Clark, Cowan, Creswell, Davis, Doolittle, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Ramsey, Riddle, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Van Winkle, Wade, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Edmunds, Foster, Grimes, Pomeroy, and Trumbull—6.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Conness, Cragin, Dixon, Fessenden, Hendricks, Nesmith, Norton, Poland, Saulsbury, Stewart, and Wright—13.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. SHERMAN. The only doubt I have about this matter is on a question of detail, on which I should like to have a little information. What is the amount of this commutation fund?

Mr. WILSON. Nine million dollars now in the Treasury.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is that sufficient?

Mr. CRESWELL. I think more than sufficient.

Mr. SHERMAN. The point made by the Senator from Vermont struck me as being very forcible.

Mr. WILSON. I think five or six millions will pay all these claims.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the United States should pay some of these claims in full and the result should be that there would be a deficiency, we would have to make it good on the principle of equalizing the sum. That is the only doubt I have about it. I have no doubt that to the extent of the commutation fund we ought to pay these claims. If there is any doubt as to the sufficiency of the fund for that purpose, I think the Senator from Massachusetts ought to be able to satisfy the Senate on that point.

Mr. WILSON. I certainly have no objection to the Senator making an amendment if he chooses that none of this money shall be paid until the final report of the commissioners is made.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we had better do that.

Mr. WILSON. I certainly should not object to that; but my judgment is that five or six million dollars will pay all that will ever be found due to these persons. The sum cannot exceed $300 for each slave, and it will range from one to three hundred dollars. The fact that slavery was abolished about a year and a half after we passed this act of course will have its effect upon the commissioners in estimating the value of the services of these persons. I have no idea that all the commutation money will be taken; but I have no objection to any Senator moving an amendment which will require the commissioners to make their final report of all cases before any of the money is paid out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will only take ten thousand blacks to use up $1,000,000, and one hundred thousand would use up $10,000,000, and fifty thousand at $100 would use up $5,000,000. According to the statement which was read the other day from the Treasury Department, there was only, as I understood, about seven million dollars of a balance in the Treasury instead of $9,000,000, as I understood the Senator from Massachusetts to say. The final footing in that statement, I am sure, was only $7,000,000 and something, after deducting $2,000,000 that have been appropriated to some other purpose or paid out for this very purpose, which I do not recollect.

What the law of 1864 required to be done was, that there should be awarded to each loyal person to whom a colored volunteer should owe service, a just compensation. The Senator from Massachusetts says that that just compensation is to be diminished below what it would otherwise be by the fact that at some indefinite period afterward, a year or two, slavery was abolished. Now, if it related to any other species of property as it is called, that certainly could not be a sound proposition, because, I take it, if a man's horse had been taken in this way, or any other species of property, subsequent events would not affect the valuation, which must be rated according to the state of things at the time the property was taken. Therefore, in my judgment, if a slaveholder was entitled to $300 when his slave was taken, he continued to be entitled to $300, although slavery was abolished two years afterward. I do not admit, for one, that the slaveholder was entitled, as a just compensation, to any sum whatever, because I think that, according to the theory of our Government, these slaves were so far persons as that the Government had a just claim upon them as upon all other persons for military service, and therefore that their owners were not entitled to any compensation in the nature of property any more than they were for their sons, or their white hired servants, or their free colored servants. But perhaps it is not the proper time to debate that question now. My only present proposition is, that taking this law of 1864 just as it stands, and taking the admitted fact that we do not know now, and cannot now ascertain, except by an indefinite estimate amounting to nothing more than a mere guess, how much will be required to fulfill the so-called obligation of this act, we ought not to make any provision for the payment out of the Treasury of this money until all the claims of these persons shall be ascertained and brought forward. Then will be time enough to provide for an appropriation to pay them.

Mr. JOHNSON. The honorable member from Vermont I have no doubt is right, and I endeavored to maintain that opinion in the Senate when it was proposed to enlist in the Army the slaves, that in their character of persons they owed allegiance to the United States and could be enlisted in the armies of the United States; but that was not what was done. Congress not only authorized their enlistment into the military service of the United States, but very properly declared that they should be free. They were not to return to their masters as slaves at the termination of their military service, but the moment they became soldiers of the United States that fact of itself gave them the right of freedom; and in that I concurred. I thought it would have been most unjust to summon those people into the field and submit them to the perils of war, reserving the right to return them afterward to a state of slavery. But another course was pursued. The language of the act of 1864 is, "and thereupon such slave shall be free." Free when? Free when he is a slave of a loyal master and shall be drafted and mustered into the service of the United States, and his master shall have a certificate thereof. Then he is to be free, and then the master is to be entitled to whatever may be allowed him under the provisions of this act. Now, although I do not propose to discuss the question (because, as I understand, the amount in the Treasury renders it wholly unnecessary) of the commutation fund, and that this act contains a contract between the United States and the master which compels the United States to pay the amount which it promises, the mode of payment, the provision that it was to be paid out of the commutation fund in the hands of the Treasury, was adopted by the United States for its own benefit. It was a specification of the fund out of which the payment was to be made, but had nothing to do with the obligation which the United States assumed by the law to pay the master whose slave, with his consent, went into the service of the United States. But the commutation fund is some seven or eight million dollars, as I understand.

Mr. CRESWELL. Nine million five hundred and fourteen thousand nine hundred and twenty-three dollars and forty-five cents, according to the report of the Secretary of War.

Mr. JOHNSON. Now, it is perfectly certain, I think, that that amount will be much more than sufficient to meet all the demands that can be made under the provisions of this section, with the aid of the amendment suggested by the honorable member from Massachusetts. The condition of the slaveholders in Maryland, whose slaves have gone into the service, is that commissioners were appointed to ascertain the amount that each was entitled to; and the commissioners have long since reported, and the amount would long since have been paid to the Maryland slaveholders if the United States had not abolished the commission and for a time used the fund for another purpose, or, rather, directed that the fund should not be used for this particular purpose under an apprehension that the wants of the United States might require it to be used for a different purpose. This fund bears no interest; and I appeal to the Senate to know whether, under the circumstances, when there can be no possible danger that a dollar will be taken out of the Treasury, except from the particular fund set apart for the purpose, it is not just and proper that the loyal men of Maryland, who not only consented but urged their slaves to go into the military service of the United States, (and who are the only class who can be paid under the provisions of this act,) should be paid now. If you will agree to pay interest on the amount from the time their servants went into the service of the United States, there would be some show of justice in delay; but they have lost the labor of their servants; they are obliged to employ hands at from ten to fifteen and twenty dollars a month; and many of them are actually ruined by the failure to collect the sum which you proposed to pay them out of the fund now in the Treasury, more than sufficient to meet, not only whatever demands they may have, but whatever like demands the State of Kentucky or any other State in the Union may have.

I say, as my friend and colleague said the other day, that if there are any men in the United States who should be treated with generosity, to say nothing of justice, it is the men who remained loyal to the Union and true to their duty and the flag of the Union in Maryland, who were slaveholders, and who were willing to let the institution go rather than see the Government of the Union put at hazard. Many of them contributed of their funds, as well as provided for putting their negroes into the service of the United States; and many of them are now in actual want because of our failure to do what by the act of 1864, more than two years ago, we promised to do—unable to receive the pittance, (for it was but a pittance, looking to the value of this kind of property, if property it can be called, before the war commenced,)—the pittance not to exceed $300, and, in many cases, not $100 or $150. There are a great many very poor men and some poor women who had two or three negroes, upon whom they depended for their support, and they are now left in a measure penniless. I submit, therefore, to the Senate that it would be not only just but grateful, grateful as a duty, that the United States should at once do what it can do now without danger, having promised to do it as far back as 1864.

Mr. CRESWELL. I desire to state, in reply to the remarks of the honorable Senator from Vermont, that having examined this subject with some care, I have no doubt whatever that the amount in the Treasury derived from commutations will be amply sufficient to pay for all these claims in the States where the claims can be made, to wit, Maryland, Delaware, Kentucky, and Missouri. The report of the Secretary of War shows that there is a balance of that fund answerable to these claims amounting to $9,514,923 45. As I stated the other day, in Maryland there were mustered into the Army of the United States between eight and nine thousand colored men, of whom about one half only were slaves. In Maryland and the eastern shore of Virginia, which were organized into one division, there were claims presented to the commission sitting in Maryland amounting to thirty-eight hundred and three. Of that number, the board passed upon ten hundred and sixty-five, and awarded in payment of those ten hundred and sixty-five claims, $222,450, or a fraction over $200 per slave. Now, if all the four thousand were allowed in the same ratio, there would only be required the sum of $800,000 to pay all these claims in Maryland; but the chief commissioner there goes on to make the remark, and he shows from his statement, that the sum of $762,000 would pay all the claims in Maryland and the eastern shore of Virginia that would be allowed by that commission. That being the case, it would leave the sum of nearly nine million dollars answerable to the claims in other States, which I am satisfied will be more than sufficient, because, if we take of the number of colored troops enlisted in those States the usual proportion of slaves, we shall find that the number will be so far reduced that even at the sum of $300 per capita the amount will not exceed $9,000,000.

The difficulty will be just this, if the settlement of these claims is postponed: we have now proposed a constitutional amendment in which there is a flat denial of any power in Congress to pay for slaves of any description. If the satisfaction of these claims is now rejected, you will make all those interested in these States who think they have been unfairly dealt with active against the ratification of the constitutional amendment, which is a difficulty that I want to see removed from the political field. I desire to have that constitutional amendment adopted, but I know that human nature is such that where men's interests lie directly in an opposite direction, you cannot secure from them that support for the amendment which might otherwise be obtained. I hope, therefore, that the proposition will pass in the shape in which it now is and that these claims will be at once disposed of.

Mr. WILSON. In order to reach the objection made by the Senator from Vermont I move to amend my amendment by adding to it the following proviso:

Provided, That no money shall be paid under the foregoing provision until the final report of the commissioners under the act aforesaid shall have been made of all of the claims embraced under the twenty-fourth section of the said act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WILSON. I will simply say that this is a provision which forbids the payment of any money under this act until the commissioners who are to be appointed for Maryland, Kentucky, and Missouri have made their final report and we have it all before us.

Mr. CRESWELL. Suppose, meanwhile, the constitutional amendment is adopted.

Mr. DAVIS. The amount of these bounties ought to have been ascertained two years ago. That has not been done, and consequently the owners of these slaves have been deprived of the money to which they are entitled under the act of 1864 up to the present time, and of course they never will have any interest allowed upon their claims. If there was any doubt as to the sufficiency of the fund specially appropriated to the payment of these claims, I would not make any objection whatever to the proposition now made by the Senator from Massachusetts; but when the commissioner who acted for Maryland and the eastern shore of Virginia, has reported that $700,000 and a fraction will be sufficient to meet every claim from that section of country, and there will be nearly $9,000,000 of this additional fund left to appropriate to Kentucky and Missouri and West Virginia, there cannot be any doubt whatever that the fund will be something like double what will be necessary to meet all these claims. I have no doubt that there will be a large surplus of this fund after all the claims are satisfied. If that be so, why postpone the payment of any claims until the commissioners have reported? It may be five years or more before the commissioners will report. I think that these men, who have already lain out of their money for two years longer than they ought to have done, ought not to be postponed indefinitely, and probably as long as five years, until there has been a report made by the commissioners.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 18, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Clark, Cowan, Edmunds, Foster, Grimes, Howe, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Poland, Pomeroy, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Train-bull, Wilson, and Yates—18.

YAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Chandler, Creswell, Davis, Guthrie, Hendricks, Johnson, Norton, Nye, Ramsey, Riddle, Van Winkle, and Willey—13.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Conness, Cragin, Dixon, Doollittle, Fessenden, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Kirkwood, McDougall, Nesmith, Sautsbury, Stewart, Wade, Williams, and Wright—17.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer an amendment, to come in as a new section at the end of the bill:

And be it further enacted, That there be paid to the several clerks of the Department of State twenty per cent. of the compensation now allowed to each, to commence from the 30th of June, 1865, and to continue until repealed by Congress; and a sum sufficient for this purpose is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

In support of this amendment I send to the Chair a petition from the clerks of the State Department, which I should like to have read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The petition of the undersigned, clerks in the Department of State, humbly represent that their salaries, which were fixed when gold was current and the prices of the necessities of life were comparatively low, are now entirely inadequate to their support with the most rigid economy. Indeed, some of them, who have been more fortunate than others in the enjoyment of small incomes from private sources, have from time to time been obliged to sacrifice the principal from which those incomes were derived, to provide themselves and their families with shelter and the plainest clothing and food. Many of them might earn more by obtaining employment elsewhere, but some of these have been so long in office that, in all humility, they deem it their duty to remain until it shall be otherwise decreed, at almost any sacrifice, believing that the knowledge and experience which they have gained is not their property, but a valuable one to the public, in whose service those qualifications have been acquired.

At the last session of Congress an appropriation was made for additional compensation to clerks in the Treasury Department. Your petitioners have no doubt of the wisdom of that measure, but regret that they may not have been deemed worthy of a similar boon.

Supposing, however, that the apparent partiality referred to may have been occasioned by an oversight, your petitioners appeal to your sense of justice to place them on a similar footing with the clerks in that Department, in respect to compensation.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will so ever pray.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is the same proposition that was moved by the Senator from Massachusetts to the consular and diplomatic bill, debated at some length, and resulted finally in the raising of the pay of Mr. Hunter. I trust that this precedent will not be set on this bill. If this appropriation now asked for the clerks of the State Department is made, of course, we shall have to extend it to all the other Departments. We passed a bill in relation to the Interior Department, but that bill and a bill for the Treasury Department have been laid on the table in the other House. I think, therefore, this is a bootless controversy. This proposition, I think, will require about a day to discuss it. I hope it will not be insisted on. The whole subject of the reorganization of the clerical force of the various Departments and the pay of the civil officers of the Government has at this session been referred to a joint select committee with a view to reexamine and readjust the whole civil service of the Government, and I hope it will be left there. That committee is required to sit during the recess, and, probably will be able to report at the next session a fair and liberal compensation to all civil officers of the Government.

Mr. SUMNER. It will be difficult to add anything to the argument in the petition which has been read; and the Senator from Ohio will pardon me if I say that I think his objection does not meet the case. He calls this a bootless controversy. I do not so regard it, and if the Senator remembered what passed on the former occasion I think he would not have used that language. When I then made the same motion which I now make, according to my recollection, the chairman of the Committee on Finance objected rather to the amendment of that bill, the consular and diplomatic bill, than to the proposition itself; he said, "Make it one of the other appropriation bills that are to follow." I was not in my seat, being absent from here, when the legislative appropriation bill was under consideration or I should have moved it then. I am now in my seat when the miscellaneous appropriation bill is under consideration, and as the amendment is perfectly in order and perfectly germane I now move it.

I have said that it would be difficult to add anything to the argument in the petition, and I may be permitted to remind the Senate, in addition to that argument, that these gentlemen have now only the same pay that they had before the war; there has been no change with regard to any one of them, while we all know that everything else has risen in price. All that they are obliged to pay for their support is more than it was before, and yet they have only the small means that they had before.

There is another consideration in connection with this class of public servants of which, perhaps, the Senator is not aware. In the organization of the State Department there are no heads of bureaus, as, for instance, in the organization of the Treasury and of the Interior Department. There are no other persons than a chief clerk, and then clerks under him. I understand that Mr. Webster, while he was Secretary of State, had it in contemplation to organize the State Department on the model of the Treasury Department, so that there should be a number of bureaus with a bureau head, receiving a pay proportionate to the pay received by the heads of bureaus in the Treasury Department. That has never been done; so that you will perceive that all the servants of the Government in the State Department are on the simple pay of clerks, and nothing else. And yet, sir, during this time, while their compensation has been diminishing in value their services have been increasing in extent. I have here a very curious memorandum, which is not uninteresting, illustrative of the increase of business in that Department. For instance, the number of dispatches to our legation at London, in 1851, was twenty-nine; in 1852, thirty-eight; and in 1853, sixty-five. Now, come to the years of the war and down to the present time, and see the difference. In 1861 the dispatches to our legation at London was two hundred and twenty; in 1862, three hundred and seventeen; in 1863, three hundred and eighty; in 1864, four hundred and sixty-three; and in 1865, four hundred and forty-nine, in contrast with twenty-nine dispatches, which was all that were sent in 1851.

My colleague asks me if it would not have been wiser to have sent fewer. That question is not involved in this discussion. I adduce the facts simply to illustrate the increase of business on the part of these employés. This shows how much more they have had to do, and yet they receive only the compensation they had before.

Here is another curious illustration. The correspondence of the Department of State with the British legation in Washington, has latterly been as follows: in 1861 there were two hundred and forty-eight letters addressed by the Department to the British legation; in 1862, five hundred and twenty-nine; in 1863, twelve hundred and eighty-eight; and in 1864, twenty-six hundred and seventy-six; making, as the Senate will see, a very large number of letters every day addressed to the British legation.

I mention these facts in order to bring home to your attention the increase of business in that Department, the burden of which has necessarily fallen upon these public servants. You have been raising salaries elsewhere. The other House has set the example by adding, I think, twenty-five per cent. to the pay of its own servants. You have various similar propositions before you. I understand that the State of New York has added twenty-five per cent. to the compensation of its public servants. The State of Massachusetts has added twenty per cent. recently to the compensation of its public servants. Now, I ask that you should add twenty per cent. to the compensation of the clerks in the State Department, whose labor has increased probably beyond that of any other public servants of the Government. I ask this, sir, as an act of justice to them. I do not see how you can refuse it; indeed, I think the argument is unanswerable. I do not think the Senate ought to postpone it, according to the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio, to await the report of any committee that shall undertake to remodel the civil service of the Government. Let us do this act of justice now, and that committee may proceed with its work; and I, for one, shall be ready to adopt the result. I do not wish to see the act of justice which I now propose postponed for the report of any committee.

Mr. SHERMAN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is one statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts that I wish to correct. Up to this time, all efforts made by special departments of the Government to increase their pay have failed in one or the other House. The bill relating to the Treasury Department has failed undoubtedly for this session. I said the bill was laid on the table. Instead of that, I understand that it was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that is worse yet. The bill regarding the Interior Department has also been laid by, and will not pass; so that no bill has yet passed changing the salaries of the civil officers of the Government. But on the other hand, the House of Representatives, I think, originated a measure for the appointment of a special committee to sit during the recess to make the pay of the civil officers of the Government uniform, and to regulate it. I submit to the Senate whether we ought to legislate in view of the interests of any one Department of the Government, and that the least important of all. The most unimportant Department in this Government is the State Department. I think it could be abolished with less injury to the Government than any other, because our relations with foreign nations are generally of little account. Indeed, I think if we dispensed with most of our ministers abroad, we should be better off. We do not care much what foreign Governments say of us, or think of us, or write of us; and I have no doubt that nine tenths of the dispatches to which my friend has referred had better have remained unwritten. We should have got on just as well without them. No foreign nation helped us when we were in trouble; and now that we are out of trouble we do not want the help of any foreign nation.

It seems to me that to commence with the State Department and increase the compensation of clerks in that Department before we are prepared to act upon the general subject is simply wrong, and I hope the Senate will vote down this proposition, and thus relieve us from the whole controversy about increasing the compensation of civil officers during this session. Let that matter go to the committee who have charge of it, and let them report at the next session.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator, it seems to me, goes too far when he says that this case stands alone. He has already submitted that there has been an increase in the Treasury Department.

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir; I said distinctly that that bill failed in the House of Representatives.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well; but it has had the sanction of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. The answer to our action was a resolution for the investigation of the whole matter. In regard to the increase by the House of the pay of their own officers, that only applies, I find on inquiry, to a few, and even that allowance will not be paid by the accounting officer of the Treasury Department unless it is sanctioned by the Senate.

Mr. SUMNER. The very bill which the Senator is now engineering through the Senate in its sixth section proposes an increase of the compensation of the Metropolitan police force of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is to be paid by the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and is made on the recommendation of the District authorities here who pay it themselves. It is not paid out of the Treasury.

Mr. ANTHONY. They only pay a part of it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. A small part.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well, it is an increase; and why is it made? It is because the existing compensation is not enough. Look at the bill before us. On page 28, the committee which the Senator from Ohio represents brings forward a proposition for adding to the salary of an assistant cashier in a certain place fifty dollars; from $1,000 it is made $1,050; the salary of teller from $1,300 is made $1,400; the salary of book-keeper, instead of $1,500 is made $1,800; they add $300 there. The salary of two clerks, which originally was $2,500, is made $2,600. Now, I propose, just in conformity with the report of the committee which the Senator represents, an increase in the compensation of the clerks of the State Department. I do not ask so large an increase as that Senator or the committee which he represents asks us to give to certain other clerks. But the Senator replies that the State Department is the least important Department of the Government. That raises an immense political question which I do not think it would be very advantageous for us to discuss in this warm weather. It would be a very good discussion, perhaps, for students at college; for boys at school; it would be a very good theme, which Department of this Government is upon the whole the most important; is the State Department, or is it not, the most insignificant Department of the Government? I admit that would be a very good theme for college youths to discuss, on which, perhaps, something might be said on both sides. I doubt whether it can be discussed very profitably in this Chamber. I know the extravagant theories on certain sides that we had better dispense with our whole diplomatic service. I do not go into that, because when a person has made up his mind to dispense with all that service, I can imagine that it would be very easy for him to say he would not pay the clerks here at home that copy the dispatches. But, sir, in making this motion I proceed on the ground that the State Department is an existing Department of this Government. I will not dwell on its merits or its importance, whether it is performing its functions in the Government, employing these clerks. All I insist is, that employed as they are and rendering faithful service to the Government, they shall have a compensation which shall be to a certain extent commensurate with the labor that they give. Sir, the "laborer is worthy of his hire," and I know not why he is not worthy of his hire when he serves in the Department of State as well as if he served in one of those banks which seem to have found the patronage of the Senator from Ohio. I insist, therefore, that the Senator from Ohio shall go back to his own bill—

Mr. SHERMAN. They are not banks; they are United States depositories; the cashiers of these depositories get less than your clerks who are suffering so much.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator has undertaken to lead in an increase of salaries. Now,

I simply follow his lead. He knows very well how happy I am, and proud, always to follow his distinguished lead. I follow it now, and I simply ask that he should do by these servants of the Government in the State Department what he has done for other servants of the Government elsewhere.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 16, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Davis, Doolittle, Harris, Hendricks, Johnson, Morgan, Nesmith, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Riddle, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Willey—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Chandler, Clark, Guthrie, Howard, Lane, Morrill, Norton, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Williams, and Wilson—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Conness, Cowan, Cragin, Creswell, Dixon, Edmunds, Essenden, Foster, Grimes, Henderson, Howe, Kirkwood, McDougal, Saulsbury, Stewart, Wade, Wright, and Yates—18.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer another amendment to come in at the end of the bill, as a separate section, in regard to which I am sure there will be no question, as it proposes to reduce rather than add to the expenses of the Government. It is an amendment which I am directed to offer by the Committee on Foreign Relations:

And be it further enacted, That so much of the act approved March 3, 1863, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, for the year ending June 30, 1864, and for the year ending the 30th of June, 1865, and for other purposes," as appropriates $3,750 for a minister resident in Greece, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to offer one more amendment, to come in on page 6, after line three hundred and seventy-four of section one:

For unusual extra services rendered under the amnesty proclamation of 29th May, 1865, by George Bartle, clerk of pardons in the Department of State, $1,000.

The Senate are not perhaps aware that they have already made a similar appropriation at the suggestion of the Attorney General for services rendered in his Department. His letter is as follows:

ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, April 13, 1866.

SIR: The President's proclamation of amnesty of May 29, 1865, imposed labor on the clerks of this Department unusual in responsibility and severity.

For many months the official hours of work were more than doubled, and neither Sabbath nor holiday were known by them.

It is in my opinion simply a matter of justice to make some recompense for services so exceptional. For this purpose I submit the following as an additional clause to the appropriation bill:

For unusual and extra services performed by the clerks of this office between June 1, 1865, and May 1, 1866, $3,000, to be apportioned as may be deemed just by the Attorney General.

I am not satisfied with this manner of accomplishing the object I desire, but it is the best I can find to recommend.

I am, sir, very respectfully yours,

JAMES SPEED,
Attorney General,

Hon. THADDEUS STEVENS, Chairman of Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

In pursuance of this recommendation it is already proposed to give to the principal clerk of pardons in the Attorney General's Office the sum of $1,000 and to his two assistants $500 each. Now, the motion which I make is simply to do by the pardon clerk in the State Department, who has had in his department precisely the same services to perform which have been performed by the pardon clerk in the Attorney General's Department, what we have done in that case. His services, I am told, have been very great, day and night at work in order to carry out these purposes under the amnesty proclamation. I hope there will be no objection to it. Certainly there cannot be unless you are disposed to set aside what has already been done, I believe, in regard to the clerks in the Attorney General's Department.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I believe that a similar proposition, or the same proposition, was submitted to the Committee on Finance and considered, and it was the conclusion of the committee that this appropriation ought not to be made for the reason that this should not be an exceptional case. It had been made to appear to that committee that during the war there were very many clerks and persons engaged in the different Departments of the Government who were employed during nights and on Sundays, and at times when the law did not require them to work; and it did not appear to the committee that there was any reason why this particular individual should be designated and his pay increased when it was not advisable, and perhaps not practicable, to increase the pay of all other clerks and employés in the different Departments who had expended the same amount of labor; and if this particular individual is to be paid, then whenever any application is made by any clerk or any person engaged in any Department for labor performed at unusual hours on account of a particular press of business, of course Congress will be bound to pay for the extra labor. It will be seen that there would be no end to these appropriations. I believe there was some proposition made in reference to the Attorney General's Office, and I am not certain as to whether the application was sanctioned or not; but if it was, it was upon some peculiar ground that did not apply generally to the employés in the other Departments.

I simply state to the Senate what the Committee on Finance determined on the subject. If it is thought advisable to pay in this particular case, then I can see no reason why we ought not to pay all the clerks and employés in the Navy Department, in the War Department, in the Treasury Department, who have performed an unusual amount of labor during the late war—pay them for all their extra services.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator from Oregon has touched the key-note in his argument. He says, do not do this unless the case is exceptional. I understood that to be his argument—unless it was exceptional. Now, sir, I catch that argument from the Senator and repeat it. I present this case as exceptional. It is not a precedent that the Senator need dread unless he can show a case hereafter equally exceptional in character. The Attorney General recommended the payment of extra compensation to the clerks in his Department that had got up a large amount of pardons under the amnesty proclamation. Is not that exceptional in our history? I trust we shall never have any such thing repeated, never another amnesty proclamation or another crop of pardons under it that shall enlist these exceptional services of the clerks in two different Departments. I present it to you, sir, as exceptional, just as the Senator from Oregon insists that such a case should be in order to justify the intervention of the Senate. It is exceptional. The case of the clerks of the Attorney General was treated as exceptional, and I present the case of this gentleman of the State Department as exceptional also. He worked night and day to get up these pardons, to do the mechanical part of these pardons under the amnesty proclamation. I hope no Senator will raise the question of the value of these pardons. I certainly should not wish to argue it.

Mr. MORRILL. I should like to ask the Senator a question. I ask whether the twenty per cent. just voted here applies to this clerk.

Mr. SUMNER. I think it should, and for this reason: the Senate understands that this is compensation for extra services performed by this gentleman; the twenty per cent. is an addition to the compensation of all of them for their every day services.

Mr. MORRILL. That includes this man?

Mr. SUMNER. Yes, it includes him.

Mr. MORRILL. He gets twenty per cent. on this?

Mr. SUMNER. I hope there can be no doubt about it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I was willing to vote for the Senator's other amendment, because I thought it stood on something like a principle, that is, that the compensation taken generally in view of the expense of living here is not sufficient, and I would vote for it; but to undertake to estimate how much work a particular clerk does and pay him something more for that is an impossibility. I recollect to have heard a clerk mention to me that for four years he had not taken a holiday, he had not been out of the office a single Sunday for four years—a clerk in the ordinance department; and I presume that is very common. I am not willing to vote upon a supposed estimate of the amount of work one clerk does over another. I want to say to the Senate that in my judgment this is not a parallel case with the Attorney General's Office. As I understand, practically, the clerk in the Attorney General's Office has to examine the case, has to adjudicate upon it; he has to exercise judgment; while the clerk in the State Department performs simply mechanical duty; he has to record that which is adjudged in the Attorney General's Office. There is a very great difference. The one is the exercise of clerical ability simply, the other the exercise of judgment upon the merits of the case.

Mr. DAVIS. I congratulate my friend from Indiana and the country that we shall soon have an Attorney General who will not need a clerk to write his opinions for him. [Laughter.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHANDLER. I offer, from the Committee on Commerce, the following amendment, to come in on page 8, after line one hundred and seventy-four of section one:

For the erection of a light-house at Beaver bay on Lake Superior, $15,000: Provided, That the Light-House Board of the Treasury Department, after due examination, shall deem that a light-house at that point is necessary.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask if that comes from a committee.

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir. There is a recommendation from the Light-House Board and from the Secretary of the Treasury which I will have read, if Senators desire it. ["No, no."]

Mr. SHERMAN. Never mind. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. In the same section, on page 9, after line one hundred and ninety, I offer the following amendment from the Committee on Commerce:

For light-house and pier light at South Haven, in the State of Michigan, $6,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is that from a committee, too?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. In these cases where there are new lights and they have not come before the Committee on Finance I should like, at least, to have the letter of the board read.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is a report of the Light-House Board, and likewise a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SHERMAN. The letter of the Light-House Board is all I want.

Mr. CHANDLER. I send it up to be read. The Secretary read the following:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD,
WASHINGTON, March 12, 1866.

SIR: I have had the honor to receive the letter from Hon. Z. CHANDLER, chairman of the Committee on Commerce, with inclosed petition of citizens of South Haven, Michigan, praying an appropriation for the purpose of building a light-house at the mouth of South Black river, Michigan, referred to this board for report.

In reply I am directed to state that the amount asked for by the petitioners is in the opinion of the board greater than necessary for the purpose of building a pier light, which is all that is recommended. For such a structure the sum of $6,000 would be sufficient, provided the site be given to the United States by the parties owning the pier, the Government having done no work upon this pier or harbor.

The papers in the case are herewith returned.
Very respectfully, W. B. SHUBRICK, Chairman.

Hon. HUGH McCULLOCH, Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. On page 10, line two hundred and twenty of section one, I move to amend by striking out "$90,000" and inserting "$200,000;" so that the clause will read:

For completion of pier of protection and repairing Waugoshance light-house, at straits of Mackinac, $200,000.

That is the amount which the Light-House Board state will make the work permanent.

We had Commodore Shubrick and other members of the board before us, with the engineers, and the committee were unanimous in recommending that $200,000 be appropriated. This is perhaps one of the most important lights in the United States; it is in the open lake; and the pressure of the ice is so great that it must be protected by very strong stone abutments; and the committee were unanimous in the opinion that the amount should be $200,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. If there is any letter from any one I should like to hear it.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is a report from the Light-House Board. I send it to the desk.

Mr. SHERMAN. We have here the estimates from the Department.

Mr. CHANDLER. Here are the estimates, and the Clerk will read the report for the benefit of the Senator.

The Secretary commenced to read the report of the Light-House Board.

Mr. GRIMES. Is the whole of that document to be read?

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator from Michigan tell us the facts, I suppose.

Mr. CHANDLER. The estimates are there precisely as recommended by the committee. The report is rather voluminous; it contains, I think, about sixty or eighty pages; but it will probably enlighten and amuse the Senator from Ohio, and I hope the Senate will consent to have it read for his enlightenment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does any Senator object to the reading of the report?

Mr. CLARK. We do not want all that.

Mr. SHERMAN. I, representing the Committee on Finance, will state that we have appropriated all that the Secretary of the Treasury estimated for, all that was asked by the Light-House Board, and now it is proposed to increase the appropriation for a single light-house from $90,000 to $200,000, and all the Senator has to say in favor of that proposition is to send a mass of manuscript to the table. I am perfectly willing to hear it.

Mr. CHANDLER. In that report from the Light-House Board are contained the estimates of the engineers for the completion of that work. We had the engineer of that board before us; we had Commodore Shubrick; we took the testimony of the most competent engineers on this subject, and came to the conclusion unanimously that that sum was required. The Senator has taken an old estimate and not a recent one.

Mr. SHERMAN. We have taken the annual estimates as they lie on our table. It may cost $200,000 or it may cost $1,000,000 to complete the work; but all they asked for as an expenditure during the next fiscal year was the amount we appropriate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I can turn to the estimates if the Clerk will hand me the document:

"In its report for 1865 the board called the attention of the honorable Secretary of the Treasury to the matter and renewed its estimate of $90,000 as for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, and further estimated for $110,000 to complete the work during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867. These estimates are now before Congress."

This is the last report from the Light-House Board.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the date of that report?

Mr. CHANDLER. January 26, 1866.

Mr. SHERMAN. We have the estimates made out officially on the 1st of December and submitted to us for the annual appropriations.

Mr. CHANDLER. This report refers to that, and says that in that report the board "renewed its estimate of $90,000 as for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, and further estimated for $110,000 to complete the work during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867."

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand now precisely how it is. Last year we appropriated $90,000 for this work, and that is part of the $200,000 spoken of, and now they ask enough to complete it.

Mr. CHANDLER. The appropriation failed last year; it was in the omnibus bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was renewed, probably.

Mr. CHANDLER. It was never renewed: This is the whole amount. The $90,000 appropriation was in the omnibus bill that was lost last year. Two hundred thousand dollars is the estimate of the engineer to complete the work. Perhaps this is the most important light-house in the United States, and less than this sum will not make it a permanent, substantial work.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can only state that I have now the estimates of the Light-House Board before me, and I find in them this item:

For completion of pier of protection, and repairing and renovating Waugoshance Light-house at the straits of Mackinaw, $110,000.

That is the item in the annual estimates upon which all these appropriation bills are founded, and it seems that the House of Representatives lowered it from $110,000 to $90,000. I now remember the case. One hundred and ten thousand dollars was all that was asked for to complete the work. It may be that the $90,000 has been already expended.

Mr. CHANDLER. The $90,000 was not intended to complete the work, and if that sum had been appropriated last year, $110,000 would now be sufficient; but whereas the $90,000 was not appropriated last year, they now ask for the whole amount requisite to complete the work, which is $200,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. But the estimate which I have read was made months after the defeat of the bill of last year. That bill failed in March, 1865, and this estimate was made in November, 1865.

Mr. GRIMES. I suggest to the Senators from Michigan and Ohio that this amendment be postponed for a few minutes until they can examine these reports and satisfy themselves on the question. I suppose there is some misunderstanding, which will be removed when the two Senators have conferred together.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection to that course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This amendment will be laid aside for the present, if there be no objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have another amendment to propose, to come in after line two hundred and forty-three of the first section:

For George W. Fish, late acting consul at Ningpo, China, $1,825 04, payable out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, being the amount due him for consular services at Ningpo, and for exchange due.

Mr. SHERMAN. I raise the point of order that that is a private claim.

Mr. CHANDLER. No, sir; it is from a committee and is to pay for consular services.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is a private claim to pay money alleged to be past due for services. I raise the point of order.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Committee on Commerce never presents any improper appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is a private claim; but if the Senator desires he will take the sense of the Senate on it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Chair rule it to be out of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it out of order; but if the Senator requests he will take the sense of the Senate on the question whether it shall be received or not. ["Oh, no."]

Mr. CHANDLER. It is a very meritorious claim. This man actually performed the services and drew his drafts in accordance with directions from the State Department. On his return from there he immediately went into the Army and was in the military service when the drafts arrived and were protested, and he was obliged at great sacrifices and loss to raise $1,825 to take up his own drafts drawn by direction of the Secretary of State, and for which services were performed. He actually had paid his office rent, paid his clerks, paid for his stationery, out of this very sum that is now his due; and certainly if there was ever any just claim put on an appropriation bill, I think this is one. I ask for the sense of the Senate upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair submits to the Senate whether this amendment can be received.

Mr. SHERMAN. It cannot be under the rule, being a private claim. I ask that the rule be enforced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has ruled it to be a private claim, but was willing to submit the question for the sense of the Senate, if desired.

Mr. SHERMAN. The question should be put, then, is this a private claim? The Senator himself admits that it is, and that is the end of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not regard the amendment as in order.

Mr. GRIMES. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to propose the following amendment, to come in at the end of the first section of the bill:

For the erection of a chapel in the Naval Academy grounds at Annapolis, Maryland, $25,000.

When the naval appropriation bill was under consideration we had before us a recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, based upon the report of Admiral Porter, in command of the Naval School, and of the chaplain at that post, recommending this appropriation. Having been at the Naval Academy upon several occasions myself, and knowing that there was a small chapel there, I thought that a considerable portion of the money proposed to be expended might be saved by enlarging the present chapel; and at that time, at my instance, instead of appropriating the $25,000 that was asked for, the Senate appropriated $7,000 to enlarge the old chapel. I have been there since with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. MORRILL.] We examined the chapel and after conversation with the officers in charge and from personal examination I became satisfied that I was mistaken in proposing to enlarge the present chapel; and in confirmation of that opinion I desire to read one paragraph from the report of the Board of Visitors who have recently visited the Academy, composed as it was of some of the ablest gentlemen in civil life and in the naval service, in which they say:

"The board learned with regret that it is proposed to try the experiment of enlarging the present chapel of the Academy. It is, in our judgment, a mistake to spend any considerable sum of money upon a building which, even with the proposed enlargement, must still be not only unsuited for its purposes in other respects, but of inadequate size; and we therefore recommend the erection of a new chapel, of a character better suited to its purposes, and of sufficient capacity to make it possible to assemble under its roof for divine worship all the midshipmen in the Academy and their officers of government and instruction."

Mr. JOHNSON. How do you get at the $25,000?

Mr. GRIMES. That is what they recommended.

Mr. MORRILL. Having been referred to by the Senator from Iowa as having been present with him at the Naval Academy on a certain occasion, I can bear most decided testimony to the unsuitableness of the structure which was intended to be repaired. I think the money appropriated there would have been worse than thrown away. The only surprising thing to me was, that the honorable Senator from Iowa, who professes to have been there on a previous occasion, should have consented to an appropriation for the repair of such a structure as that was, and I am led to suppose that he must have been there under circumstances which could not have been favorable to a correct examination.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Iowa what is to be done with the present appropriation for the enlargement of the chapel.

Mr. GRIMES. It is expected that that will lapse to the surplus fund in the Treasury.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I think it better to repeal it; and I move to amend the amendment by adding to it, "and the existing appropriation for the enlargement of the chapel is hereby repealed."

Mr. GRIMES. I accept that.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. I have another amendment from the Committee on Naval Affairs to come in as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That midshipmen and acting midshipmen in the Navy of the United States shall be entitled to one ration or commutation therefor.

I hold in my hand a document that has been published at the present session, and I suppose is on the desks of members, a very full and very satisfactory report of the Board of Visitors that recently assembled at the Naval Academy for the examination of that institution. Among other things their attention was called to the subsistence, quarters, and everything of that description furnished to the young men, and I beg leave to read to the Senate a letter written to the board at their request by Paymaster Abbott, who was stationed at the Academy, showing the amount of expenses that each of the young men at the Academy is compelled to undergo. He says:

PAYMASTER'S OFFICE,
UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY,
ANNAPOLIS, MARYLAND, May 25, 1866.

SIR: To your letter of the 23d instant, requesting information for the Board of Visitors in regard to the allowances, expenses, &c., of midshipmen, I respectfully reply as follows:

Midshipmen have no allowances in addition to their yearly pay, which is $500, and from which fifty dollars per annum is reserved until their graduation. The statement appended will acquaint you with their necessary expenses for the current academic year:

Subsistence, @ $22 1/2 month, for eight months.....	$176 00
Washing and mending, @ $3 1/2 month, for eight months.....	24 00
Room furniture, annual.....	5 43
Servant, @ 12 1/2 cents 1/2 month, for eight months.....	1 00
Barber, and one bath 1/2 week, hot or cold, @ $1 1/2 month.....	8 00
Clothing.....	198 00
Text-books, average.....	24 50
Stationery and drawing materials.....	20 00
Assessment for band, 50 cents 1/2 month, for eight months.....	4 00
	<hr/> $490 53

There have been miscellaneous expenses, (among which mending is included,) such as postage, dentist, and express, but these vary so much in individual cases that no specified amount can be designated as applicable to all. Table furniture is provided by the commissary without expense to the midshipmen.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
CHARLES W. ABBOTT,
Paymaster United States Navy.
Lieutenant Commander S. B. LUCE,
Commandant Midshipmen, Naval Academy.

Admiral Porter gives the expenses per month for the three months spent at sea:

NAVAL ACADEMY,
ANNAPOLIS, MARYLAND, May 28, 1866.
SIR: In reply to your letter of the 28th instant, asking, in behalf of a committee of the Board of Visitors, to be informed as to the duration of the cruises of the practice vessels in 1865, and the cost of subsistence and other items paid by a midshipman during that cruise, I have to state that the midshipmen were embarked on the 13th, and that the practice vessels sailed from Newport, Rhode Island, on the 20th of June, and arrived at this place on the 12th of September last, making a cruise of two months and twenty-five days, and that the cost of subsistence of each midshipman per day was 49 1/2 cents, or per month of thirty-one days.....

Washing per month.....	$15 42
Contribution per month to band.....	3 00
	<hr/> $18 92

This statement includes all disbursements made by the paymasters of the several practice vessels for the midshipmen who performed the cruise of 1865.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,
DAVID D. PORTER,
Rear Admiral and Superintendent Naval Academy,
Surgeon D. HARLAN, United States Navy.

Add that amount per month for three months to the sum expended for their support during eight months on shore, and you have $517 69 a year, which is $17 69 more than this Government allows them. Then out of this $500 it is to be remembered there is reserved fifty dollars immediately upon their entering to cover any contingencies that may occur, such as their being sent away and being compelled to pay the expenses of their travel to reach their friends. Calling the fifty dollars which is reserved in the Treasury an expense, their expenses are really $67 69 more than the Government pays them.

This amendment proposes to give them one ration, which is thirty cents a day, amounting to $109 50 a year, which will give these young men about forty dollars a year more than their actual expenses. It will be observed that there is no deduction made here for pocket money or anything of that kind: I have taken the trouble to look into the way in which the larger item in this account, $198 for clothing, is expended, and I find that all the articles are obtained upon the most economical method possible; a suit of clothes is furnished complete to each of these lads at forty-six dollars and charged against the $500 we allow them per year.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know whether it is worth while to appeal to the Senate not to pass this class of amendments upon this appropriation bill. The effect of this amendment is to increase the pay of the naval cadets. If we do it, the same application will be made on behalf of the Army cadets. I do not think this is the proper place to legislate on that subject. The Senator from Iowa can report a bill at any time for this purpose. If we put this amendment on this bill we shall have the same application from the Army. These young gentlemen now get $500 a year toward aiding them in their education. They get the benefit of tuition and all various facilities and advantages extended to them by the Government of the United States. At any rate, I hope this bill will not be loaded down with this class of amendments. The compensation was fixed at $500, I think about two years ago, both for West Point and Annapolis, and I trust it will not be altered in this appropriation bill.

Mr. GRIMES. It was fixed more than two years ago. It was fixed four years ago, in 1862.

Mr. SHERMAN. Since the beginning of the war.

Mr. GRIMES. In 1862, before high prices. I do not know when the law fixing the amount to be paid the cadets at West Point was passed. I remember that the amount paid to naval midshipmen was fixed in June, 1862, four years ago. The Senator says that these young men are educated at the public expense. That is true; but they are educated at the public expense because we think it to our advantage so to educate them; not as a gratuity bestowed on these young men, not for their benefit, but for our benefit. Let me say that a great many of them have passed into the Academy from apprenticeship, who when they first entered the apprenticeship were mere waifs upon the surface of society. How are they going to be able to keep up their standing in the Academy if it costs them $67 69 more than the Government pays? I have not recommended any very great increase of pay, but simply enough, at the instance of the Superintendent of the Academy and the academic faculty, to keep them along without any pocket money.

The amendment was agreed to—ayes eight—eens, noes not counted.

Mr. CHANDLER. I offer the following amendment, on page 11, after line two hundred and forty-three of section one:

For R. P. Parrott, for building an iron light-house at Cape Canaveral, Florida, $12,198 35.

Mr. SHERMAN. I raise the point of order—

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the letter of the Secretary be read.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not worth while. I raise the point of order that it is a private claim.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suppose the Senator will admit that every dollar we appropriate goes to somebody. Now, I will strike out the name of R. P. Parrott, if that will improve the case in the Senator's mind. It is for building a light-house at Cape Canaveral. It so happens that R. P. Parrott's name was placed in it; but that can be struck out.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is it not for money due to him for building a light-house?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is a private claim. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is a private claim.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I move this amendment from the select committee on ventilation, to come in on page 14, immediately after the appropriation for the Capitol extension:

For improvements in the Senate wing of the Capitol proposed in the report of the joint select committee of the two Houses upon the improvement of the Halls of Congress made at the last session, and approved and recommended at the present session by the select committee of the Senate upon the ventilation and sanitary condition of the Senate wing of the Capitol, the sum of $117,635 25; and the said improvements shall be made and executed under the management and direction of Charles F. Anderson, as architect and superintendent, upon plans or specifications and details to be submitted to and approved by Dr. Thomas Antisell; and all necessary contracts for work and materials shall be made by the Commissioner of Public Buildings with the concurrence of the architect and all accounts and expenditures for said sums shall be examined and certified to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment by said Commissioner. The compensation of said architect and superintendent shall be at the rate heretofore paid to the superintending architect of the Capitol extension, payable quarterly out of the foregoing appropriation, commencing from and after the passage of this act.

I suppose it would be best to have the report of the committee on ventilation at the present session read in connection with this amendment.

At the last session of Congress an elaborate report was made by a joint committee of the two Houses, recommending precisely the improvements now contemplated. An appropriation, in accordance with their recommendation, was put upon the miscellaneous appropriation bill by the Senate last year, but without any debate, in the expiring hours of the session; and the committee of conference on the part of the Senate, in meeting a like committee from the House, abandoned the proposed appropriation, and they did it upon grounds which were perhaps unexceptionable. That bill was loaded down with enormous amounts of undigested or unexamined matter, and this section was of that character. The committee had not leisure to examine the subject, and it was abandoned, as I said before, along with a number of other sections in dispute.

At the present session the select Senate committee took up the investigation and went over the whole field of inquiry again, and we now report to the Senate the amendment which I have proposed. In the report at the present session the committee have not gone over the grounds covered by the former report, but they have called attention to leading and important points, which sufficiently vindicate the measure. Without consuming the time of the Senate in a prolonged debate upon all the points involved, I propose, as this subject is important, and as it will go to the House of Representatives and be the subject of reference hereafter, to have the brief report of the select committee at the present session read.

The Secretary read the following report, made by Mr. BUCKALEW on the 18th instant:

The select committee on ventilation report:

That a joint select committee of the two Houses of Congress was appointed under a joint resolution, passed at the first session of the Thirty-Eighth Congress, to examine into the condition of the Senate Chamber and Hall of the House of Representatives as regards their lighting, heating, and ventilation, and their acoustic properties, and the defects and disadvantages existing in the same. The committee consisted of three members from each House, and under authority of the resolution of appointment made an elaborate written report to their respective Houses upon the subjects referred to them in February, 1865. (See Senate committee report No. 123, Thirty-Eighth Congress, second session.) The report was accompanied by sundry documents and the evidence taken before the committee.

This committee, concurring in the main in the reasoning and conclusions of that report, and having reinvestigated the subjects covered by it, have now to recommend the carrying into effect of the plan of improvements contained in said report.

In making further observations upon the plan of improvement, the committee will confine themselves to the Senate wing of the Capitol, with the condition of which, in regard to its ventilation and sanitary condition, they are particularly concerned.

The committee are impressed with the conviction that perfect or satisfactory ventilation of the Senate Chamber cannot be secured so long as the present roof is retained. The area of glass surface for the admission of light in the Senate roof exceeds three thousand four hundred square feet. The remainder of the roof is much more extensive, and is composed of copper of a single thickness. Below this metal and glass roof, and separated from it by the air space used for lighting the Chamber, is the ceiling, extending over the whole Chamber, and composed of glass and iron. The inevitable result of these arrangements is, that the Hall becomes inordinately heated in summer by the direct admission of solar rays, and by the radiation of heat from the glass and metal, of which the roof and ceiling are composed. The temperature of the Hall is therefore often elevated to about 90° Fahrenheit during the sessions of the Senate; besides, at night sessions, the temperature on the floor of the Chamber is elevated as much as five or six degrees by the lights above the ceiling. This is the case in summer; but in winter, on the contrary, the roof generates cold in enormous quantity, producing irregularity and disturbance, as well as expense, in the ventilation of the Chamber. In short, the committee believe that the roof must be removed or changed in order to any satisfactory ventilation of the Hall, and that a change should also be made in the manner of lighting the Hall from that now established. The present roof was not a feature of the original plan of the architect by whom the wings of the Capitol extension were designed. By that plan light was to be admitted into the Hall by side windows placed in its upper elevation, which would give free ingress, whenever desired, to the external atmosphere, and would have avoided all the objections which exist to the present roof. By placing side windows around the Hall, making them double, and, when necessary, shading those exposed to the direct rays of the sun, perfect illumination of the Hall including the floor and galleries, would have been secured and all injurious influence of external heat or cold excluded; and, besides, the pure external air could, whenever desirable, have been admitted, by simply opening the windows; and then, by having a closed roof, made double or counter-ceiled, all noise of storms would have been excluded and most of the existing difficulties in ventilation avoided.

Two remedies have been proposed for the defects arising from the existing arrangements: the one, to abolish the present roof, substituting one of different construction, and to place side windows in the upper part of the Hall, as originally intended; the other, to remove the hall to the side of the Capitol wing. The objections to the latter plan are very strong, and may be regarded as decisive. The cost would be very great, many inconveniences would be encountered in the general arrangement of the wings, and the results would not be entirely satisfactory as to the Hall itself. Side windows near the level of the floor would admit some noise; the light from them would be direct and offensive in certain situations; they would, when open, produce currents of air directly upon members, and would produce irregularities of temperature in the Hall. Besides, the difficulties of adopting a plan of regular and effective ventilation would recur upon us in adopting this arrangement.

But recurring to the other plan of windows in the upper part of the Hall, in connection with the other changes proposed by the architect, and recommended in the former report of the joint committee of the two Houses, we obtain, as the committee think, complete and satisfactory results. By abolishing the roof we secure the Hall from its direct and enormous influence upon temperature, avoid the noise of storms, and are enabled to obtain complete and regular control of the ventilation of the Hall. And by substituting a few lights with reflectors and ventilating chimneys for the present gas jets, we avoid the undue production of heat at night sessions. The plan also enables us to obtain pure air at all times with perfect facility, to hydrate it in winter in its passage to the Hall, and to cool it in summer, and to remove it with certainty and regularity at all times from the Hall before it becomes contaminated by respiration.

The committee will not repeat the explanations and reasonings of the former report, although they are necessary to the full comprehension of the subject. They will content themselves with referring to that report as satisfactory upon all the points and details of the plan now left unnoticed. But two points mentioned in the former report may deserve some further attention. The first is the exterior or upward elevation of the wing; and the second, the proposed downward movement of the air through the Hall in the process of ventilation.

The slight elevation of the central part of the wing, as proposed, will break the horizontal sky line of the building, and will conform to the order of architecture upon which the Capitol was designed. The outer lines of elevation will be behind the projections of the porticoes, colonnades, and most of the balustrading now placed upon the exterior walls. The committee believe the effect will be pleasing to the eye, while the work will be conformed to the principles of art. The attic designed will not be necessary to the practical results desired in the ventilation of the Senate wing, but may be vindicated as an architectural addition. It need not, however, be immediately erected.

The downward movement of air, in ventilating public buildings, discussed in the former report, is powerfully recommended by recent practice in Great Britain and France, and to some extent also in this country. It has been completely successful as applied to the Commons House of Parliament, and to other public structures in England, and it is the accepted system in France. The recent able and exhaustive works of General Morin upon the ventilation of the public buildings of Paris has been, at the instance of the committee, examined by a gentleman of high scientific character, and the result is a complete indorsement of the views of the architect who planned our Capitol extension, and who now proposes to apply his original principles in its improvement.

The committee recommend that the plan of improvement be carried into execution during the coming year, under the management of Charles F. Anderson as architect and superintendent; the details and plans of the work to be examined and approved throughout by Dr. Thomas Antisell, and all contracts to be made under the authority of the Commissioner of Public Buildings. The work can be fully completed during the coming year, and all preliminary arrangements can be made, plans perfected, and materials and work contracted for before or during the next short session of Congress.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I hope the Senator will explain to us the changes it is proposed to make in the roof and Hall before we vote.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I will give some explanation of this plan of improvement proposed by the committee. The general features of the plan are these: that the present roof shall be abolished; we commence at the upper extremity; and in its place a double roof or one counter-ceiled be substituted, which will exclude all noise of storms and all influence of heat and cold in summer and winter; the ceiling to be elevated, and side windows to be placed in the upper elevation of the Hall in its whole circumference, enabling us at all times to command at pleasure a complete supply of pure external air directly into our Chamber; and by making the windows double, as they ought to be in all buildings of magnitude, we obtain control of the Chamber with reference to external heat and cold when we choose to exclude them.

It will be observed that so far as I have gone in my statement, the plan obtains direct communication with the external atmosphere from the Hall, and secures the air in it perfectly from the influence of external heat and cold as well as external noise.

The next point is a change in the lighting of the Hall. We propose to remove the present gas jets from above the ceiling and replace them by eight or twelve—I forget which—lights adjusted with ventilating chimneys and with reflectors. We can obtain from a limited number of such lights double the present amount of lighting power in the Hall, if we choose, by the simple device of using reflectors, and by using chimneys all the smoke and unused gas are immediately removed and discharged into the external atmosphere. That portion of the plan will avoid the throwing down into the Hall of heat at night sessions and enable us to sit here with perfect comfort in summer, even though we should not cool the air before we introduce it into the Hall, which we propose to do.

So much, sir, with regard to the changes above. Now, the general plan of improvement, as proposed in the former report, but not recited in the present one, was this: the air is obtained at a short distance from the wings, conveyed through an entrance passage of adequate capacity to a point in the basement, where it is subjected to the influence of a fan; that is the moving power, the one now used, and the one in almost universal use in all large structures. Near that fan is placed the heating apparatus; that which we have now can be used, and we may extend it somewhat in magnitude; but the same mode of heating can be applied. In summer also, in this passage near the fan, we can cool the air perfectly by a double process; first by placing ice upon a grating which is designed in the plan; and secondly, by causing jets and spray of water to pass through it in its way to the general air chamber, which is above in the neighborhood of the upper part of this Hall. The air then is conveyed upward from the fan through a passage to an air chamber, where, whenever you desire, there may be communication with the external atmosphere to temper it; that is, you can reduce the temperature or increase it at pleasure. It is then brought over the ceiling and admitted to the Chamber by the present apertures through which the air is excluded or carried away.

Then, sir, with regard to its removal from the Hall, it will be removed from the Hall through the present apertures in the floor designed for its introduction. It can be taken away from us through the present entrance passage, and the same power which is now used to introduce it can be used to remove it from the Hall.

Speaking, then, in general terms, we have perfect control over the introduction of the air; we have perfect control over its temperature in winter and in summer; we have perfect control over its removal and its discharge without making any extensive change in the present arrangements for its introduction. It will be seen from this statement which I have made that there is one peculiarity, which is not familiar, perhaps, to most members of the Senate—I mean the introduction of air through the ceiling and its removal through the floor. The advantages of that system are so manifest, are so indisputable, that whenever any person examines the subject his conclusion must be in its favor. It is not a matter of debate or dispute. In the first place, one disadvantage of introducing air through the floor of the Chamber, and causing it to pass upward in currents, is that all the dust and impurities that are brought into the Hall, and are upon or about the floor, are carried up into the region of respiration and breathed. Another difficulty is, that these entrance currents affect, to some extent, the sound of the voice in speaking in the Hall. If these currents are active they must produce very considerable disturbance.

Another difficulty which we have in our present arrangements is the want of adequate space, which we obtain by the proposed plan. I mean adequate space for preparing the air before it is introduced into the Hall. Our Sergeant-at-Arms has made an attempt to hydrate the air, to impart to it adequate moisture in the winter months, when, I may say without exaggeration, it is in a state highly injurious to the human system, to which cause, I have no doubt, more than one victim has fallen. Now, the air taken at an external temperature in the winter of say 32° degrees, or the freezing point, is conveyed through a closed passage in which there is no access to sources of moisture, and it is heated up to a temperature say of 75°. It is then in a state where it demands, according to natural laws, more than three times the amount of moisture which it contained when first taken from the external atmosphere and subjected to this operation. Thus, sir, we have it in the Chamber, and we are obliged to breathe it without its being hydrated, without its having conveyed to it that adequate amount of moisture required at the temperature to which it is elevated.

I had that subject tested by Dr. Wetherill, of the Smithsonian Institution, who was here at that session, and who was doubtless observed by Senators on several occasions conducting his examinations. The average annual humidity of external atmospheric air in this country, I believe, is about 68°—it is a little higher in Great Britain—assuming that the saturation point of atmospheric air is indicated by the number 100; that is, when the air contains all the moisture which it can contain without precipitation, you indicate that state by the number 100, and then in examining any specimen of atmospheric air in a given case you may indicate the amount of moisture present by a number which will bear the same relation to the number 100 that the quantity present bears to what would be present if the air were entirely saturated. This amount, so present, is called by scientific men, "relative humidity," which is indicated by an absolute number. As I said before, the mean annual relative humidity of external atmospheric air is about 68° in this country. It is about that in Philadelphia. In the air in this Chamber we ought, at a temperature of 75°, to have a relative humidity of 68° or 70°. Upon one occasion Dr. Wetherill ascertained that the relative humidity of air in our galleries was 27°. He tested it in the galleries and upon the floor and in the air space above the ceiling upon another occasion when the relative humidity of the air stood at 21° in the diplomatic gallery and at 20° at the level of the desks near the floor of the Chamber. The relative humidity of the air we breathed was 20° instead of 70°. This was in cool weather, when the out-door temperature was at about the freezing point.

Mr. Roscoe, an English writer who examined this subject, informs us that the air in the House of Lords, where they have night sessions, sometimes very prolonged night sessions, especially in the latter part of the parliamentary sittings, is pleasant to breathe when its relative humidity ranges from 55° to 82°; and yet, sir, during the winter months we sit here in an atmosphere the relative humidity of which is sometimes 20° or 21°. Of course as the season advances, as warm weather comes on, as the external atmosphere is increased in its temperature, it obtains the moisture which it demands from external sources, and as we do not heat it by artificial means before it is introduced, this objection of aridity of the air does not exist here, and you are not obliged to any considerable extent to struggle against it. It is the difficulty in winter.

Now, sir, what the committee propose at this time is, that the architect who designed the Capitol wings originally, and a departure from whose plans has introduced every difficulty that exists now in the ventilation of the Halls—I speak that with confidence after three years' examination of this subject—shall proceed in accordance with the plans which have been examined and approved to make the necessary preliminary arrangements before the next session; to obtain materials and to make the proper contracts preliminary to carrying this work into execution; that during the next session we shall have the air introduced into the Senate hydrated, that is, have some amount of moisture forced into it, and that we shall get through the next session as well as we can with that single improvement. Immediately upon our adjournment at the next session, the work above, the change of roof and ceiling, the introduction of side windows, and all the other details of the plan, will be carried forward and can be executed a considerable time before the meeting of the next Congress.

I will conclude by saying that there are two leading defects we encounter at present in examining our ventilation: the one, the aridity of the air in winter; the other is the excessive heat in summer, and this excessive heat in the Hall is produced by the enormous amount of metal and of glass which is placed above us. It is impossible to have this Senate Chamber ventilated and the air made healthy and the condition of the members made comfortable so long as that roof is retained.

As I said before, the architect, in designing the Capitol wings, originally planned them with external windows in the whole circumference of the upper part of the Hall, and there was no glass roof. He never intended any such abortion, any such monstrosity in this climate, as a sort of Grecian temple, open to the heavens, or with the external heat and cold and the influence of noise excluded only by metal and glass in the manner which has obtained.

Let me explain the effect of that roof in the winter. We had that examined. Upon one occasion when the external temperature was at a temperature of 30½° of Fahrenheit the thermometer indicated 64° in the air space between the ceiling and the roof, which is our lighting space; in the galleries 68°, and on the floor of the Senate Chamber 70°. What did that mean? The warm air lying down in the lowest part of the space and the coldest air in the upper part; what did that mean? It meant this; your thirty-four hundred feet of glass roof and your seven thousand or ten thousand square feet of copper roof, (a single thickness at that,) and the iron and glass ceiling were such instruments and agents for imparting cold to the air within our space that the coldest air was actually in the upper part of the Hall and the warmest air in the lowest part. You are obliged to heat air and drive it in here and fight that roof—contend against it—throughout the cold months of the winter; and the disturbance thereby produced to your ventilation is incurable while the cause remains.

We had a Chaplain in the last Congress who understood the classic languages, and I went to him to obtain a Latin expression regarding the roof analogous to that which is used in reference to the destruction of Carthage. He said it would be, tectum delendum est, which may mean, the roof must be destroyed; it must be abolished; the impertinence of its presence in this great structure must not be permanently permitted. I have taken that as my motto in reference to this question of ventilation which has been under consideration for three years. It is the key-note to the whole subject. You must abolish the present roof, and you must substitute some other arrangement by which you can get control of the air used in ventilating your Hall. By adopting this report the Senate two years from this time, on the 23d day of July, 1868, can sit with perfect certainty in an atmosphere of 70° in this Chamber. I think that is an illustration of the proposed reform which will come home to members.

Mr. JOHNSON. How is it about sound?

Mr. BUCKALEW. One of the leading ideas in the plan of introducing air through the ceiling and taking it out at the floor, one of the main recommendations of it, is its manifest improvement with regard to acoustics. By introducing the currents of air at the ceiling and causing the air to descend through a considerable space before it reaches the person the inevitable result is that the air becomes equalized in its temperature and in its density through its whole mass, and the voice traverses it with entire convenience and regularity. We have had that subject specially examined by Dr. Antisell, a man of science, and he has prepared for us an essay or a report which will accompany our report (read to-day) when it is regularly printed and prepared for future reference. This subject of the acoustics of the plan was also examined by Professors Bache and Henry when it was contemplated originally to adopt it here. They visited many public buildings and examined that question with care.

I may say to the Senator, in addition, that for the purpose of avoiding reverberations which to some extent prevail in the present Hall, it is only necessary to have passages for the air sunk in the panels of the woodwork which curtains the Chamber. In that case all surplus sound would be conveyed into the passages, and might by tubes be conveyed to the galleries, as is done in Drury Lane Theater. There are sub-passages connected with tubes by which the voice is conveyed into the upper extremities of the galleries and the voices of the actors upon the stage are heard distinctly at the most remote points of that building. If it become necessary to improve the acoustics of the Chamber with reference to the excess of sounds thrown back from the walls we can easily dispose of all that surplus sound by throwing it into the walls themselves and conveying it away and using it elsewhere if we please.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, we must all be very grateful to the Senator from Pennsylvania for the attention which he has given to this important question which concerns so much the comfort of the Senate; I was about almost to say the character of our legislation; for while living in this anomalous atmosphere, certainly it may be well imagined that our legislation sometimes must suffer with our bodies. But the Senator will pardon me if I suggest that he has not been sufficiently radical in his proposition. I know the Senator in some respects is unwilling to be considered a radical. He does not like the name.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I have no distaste for the name; I claim to be very radical on some subjects.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well; now I wish the Senator to be radical on this subject which he has particularly in hand. He, catching a phrase from ancient Rome, says, not that Carthage is to be destroyed, but the roof is to be destroyed. Now, I tell the Senator he does not go far enough; these walls are to be destroyed. The difficulty is not so much with the roof over our heads, as with the surrounding walls. This room must be brought to the open air; it must be brought where there can be windows that will look out to the light of day. Through those windows we can have a natural ventilation; and as this building is seated high on an eminence, it is open to the air always when there is any air stirring. I think I do not go too far when I say there is no public edifice in the world which enjoys advantages of site equal to that of this Capitol. If any one calls to mind the great buildings of London, of Paris, or of Rome, there is not one of them that can be compared in situation with this Capitol. Now, sir, when we voluntarily shut ourselves up in this stone cage with glass above, we renounce all the advantages and opportunities of this unparalleled situation. Let these walls be taken down, and by a radical change this room be brought to the open air. That will be a change that will accomplish at once all in the way of ventilation and everything else which the Senator so anxiously recommends. The proposition is more radical than his; it will be expensive, I fear very expensive, for this building as we all see is built for immortality. Unless there is some act of legislation by which it is to be changed this room will continue uncomfortable as it is now for centuries. Senators, centuries after us, unless some of us interfere to make the change, will be sitting as uncomfortably as ourselves. Now, sir, I think we owe it to those who are to come after us to initiate the change.

I would call attention to two things which I think essential. I have alluded already to one of them, and I will now individualize it again. First, this room is to be brought to the open air by taking down these walls and having windows that shall look out to the sky. Secondly, and that is not less important, the room should be not more than half its present size. Here we are in this room sacrificed to the galleries. In that respect we are not unlike the combatants in a Roman amphitheater, and here we are engaged in our disputes to make, not "a Roman holiday," but a Washington holiday. It is on the occasion of a considerable discussion, or what is sometimes called "a great debate," that these galleries are filled with fourteen or fifteen hundred people. I need not remind Senators how little the size of this room consists with the proper transaction of public business. It may do very well for a considerable occasion when some person is to occupy the whole day and to give himself to an occasional speech; but we all know that it is not consistent with our comfort in the transaction of everyday business.

I do not know that Senators remember the testimony that was given by Sir Robert Peel before the committee of the House of Commons when they were considering what should be the size of that room. He was summoned before the committee and interrogated as a witness is; he was reminded that the House of Commons consisted of six hundred and fifty-eight members; he was then asked what accommodation he thought, all things considered, should be provided for the House and spectators, to which he replied, according to my recollection: true the House of Commons consisted of six hundred and fifty-eight members, but that number was very rarely in attendance; then the number of spectators was comparatively small; on common occasions, upon everyday business, even a small house, he said, would not be filled, and he thought it better to construct the new House of Commons with a view to the business of every day rather than with a view to those rare occasions when the House would surely be filled. He said, summing up his testimony, we had better be comfortable every day and stand a tight squeeze on those rare occasions. I think there is a great deal of philosophy in that. I think that the Senate had better be comfortable every day and every hour of the day, when it is transacting its morning business, when it is considering the introduction of measures, and occasionally stand a tight squeeze, rather than be uncomfortable every day, as it is through the unreasonable size of this Chamber. You all know that when business is introduced or motions are made in a common tone of voice, it is difficult for us to hear them unless we give very special attention, and if there is any interruption by conversation it is impossible. Now, I submit that the Chamber ought to be of such a size that a Senator making a motion in a common tone of voice, or asking a question in a common tone of voice, would be easily heard throughout the Chamber. I think that should be the rule of the architect. No such rule has been employed; this has been constructed with reference to these spacious galleries, and our daily business, I may say our daily life, is sacrificed to the accommodation of the galleries. I submit that if the galleries were half the present size, containing some seven hundred witnesses, with the reporter's gallery which already exists, the whole theory of our institutions would be amply fulfilled, the public would be in sufficient attendance, and our business would be transacted much more easily and advantageously than it is now.

I say, therefore, there are two things to be accomplished; one is to bring this room into a smaller space and another is to bring it out to the open air; and in doing that all the object of my friend from Pennsylvania would be satisfactorily accomplished. We should have a new system of ventilation which would be complete; it would be a natural ventilation in the main instead of an artificial one, such as he proposes.

I have thrown out these remarks as they come to my mind, believing that they are important for the consideration of the Senate, and further believing that it belongs to the older Senators of this body, those who have been the longest experienced in this Chamber, to take the lead in these suggestions. Of course Senators who have recently come into the Chamber will not consider themselves authorized by experience to propose a revolutionary or a radical change in the room. It will be for those who have had a longer experience of the Chamber, and especially for those who have had an experience of the other Chamber where we were before this, to insist upon this change. Why, sir, if it could be done by my vote, I would go back to-morrow morning gladly to that other Chamber where the Senate sat for so many honorable years of its existence. There is no one who remembers that Chamber who would not prefer to be there than here. For the transaction of public business it was infinitely superior to this room, and then on those rare occasions when there was a large attendance there were spectators enough; the theory of our Government was amply satisfied, the public were not excluded, and there were always reporters to communicate promptly what was said.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am very much gratified that the Senator from Pennsylvania has moved in this matter. I think something ought to be done. This Hall has been a subject of complaint ever since we moved into it. I served for one or two Congresses—I do not recollect now the precise period when we moved into this Hall—in the old Chamber; and from the time we first came here until now it has always been a subject of complaint, not only in summer, but in winter. It used to be complained of when we first came here very seriously in consequence of currents of cold air in the Chamber, and at that time, some years ago—I think the late Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. Hale) moved in the matter first—a committee was raised, and it was proposed, I think, at that time to change the Chamber from its present position to the exterior of the building. I have always been hoping that that change would take place. I think it was the greatest mistake that could have been made to place these Halls in the center of the wings of the Capitol. Now it is in contemplation to improve the grounds. They are already very beautiful on the east and west sides of the Capitol. It is intended to extend the grounds on the north and south, and to plant trees. The prospect will be inviting and pleasing when these improvements are made. If our Hall was upon the exterior of the building, with these fine grounds surrounding them, the windows open, and access out upon the balconies, what a relief it would be. What a relief it would have been during the late hot and oppressive weather to have had an opportunity, without losing the business of the Senate, without being so far away that you could not tell what was going on, to have the benefit of windows upon the exterior. It is not simply the air; it is the prospect. The prospect is worth a great deal. It is a relief from the tedious business of a six or eight or sometimes ten hour session to look out upon the world, and not to be shut up here like prisoners in a jail or school-boys in a school-room, where the windows are closed, lest they should look out of doors and their attention be directed from their books.

I therefore should be sorry to see any money expended in an attempt to raise the roof of this Chamber with a view of improving it where it is. I think that this room should be adjoining the exterior walls of the building. The architect some years ago made an examination to see if such an improvement could be made, and the matter was seriously considered. I have not looked at his report recently, but he made a report and an estimate of the expense. Two questions were considered: first, whether it was practicable, consistent with the safety of the building, in the manner in which it is constructed, to take out these walls and change the Hall to the exterior walls of the building; and secondly, what the expense of that change would be. The architect reported that it was practicable, that that change could be made without injury to the building; and my recollection is that he estimated the expense of doing it, making everything complete, and providing rooms for the Secretary's office and these other rooms elsewhere, at $200,000. I do not remember what the estimate is of the improvement contemplated by the Senator from Pennsylvania. If he stated it, I was not paying attention at the moment. The cost of the improvement he designs making would of course be much less than this radical change, as the Senator from Massachusetts calls it, of moving the Hall to the exterior walls of the building. I am not now prepared to suggest a plan of doing that; but I hope we may have the sense of the Senate upon the question as to how this improvement is to be made. I take it, all will agree that some change or other ought to be had in this room. My own judgment is that when we make that change, we had better change the location of the Hall, and not attempt to improve it where it is. It is not in the right place. It never ought to have been in the center of the building. Let us be where we can have the prospect that will surround us and have the benefit of the air as nature furnishes it, without having it pumped up or blown up by artificial machinery.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I deem it necessary to make a few remarks in consequence of what has been said by Senators who have spoken in the debate. In the first place, I agree entirely in the opinion expressed by the Senator from Massachusetts that the Senate and House Halls were made too large; that it would have been much better if they had been constructed of smaller dimensions; but I take it for granted that we shall not get any measure through both Houses of Congress proposing a reduction or contraction in their size, and inducing the enormous expenditure which will be necessary to effect that object.

The Senator from Massachusetts says that he desires to get to the external atmosphere. Now, sir, by the plan proposed, you accomplish that object; you get to the external atmosphere. The only difference between the plan which the Senator suggested and that proposed is, that by this plan you get to the external atmosphere in the upper part of the Hall by windows surrounding it, and according to his idea you would get to the external atmosphere in the lower part of the Hall by side windows on two sides of the Chamber instead of four. Therefore, the whole object which he suggested as desirable is obtained by the plan before us, while it would be but partially attained by his. Of course, the moment that air is introduced from windows in the upper part of the Hall, it would fall to the floor; the whole mass of air within the entire Chamber would be changed; and besides that, you would not be subjected to side currents of air upon the bodies of members themselves. There can be no question between the two, which is to be preferred.

Now, sir, with regard to the suggestion that we shall go to the sides of the wings with our Halls, my opinion is, after a long consideration of this subject, that that proposed reform is one which will never be accomplished; that it is simply a suggestion which, if not impracticable, will not within any reasonable period of time be realized. In the report made by the select committee on this subject, which has been read at the desk, a number of objections to it are stated which seem to me to be decisive. But in addition to those objections, there is this one: after you get the Hall to the side of the wing with two of its sides exposed to the external atmosphere through the windows or other apertures, the whole question of ventilation and its arrangement returns upon you. It is idle to talk of ventilating a hall of magnitude steadily, regularly, and successfully by side windows alone. Those side windows will be exceedingly objectionable to those who will occupy the Hall because of the currents of cold air which will fall from them if they are not double, and if you double them, as they will necessarily have to be in order to realize the result, the Senator's external prospect would be excluded or impaired. I do not know that there is a single recommendation of that plan which remains, after considering carefully the practical difficulties in the way, except this one of having a prospect, a thing which you can have now by stepping out upon the balcony under the colonnade. You are able, as far as that is concerned, to realize your wish if you choose to withdraw from business and from debate to enjoy the contemplation of nature, so far as nature can be seen in a city inhabited by fifty or one hundred thousand people with the artificial conditions established by them. I repeat again, that when we get to the sides of the building we shall have to adopt some effective plan of ventilation, to bring the air in above or below and remove it when it becomes contaminated.

I have but one further remark to make, which I think will tend to reconcile gentlemen to the adoption of this amendment, which is the only practical point before us. The elevation of the ceiling, the insertion of side windows, and the construction of a new roof, will not be entered upon before the next session of Congress. Of necessity, that part of the improvement will be delayed. When we meet next winter, we shall have a model in wood, open to the inspection of all the members of the Senate, showing precisely the effect of the changes proposed with reference to the roof and the ceiling and the side windows, so that it can be seen by the eye. Then if there be insuperable objections in the minds of Senators to entering upon that part of our plan of improvement, we can arrest it before any expense is incurred upon it. I suppose this explanation ought to be satisfactory to Senators, and induce them to agree to the amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is important that we should transact some executive business, and I therefore move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business, as there is to be a recess at half past four o'clock.

Mr. SHERMAN. Unless the Senate are disposed to waive the special order which was made some time ago for this evening, I should prefer to go on with the bill.

Mr. GRIMES. We shall take a recess in half an hour anyhow.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to reconsider that. I propose, however, to accommodate myself and this bill to the wish of the Senate.

Mr. LANE. Is the motion to go into executive session debatable? If it is, I should like to say that the less executive business we do until we adjourn, the better. I do not think I shall vote to go into executive session while we are here.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We must do some executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to go into executive session is debatable to a limited extent, so far as to state the reasons for or against it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois to allow this amendment to be disposed of.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is going to take some time, and we cannot dispose of it and go into executive session before half past four o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois. The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and at five o'clock (the time fixed having been extended) the Senate took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 386) granting the right of way to ditch and canal owners over the public lands in the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 83) declaring Tennessee again entitled to Senators and Representatives in Congress.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 198) authorizing the transmission through the mails free of postage of certain certificates by the adjutant general of New Jersey, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

MILITARY PEACE ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. WILSON. I ask the Senator who has charge of the business to-night, and I also ask other Senators, to give me unanimous consent to take up the Army bill, which lies on the table, having been returned from the House of Representatives with an amendment, and to move to concur in the amendment which they have made with an amendment, being the bill that the Senate passed the same day that that bill came here, with a view of bringing the matter before a conference. I have been endeavoring to make this motion all day, and if there is no objection, it will take but a moment; there is no need of reading the bill which I shall propose as an amendment, as it is the bill substantially we passed here the other day. I propose, if the Senator will allow me, to take up the bill and concur in the House amendment with an amendment striking it all out and inserting a substitute. That will probably bring the matter in such a shape that we shall have action upon it. If there be unanimous consent, it will not take a moment, and I should like to do it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well; I have no objection.

Mr. WILSON. I move, then, to take up the Army bill, and to concur in the amendment of the House, with an amendment striking out all after the word "that" and inserting what I send to the Chair.

Mr. HARRIS. It was stated, when the motion was made to have an evening session, that it was to be confined exclusively to the consideration of reports from the Committee on Commerce, and perhaps it will hardly be good faith toward the members who are absent to take up any other business.

Mr. WILSON. I do not believe there is a member of the Senate who will oppose it.

Mr. HARRIS. I want to state another thing. When this bill was under consideration before the Senate a few days since, I proposed two sections to the bill, which were adopted by the Senate, but which are not in the bill now proposed to be substituted for the House bill. If those sections were put in, I should have no personal objection to the motion.

Mr. WILSON. If it is thought that my motion will lead to debate or objection, I will not persist in it. The danger is, that if we put in any other sections, we may lose the whole bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Let me say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I think the section to which I refer would be very good capital for him to work on in the committee of conference.

Mr. WILSON. I have cut down the bill as it stands in regard to the volunteer officers to be added to the regular Army. The Senator may think that it is rather unfair to the absent members to call this up; but if unanimous consent were given, it would be all right. However, I withdraw the motion.

Mr. HARRIS. I think you had better take it up in the morning hour.

INTERSTATE COMMUNICATION.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 66.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 66) to facilitate commercial, postal, and military communication among the several States.

Mr. CHANDLER. As a House bill similar to this has already been acted upon, I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

REGISTRY OF VESSELS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 728.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 728) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue certificates of registry, or enrollment and license, to certain vessels. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue certificates of registry, or enrollment and license, to the steamer Diana, of Victoria, Vancouver Island; schooners M. C. Rowe, of Gloucester, Massachusetts; Mary, of Dexter, New York; Jesse Conger, of Oswego, New York; N. C. Ford, of Buffalo, New York; Sweet Home, of Rochester, New York; Alma, of Sodas, New York; Marcó Polo, of Erie, Pennsylvania; brig Three Bells, of Rochester, New York; bark J. S. Austin, of Buffalo, New York; and the sloop Dolphin, of Alexandria bay, New York.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask a little explanation of this bill, which I presume to be entirely correct; but I ask whether these vessels, being foreign vessels, the effect of this bill will not be to introduce them into the service of the United States without paying any revenue duty or any internal tax whatever. I do not know what the circumstances are, and undoubtedly the chairman can inform me. I was not present in committee when the bill was considered by them.

Mr. CHANDLER. These vessels are of the same category with those in regard to which we passed a bill some time ago. They are Canadian-built vessels, and, as was stated at that time, are thrown out of use on account of the termination of the reciprocity treaty. We have been, perhaps, a little extra-liberal in nationalizing those vessels that were thus thrown out of employment; but we passed a similar bill a short time ago.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the bill by adding at the end of it the following proviso:

Provided, That there shall be paid on each of such vessels that are of foreign build a tax equal to the internal revenue tax upon the material and construction of similar vessels of American build.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the bill read a third time. The bill was read the third time and passed.

PORT OF ENTRY IN PUGET'S SOUND.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 729.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 729) to change the port of entry in Puget's Sound. It proposes to abolish, from and after the 1st day of October, 1866, the port of Port Angeles, in the district of Puget's Sound, in Washington Territory, as a port of entry, and to establish Port Townsend as the port of entry and delivery for the district from and after that date.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PORTS OF DELIVERY.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 609.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 609) to constitute Omaha and Nebraska City, in the Territory of Nebraska, and St. Paul, in Minnesota, ports of delivery. It proposes to constitute Omaha and Nebraska City, in the Territory of Nebraska, and St. Paul, in the State of Minnesota, ports of delivery, subject to the same regulations and restrictions as other ports of delivery in the United States; and there is to be appointed a surveyor of customs to reside at each of the ports, who, in addition to his own duties, is to perform the duties and receive the salary and emoluments of surveyor prescribed by the act of Congress, approved on the 2d of March, 1831, providing for the payment of duties on imported goods at certain ports therein mentioned, entitled "An act allowing the duties on foreign merchandise imported into Pittsburg, Wheeling, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, Nashville, and Natchez, to be secured and paid at those places," and the towns of Omaha and Nebraska City and St. Paul, as ports of delivery, are annexed to and made a part of the collection district of New Orleans, and all the facilities and privileges afforded by the act of Congress of the 2d of March, 1831, are extended to them.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to amend the bill by adding as an amendment Senate bill No. 196, in these words:

And be it further enacted, That Council Bluffs, in the State of Iowa, shall be, and is hereby, constituted a port of delivery, and shall be subject to the same regulations and restrictions as other ports of delivery in the United States; and there shall be appointed a surveyor of customs to reside at said port, who shall, in addition to his own duties, perform the duties and receive the salary and emoluments of surveyor prescribed by the act of Congress approved on the 2d of March, 1831, providing for the payment of duties on imported goods at certain ports therein mentioned, entitled "An act allowing the duties on foreign merchandise imported into Pittsburg, Wheeling, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, Nashville, and Natchez, to be secured and paid at those places," and the said town of Council Bluffs and the said port of delivery be, and is hereby, annexed to and made a part of the collection district of New Orleans, and all the facilities and privileges afforded by the said act of Congress of the 2d of March, 1831, be, and are hereby, extended to the said port of Council Bluffs.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That Portland, in the State of Oregon, shall be, and is hereby, constituted a port of delivery, and shall be subject to the same regulations and restrictions as other ports of delivery in the United States, and there shall be appointed a surveyor of customs to reside at said port, who shall, in addition to his own duties, perform the duties and receive the salary and emoluments of surveyor prescribed by the act of Congress approved on the 2d of March, 1831, providing for the payment of duties on imported goods at certain ports therein mentioned, entitled "An act allowing the duties on foreign merchandise imported into Pittsburg, Wheeling, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, Nashville, and Natchez, to be secured and paid at those places," and the said city of Portland and the said port of delivery be, and is hereby, annexed to and made a part of the collection district of the State of Oregon, and all the facilities and privileges afforded by the said act of Congress of the 2d of March, 1831, be, and are hereby, extended to the said port of Portland.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to suggest to my friend, the Senator from Michigan, that a great deal of useless repetition of language would be avoided by so changing the amendment as to insert the names of these new places after the word "Minnesota," in line four of the original bill, and again after the word "St. Paul," in the eighteenth line; because in all other respects the provisions are precisely the same; and if it be in order I will move to amend by substituting such provisions, because otherwise every word is a useless repetition of what is already in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An amendment to the amendment is in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend, then, by substituting for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan the following: to insert after the word "Minnesota," in line four, the words "Council Bluffs, in the State of Iowa, and Portland, in the State of Oregon," and by inserting after the words "St. Paul," in the eighteenth line, the same words; and by inserting after the words "New Orleans," in line twenty, the words, "and the said port of Portland is annexed to and made a part of the collection district of the State of Oregon."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to hear the bill, as amended, read in full.

The Secretary read it as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Omaha and Nebraska City, in the Territory of Nebraska, and St. Paul, in the State of Minnesota, Council Bluffs, in the State of Iowa, and Portland, in the State of Oregon, shall be, and are hereby, constituted ports of delivery, and shall be subject to the same regulations and restrictions as other ports of delivery in the United States; and there shall be appointed a surveyor of customs to reside at each of said ports, who shall, in addition to his own duties, perform the duties and receive the salary and emoluments of surveyor prescribed by the act of Congress, approved on the 2d of March, 1831, providing for the payment of duties on imported goods at certain ports therein mentioned, entitled "An act allowing the duties on foreign merchandise imported into Pittsburg, Wheeling, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, Nashville, and Natchez, to be secured and paid at those places," and the said towns of Omaha and Nebraska City and St. Paul, and Council Bluffs, in the State of Iowa, and the said ports of delivery be, and are hereby, annexed to and made a part of the collection district of New Orleans, and the said port of Portland is annexed to and made a part of the collection district of Oregon; and all the facilities afforded by the said act of Congress of the 2d of March, 1831, be, and are hereby, extended to the said ports of Omaha and Nebraska City and St. Paul, Council Bluffs, and Portland, in the State of Oregon.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suggest that in the eighteenth line the words "the said ports of delivery" should be stricken out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That will make better sense.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It will then read "and St. Paul and Council Bluffs be, and are hereby, annexed to and made a part of the collection district of New Orleans."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made, no objection being interposed.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. It was ordered that the amendments be engrossed and the bill read a third time. The bill was read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. CHANDLER, the title of the bill was amended so as to read, "A bill to constitute Omaha and Nebraska City, in the Territory of Nebraska, St. Paul, in the State of Minnesota, Council Bluffs, in the State of Iowa, and Portland, in the State of Oregon, ports of delivery."

NORTH CAROLINA COLLECTION DISTRICTS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 399.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 399) relative to collection districts in North Carolina. It provides that from and after the 1st of October, 1866, there shall be in the State of North Carolina four collection districts: one, to be called the district of Albemarle, which is to include Albemarle, Currituck, and Croatan sounds, and all the waters, shores, harbors, rivers, creeks, bays, and inlets adjacent to and following into the sounds, together with that part of Pamlico sound north of and including Loggerhead inlet, and all waters and shores appertaining thereto. And the port of entry for the district is to be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury. Another, to be called the district of Pamlico, which is to include Pamlico sound, and all the waters, shores, harbors, rivers, creeks, bays, and inlets adjacent to and flowing into the sound, exclusive of the district of Albemarle, and including the south line of Neuse river to the northern entrance of Cove sound; and the port of entry for the district of Pamlico is to be at Newbern. Another, to be called the district of Beaufort, which is to include all the waters, shores, harbors, creeks, bays, and inlets south of the district of Pamlico and north of and including New River inlet; and the port of entry for the district of Beaufort is to be at Beaufort. And another, to be called the district of Wilmington, which is to include all the waters, shores, harbors, creeks, bays, and inlets south of the district of Beaufort to the southern boundary of the State. And the collector of each of the districts is to reside at the port of entry thereof. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, should it at any time hereafter seem to him necessary, to change the port of entry in the district of Beaufort to Morehead City.

The Committee on Commerce reported the bill with several amendments. The first amendment was in section one, line nine, to strike out the word "following" and to insert the word "flowing."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is a mere verbal change, and will be made unless objection is interposed.

The next amendment was in section one, line twelve, to strike out the words "designated by the Secretary of the Treasury," and to insert the words "at Plymouth."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section one, line eighteen, to strike out the word "Cove" and to insert the word "Core" before the word "sound."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made as a verbal alteration, no objection being interposed.

The next amendment was in section one, line twenty-seven, after the word "State," to insert "and the port of entry for said district of Wilmington shall be at Wilmington."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add at the end of the first section the following:

And shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and receive a salary at the rate of $1,000 per annum in addition to the fees of office: Provided, That such compensation shall in no case exceed the sum of $2,500 per annum in the aggregate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolutions; which thereupon received the signature of the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 776) in relation to the unlawful tapping of Government water-pipes; A joint resolution (H. R. No. 83) restoring Tennessee to her relations to the Union; and A joint resolution (H. R. No. 191) relating to the building lately occupied for a national fair in aid of the orphans of the soldiers and sailors of the United States.

COMPENSATION OF CUSTOMS COLLECTORS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 400.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 400) to fix the compensation of certain collectors of customs, and for other purposes.

The Committee on Commerce reported the bill with several amendments. The first amendment was in section one, line seven, after the word "Saluria" to insert "Corpus Christi."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section one, line nine, after the word "year" to insert "in addition to the fees of office; provided, that such compensation shall in no case exceed the sum of $2,500 per annum in the aggregate."

The amendment was agreed to.

The first section, as amended, reads as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the collectors of customs hereinafter named shall, from and after the 1st day of July, 1866, in lieu of the salaries to which they are now by law respectively entitled, receive the salaries following, to wit: the collectors of the districts of Texas, at Galveston, Saluria, Corpus Christi, and Brazos de Santiago, Texas, each at the rate of $1,500 a year in addition to the fees of the office: Provided, That such compensation shall in no case exceed the sum of $2,500 per annum in the aggregate; the collectors of the districts of Beaufort, South Carolina, and Pensacola, Florida, each at the rate of $1,000 a year; the collectors of the district of Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, and of the districts of Cherrystone, Virginia; Beaufort, North Carolina; Brunswick, Georgia; St. Augustine, St. Marks, and Appalachicola, Florida, and Teche, Louisiana, $500 a year each.

The next amendment of the committee was to strike out the second section of the bill, in the following words:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall have the power and authority to fix and determine the salaries of all deputy collectors, deputy naval officers, and deputy surveyors: Provided, That no increase of salary shall in any case exceed the sums annually allowed by law to any of such officers respectively, prior to 1860, more than fifty per centum, except in the city of New York, where the addition may, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, be extended to sixty per cent. above such former allowance.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That all that part of the State of Texas and the waters thereof included within the counties of Nueces, Starr, Zapata, Duval, Encinal, Webb, La Salle, McMullen, Live Oak, Bee, Refugio, and San Patricio, shall be a distinct collection district, to be called the district of Corpus Christi, and the town of Corpus Christi shall be its only port of entry; and a collector shall be appointed to reside at said port. And Aransas shall be a port of delivery in said district.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section three, in the following words:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act no naval officer or surveyor of the customs shall be entitled to receive any compensation from the receipts for storage accruing from the deposits of merchandise in any public store or private bonded warehouse; and no collector of the customs, or officer acting as collector, shall receive any compensation for storage, except that derived from merchandise deposited in stores owned or leased by the United States and used by such collector as public stores.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the town of Indianola shall hereafter be the port of entry for the district of Saluria, in said State, instead of La Salle. And all acts and parts of acts conflicting with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed; and this act shall take effect on and after the 1st day of August next.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as section four the following:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That in lieu of the compensation now allowed by law there shall hereafter be paid to each of the deputy collectors, deputy naval officers, and deputy surveyors of customs at the ports of New York, Boston, New Orleans, and San Francisco a sum not exceeding $3,500 per annum, out of the appropriation for expenses of collecting the revenue from customs.

Mr. CRESWELL. In this section provision is made for an increase of the salaries of deputy collectors, naval officers, and surveyors of the cities of New York, Boston, New Orleans, and San Francisco. I see no good reason why, if those officers have their salaries increased, the like officers for the city of Baltimore should not also be included. Their compensation now is the same; their duties are precisely the same; they are alike onerous, and all alike exposed to the expense of living in large cities. I therefore move to amend the amendment in the fifth line by inserting after the word "Boston" the word "Baltimore."

Mr. MORRILL. These salaries are scaled, and they are graduated with reference to the business transacted at the different offices. Baltimore does not fall within this scale. The same reason that would increase the salary at Baltimore would increase the salary at Portland, in my State; but for the reason which I have assigned I did not insist in the committee that Portland should be kept in. Portland, Baltimore, and Philadelphia are on the same plane, or nearly so. Portland is ahead of both of them in the shape of importations.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I beg to inquire of the Senator from Maine whether this bill increases generally the salaries of collectors.

Mr. MORRILL. No, sir, it does not; and it is for that reason that I am making these remarks.

Mr. TRUMBULL. What is the reason for increasing these particular ones? Is there any complaint about them?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir. Their salaries were thought to be inadequate. This bill does not very much increase them. It applies to four collection districts, the largest in the country. I was just remarking that the committee did not think it advisable to apply the same rule which the Senator from Maryland invokes, in favor of the lower class or grade of districts. I hope the Senator from Maryland will withdraw his motion, because it will inevitably lead to the raising of the salaries of the other officers who stand on the same grade as those in Baltimore.

Mr. CRESWELL. I do not see the force of the argument suggested by the honorable Senator from Maine. It matters not, certainly, so far as these officers are concerned, what amount of customs is received at their respective offices. The salary ought to depend upon the capability of the individual, the capacity of the man whose services are required, and the expenditures to which he is subjected. In the city of Baltimore, there are two deputy collectors; in Boston there are three deputy collectors, and in New York there are seven; so that if there is more business to be done there, there are also many more persons to do it. In New Orleans there is but one deputy collector. It appears to me that the capacity and the amount of labor required of these individuals should be the measure by which we should regulate their salary, not the amount of business done at the particular office where they are employed, because a man may be employed in a sinecure in an office where other persons may perform a great deal of labor. It seems to me that the same justice we exhibit toward New York, Boston, and New Orleans, should be extended toward other cities where men are required to perform precisely the same duties.

Mr. MORRILL. How can it be that the collector of customs at Baltimore who collects a million and a half, or two millions at most, has the same responsibilities as the collector at New York, who collects one hundred and fifty millions? Is there any sort of comparison between the two cases? These salaries are predicated upon that element. That element enters very largely into them. These offices are all scaled. They are scaled, not with reference to the particular personal qualifications of the men, but the responsibilities of the office, and those responsibilities attach in proportion, or are supposed to do so under our policy, to the amount of duties collected, because there is no other way of measuring the responsibilities of these men but by the amount of duties collected. Now, these four offices are selected as the leading offices in the country, and it was supposed that they might very properly be increased. But if you grant this amendment, necessarily, to be just, you must include Portland. My friend would not object to that, perhaps; but the committee did not think it worth while to extend it to these offices, and the Department did not recommend it. I think, for the reason I have stated, it is obvious there is a distinction between the collectorship at New York and the collectorship at Baltimore.

Mr. CRESWELL. I should vote for Portland on your argument.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment moved by the Senator from Maryland to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRESWELL. I was about to suggest a verbal correction which is necessary in the amendment to be inserted as the seventh section of the bill. It provides that the act approved April 29, 1864, be extended to July 1, 1866. I apprehend that that is a misprint.

Mr. MORGAN. That amendment is not necessary. A similar provision has been passed in another bill. I move, therefore, that that amendment be non-concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment reported by the committee to the fourth section. The seventh section has not yet been reached.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as section seven the following:

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the act to increase the compensation of inspectors of customs in certain ports, approved April 29, 1864, be extended to July 1, 1866.

Mr. MORGAN. A similar provision has been inserted in another bill, and I move, therefore, that the Senate non-concur in the report of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question will be on agreeing to the amendment of the committee just read.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to strike out "Beaufort, North Carolina," in the sixteenth and seventeenth lines of the first section. The words I have named are included in the special bill for North Carolina that we have just passed, and are therefore incongruous here.

Mr. MORGAN. That is right. I hope they will be stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

SEAMEN'S SHEATH KNIVES.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 334.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 334) to prevent the wearing of sheath knives by American seamen was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to extend the existing regulation for the government of the Navy of the United States, prohibiting the wearing of sheath knives on shipboard, and make it applicable to all seamen in the merchant service. It is to be the duty of the master or other officer in command of any ship or vessel registered, enrolled, or licensed under the laws of the United States, and of the owner or other persons entering into contract for the employment of a seamen or other subordinate upon any such ship or vessel, to inform every person offering to ship himself of the provisions of this act, and to require his compliance, therewith, under a penalty of fifty dollars for each omission, to be sued for and recovered in the name of the United States of America, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, one half for the benefit of the informer and the other half for the benefit of the fund for the relief of sick and disabled seamen. The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SEAMEN ON AMERICAN VESSELS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 419.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 419) repealing an act entitled "An act repealing certain provisions of law concerning seamen on board public and private vessels of the United States," approved June 28, 1864.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As this bill is one of very considerable importance I think it right to state to the Senate what the effect of its passage will be. The law of 1864, which this bill proposes to repeal, is an act repealing the provisions of all the then existing laws requiring a certain proportion of the seamen engaged on American vessels to be citizens of the United States; so that the effect of the act of 1864, and of the existing law, is to open American commerce and American ships, both in the coasting and foreign trade, to the employment of foreigners entirely if the masters and owners of the vessels so choose. The policy of the Government has always been, from very early in the present century down to this time, to pursue the opposite course. The act of 1813, which is referred to in this act of 1864, provided that after the war citizens of the United States exclusively should be employed on board the public and private vessels of the United States. The act of 1817, supplementary to that, regulating navigation, required that two thirds of the crew and all the officers should be citizens of the United States, and that wherever they were not very heavy tonnage duties should be imposed, which it is not necessary to refer to. The act of 1830, which continued to be the law down to 1864, also provided that there should be three fourths of the crews American seamen, or those who had filed their declaration of intention to become such, with various other regulations; so that the policy of the Government has been to encourage the employment of American seamen in American commerce; to provide for the obvious contingencies of warfare and other disturbances, when it might happen otherwise that our merchant service would be filled with the citizens or subjects of the belligerent Power with whom we might be at war. The reason of the passage of the act of June 28, 1864, undoubtedly was that we were so pressed at that time for seamen that, as a temporary emergency, it was found necessary to resort to foreigners to fill up the naval service. That occasion has gone by; and it appeared to the committee to be quite obvious that it would be proper to return to the original policy of the Government and restore the laws which had thus been repealed. That is the effect of this bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IOWA STREAMS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 135.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 135) declaring certain streams in the State of Iowa not navigable streams.

Mr. CHANDLER. As the report of the committee on that bill is adverse, I move that it be indefinitely postponed, without reading it.

The motion was agreed to.

R. P. PARROTT.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will now ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to report from the Committee on Commerce and pass at this time a bill which was ruled out of order as an amendment on the appropriation bill, and which I was ordered to place on that bill some four or five months ago. It would have been passed long ago but for that.

There being no objection, the bill (S. No. 445) for the relief of R. P. Parrott was read twice by its title and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to R. P. Parrott the sum of $12,198 35, in full payment for building an iron light-house at Cape Canaveral, in the State of Florida.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is there any explanation of that?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will send the papers in the case to the Chair, and ask the Secretary to read the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, and likewise the report in the case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter of the Secretary of the Treasury will be read, if there be no objection.

Mr. MORGAN. Perhaps it is proper to state that Mr. Parrott made a contract with the Government for building a light-house at Cape Canaveral in 1860. The Government wished him to stop the work in 1861 when the troubles commenced, and he did so at their request. All the papers that are there go to show that fact. Since the war has terminated he has been directed to proceed with the work which he stopped at the request of the Government. Mr. Parrott, who is a very honorable man and would make no statement but what was entirely correct, has made a statement of this kind. That has been referred to the Light-House Board, and they confirm all that he has said and recommend that this amount be paid.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the reading of the letter asked for?

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator from Maryland desire the reading of the letter?

Mr. JOHNSON. No, sir; I am satisfied.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I presume it is not necessary to read the letter.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. FISH.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now ask leave to introduce and have passed another bill, for the same reason, which was neglected to-day on account of not being in order on the appropriation bill.

The bill (S. No. 466) for the relief of George W. Fish was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent to consider the bill at this time. Is there any objection?

Mr. CLARK. Let us hear it read first.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will send the papers in the case to the desk. I will state that Mr. Fish was consul at Ningpo, where he served some eight months, and by authority of the Secretary of State drew drafts for his salary and the expenses of the office. He returned late in 1861, and went immediately into the Army. By some means or other those drafts were protested, and he was compelled to raise $1,825, which he had actually negotiated. The Secretary of State recommends that it be paid. It is a just claim.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is this amount due him for salary?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir; for salary, office expenses, &c.

Mr. CLARK. I will inquire of the Senator if this is the same matter that he attempted to put on the appropriation bill?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir; this and the previous bill are precisely the same case.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay George W. Fish the sum of $1,825 04, in full for consular services as United States consul at Ningpo, in China, and for exchange due him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I do not understand how this claim can arise. If the consul drew a bill of exchange for what was due him, if there was anything due him, on the settlement of his accounts at the State Department, if the bill was protested he could still draw the amount by application to the State Department.

Mr. CHANDLER. He negotiated the bills and had to take them up himself. In point of fact another man got the salary and he did not.

Mr. BUCKALEW. But if the bill was not paid by the State Department, the fund upon which he drew that which was due to him would still continue due to him.

Mr. CHANDLER. And is due yet. That is what is the matter.

Mr. BUCKALEW. What is the difficulty in his drawing the amount if it stands to his credit in the settlement of his account?

Mr. CHANDLER. It does not stand to his credit. He drew a draft and it was protested. The Secretary of State recommends that this amount be paid because it is justly his due.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The facts in relation to this case as they appeared to us before the committee, are briefly these: This gentleman was the consul at Ningpo, in China, in 1860. Early in 1861, just about the time our troubles broke out, there appeared to him one morning another gentleman with a letter from one Treseott, assistant secretary of state, not a commission, as it appears, but a letter stating that he, this new man, had been appointed consul, and that this gentleman should turn over the office to him. This gentleman was a little suspicious that it was a contrivance for the purpose of getting the consulate with all its books and papers into the hands of the rebel authorities, and he refused to turn them over; and thereupon the person who came out and himself, in that dispute, agreed to leave it to the arbitration of Commodore Stribling, I think it was; at any rate the chief naval officer on that station, and who was then acting chargé d'affaires. They immediately submitted the question as to whether the person now under consideration ought, under those circumstances, to turn over the consulate, and the commodore decided that he ought not, but that he ought to hold on until regular papers from the State Department should be received. He accordingly did hold on and performed the duties of the office for these eight months; or whatever the time was, with the understanding between himself and this other gentleman, when the papers did come, that this man and not the other one should receive the compensation for that time. He accordingly, in good faith, drew his drafts in the regular way, down to the time of the termination of his official career; but when the drafts got home, by some accident or other, the State Department had paid the drafts of the other man who had retraced his steps from this understanding, and had drawn accordingly. Now, therefore, it appears that this man was acting consul, and that, so far as technical regularity went, he was consul, because it does not appear to this day in the Department of State that the new man ever had a commission.

Mr. CLARK. How came they to pay him?

Mr. EDMUNDS. You must ask the Secretary of State, not us. We did not get any explanation on that point. The result of the thing is, that this gentleman now under consideration justly refused to turn over the consulate; when it was left to the arbitration of the chargé d'affaires at that place, he was fortified in that refusal; he was authorized to draw these drafts by the understanding with the other party who finally got the papers, but before his draft got home the other party was allowed to take the money, and he was obliged to pay his own drafts. If ever a case appealed to the justice of Congress, this is one.

Mr. CHANDLER. The letter from the Assistant Secretary of State to Mr. Fish authorizing him to draw the drafts which he actually did draw is among the papers, and can be read if desired.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suppose we shall have to pay this amount; but the result is that we are paying two consuls for the same service during the same time. I understand the honorable member from Vermont to say that the successor of Mr. Fish drew his draft and it was paid at the State Department for services supposed to have been rendered during these eight months. Now we are about to pay Mr. Fish for services actually rendered during the same period. The United States, therefore, are paying twice as much as they were bound to pay. I do not know where the fault was.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Exactly; but that ought not to be visited upon this gentleman.

Mr. CHANDLER. This gentleman resided there at great expense and performed all the duties of the office.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not object to it. I only express surprise that the facts should be so.

The bill was passed.

DISMAL SWAMP CANAL COMPANY.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 178.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 178) in reference to the Dismal Swamp Canal Company. As the United States are interested in the Dismal Swamp canal, connecting the inland waters of the Chesapeake with the sounds of North Carolina, by holding eight hundred shares of the stock of the company; and as the canal should be kept open as a navigable highway without further outlay on the part of the United States; it is proposed to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell the stock at auction, or otherwise, in such manner as will best protect the interest of the United States in the canal, and will insure that it be kept open as a navigable highway, without further expense to the Government; but the instruments and papers effecting such sale are to be approved by the Attorney General before the delivery thereof.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear some explanation of this resolution. I was unable to get any in committee, and if any other gentleman of the committee has been more successful than myself, I should certainly be glad to have the Senate informed as to what is the object of selling eight hundred shares of this stock, and what good is to come of it under the conditions which are named in this resolution.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am unable to give the Senator the information which he desires. This resolution was referred by the Committee on Commerce to the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. NESMITH,] and he was to make investigation and report as he thought best; but he is not now present.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the further consideration of the resolution be postponed until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

SURVEYS OF WESTERN RIVERS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move to take up Senate bill No. 139.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 139) to provide for surveys of the upper Mississippi and Minnesota rivers.

Mr. CHANDLER. As the objects provided for in this bill were included in the general river and harbor bill, I move that this bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 481.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 481) to amend an act entitled "An act to encourage immigration," approved July 4, 1864; and an act entitled "An act to regulate the carriage of passengers in steamships and other vessels," approved March 3, 1865, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that this bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the bill and the amendment read before the bill is postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment recommended by the Committee on Commerce is to strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause and to insert a substitute. Does the Senator ask for the reading of the original bill or of the amendment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The amendment.

The Secretary read the amendment, as follows:

That the act entitled "An act to encourage immigration," approved July 4, 1864, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the effect of that?

Mr. MORGAN. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope that motion will prevail. I understand that this amendment proposes to repeal the law in relation to immigration, which, I always thought, answered a very good purpose. I hope it will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not understand why that act should be repealed.

Mr. JOHNSON. Nor I; and that is the reason I want it postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BROWN. If we postpone this bill, it will not be repealed.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not think it is best to have it go off in that way without our understanding what the bill is. It is rather an important bill in some aspects. It received the careful consideration of the committee; and if it is desirable to consider the bill at the present time, I have a statement to make in relation to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is that the further consideration of the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. MORRILL. On that I will make a statement of the character of the bill. The committee instructed me to report against the House bill, which was a bill to amend the act of 1864 which created a Bureau of Immigration in the State Department, or rather was interpreted by the State Department to create a Bureau of Immigration. It did not do so, in fact. In fact, the bill of 1864 authorized a Commissioner of Immigration, but it was construed in the State Department to be a bureau. This bill from the House, it will be seen, is a bill to amend that act by enlarging its powers. The committee, of course, considered the whole subject, the act of 1864 as well as the one before them from the House, and came to the conclusion to recommend the repeal of the act of 1864 which authorized a Commissioner of Immigration, and of course to refuse to concur in the bill which came from the House. Now, I will state, if the Senate have any interest in this subject, which I very much doubt by the attention which I see they propose to give me, what that measure is.

In 1864 Congress passed an act, as I have said, creating a Commissioner of Immigration. He was to be under the direction of the Secretary of State. He was to have one clerk here, and he was to have a superintendent of immigration to reside at New York, who was also to have a clerk. His duty here was one of supervision; the duty of the superintendent at New York was one of supervision of immigration at the city of New York. They had a right to make rules and regulations, and a right to authorize contracts to be made for the importation of immigrants from abroad, which contracts by this law were declared to be valid and should be enforced in the courts of the United States.

The first thing that occurred to the committee on an examination of this subject was, why should the Government of the United States establish in the city of New York, or anywhere else, a Bureau of Immigration? On what principle is it that this Government can enter into the business of importing foreign labor? The Senate will see at once that it is a novel feature in the transactions of this Government. It smacks so nearly of that trade which was African, and was forbidden in the Constitution of the United States, that we objected to it at first on that ground. Then it was so closely allied to the Coolie business that the committee was astonished that the Senate ever gave it a moment's consideration. It is to establish a bureau to import labor. We import almost everything else, and we have now come to the importation of men. If you look at the bill of 1864 you will see that they were to be imported under circumstances and rules and regulations which were of such a character, or might be of such a character, as to create an apprehension in the public mind that it was another species of slavery; and so it is provided. It was overlooked, I suppose, by the Senate, when it was passed; but there is an actual provision in that bill that the rules and regulations under which these importations may be made shall not be regarded as reducing these people, when they are landed on this side, to actual slavery. But the bill itself did authorize this Commissioner of Immigration to make rules and regulations to enforce contracts which anybody might make abroad, and to pursue those contracts all over this country anywhere where these imported persons should go, and enforce the contracts by impounding their labor.

I maintain, and the committee came to the conclusion, that that was a species of slavery; it was a species of servitude which had never been allowed or countenanced in this country. I submit to the Senate whether, with the understanding of the character of that bill, it can ever be conceived that the Government of the United States intended to enter into the business of importing men into this country. By that bill they were authorized to make contracts, they were authorized to send agents abroad into the cities and by-ways and lanes, and make contracts and advance the expense to bring over this labor, and then the Government of the United States was to be a party to enforce those contracts and impound the labor and pursue the laborer, the immigrant, where ever he might go to enforce the contract and recover the expenditures.

For these reasons, briefly stated, the committee were opposed to the whole system. By way of illustrating the workings of this system I will read, from a pamphlet published last year for our instruction when a similar bill was sent to the Senate by way of amending the act of 1864, the interpretation which those who favored that bill put upon it themselves. By the way, I ought to remark that the State of New York had for many years a board of immigration, and there is in the city of New York now a company of immigration whose business it is to import foreign labor. They import them on contract. They import them for anybody who desires the labor.

Now, sir, all on earth that this Bureau of Immigration has done since 1864 is to act in harmony and in subordination to that emigration aid society or company incorporated by the State of New York and doing business at the city of New York. The Commissioner or Superintendent of Immigration has held his office in their office. He has cooperated with them. They have made the contracts, and he has sanctioned the contracts. They have made the contracts for foreign labor and sent out for foreign immigrants, and he has ratified those contracts. The act provided that the Commissioner might have power to make contracts with railroads and canals when these passengers should have landed, for carrying them to remote parts of the country. This company has made those contracts and the Commissioner has ratified those contracts. He, then, paid by the Government of the United States, has done nothing else, and the report shows that fact, but to cooperate with the immigrant company in New York, to render that company efficient, and enable them, through the power of the General Government, to enforce the contracts which they make in foreign countries for the importation of this labor. I submit that it is not a very dignified business for the Government of the United States anyway. I submit whether we are disposed to establish a Bureau of Immigration here at Washington and open a subordinate office at New York, to act in harmony with and subordinate to a company whose business it is to import foreign labor.

To show you that I am not mistaken on the subject, I hold in my hand a pamphlet which is a sort of dissertation on the whole thing, coming from this emigrant company, addressed, not to the Senate, but addressed to a committee of this body last year, in which they set out the defects of the act of 1864, in which they say what its defects are, how it ought to be amended, what they are doing, and what they could do if this Bureau of Immigration were made as effective as it ought to be, and then would act in harmony and cooperation with them. They say:

"It should be premised that the American Emigrant Company is a corporation of high character and abundant means, organized for the purpose of importing laborers (skilled and unskilled) upon orders of employers who advance the expenses and pay a small commission for the service."

That is all very well; but what have we to do with that? Now they ask us to come in and throw the shield of the General Government over it, authorize these contracts and enforce the contracts which they thus make.

"The system adopted is very complete, involving agencies in all parts of Europe and an efficient administration here; and so far it works well. The company now asks for no help from Government beyond the furnishing of reasonable facilities which will cost the Government nothing. The law of last year which aimed to do this has proved in its practical application defective, and hence the necessity for the further legislation requested."

"It may also be premised that the company have no interest in this matter which is not entirely coincident with the interest of the country."

I read this to show you that the legislation here asked for is suggested by this company, which is established in New York—a private enterprise for the importation of labor. That is a commercial transaction. I have no objection to that. Any company has a right to import labor as well as anything else; but what have we to do with it? Why should we put our fingers in it? Why should we go to their aid and authorize agents to go all over Europe to import labor? Following what I have read, this is what they want us to do, this what they desire the Government to enact into a law:

"THE REMEDY.—This is—1. By making the laborer forfeit double the amount remaining unpaid of the expenses advanced by the employer. 2. By enabling the employer to follow him and impound his wages and other dues wherever he finds him."

That is to say, this company go abroad, make a contract, import a thousand laborers, land them in New York, and then they want the Government of the United States to put agents on their track wherever they go, to Minnesota or the West, follow them through those agents and impound the laborer, to the end that this company, which is engaged in the business of importing laborers, shall not lose the expenses of importation. That is the dignified business in which the Government of the United States proposes to be engaged by this bill.

Then further:

"3. By compelling any new employer to elect whether to retain or dismiss the man; and if the former, to assume and pay to the importing employer his unpaid bill of advances, taking it afterward out of the wages of the workman."

That is to say—and I will come to that by and by—this bill provides that we are to send agents all over the country wherever these people go, and if these men, scattered broadcast, do not pay the expenses of their passage, and they are found in your employment, sir, [turning to Mr. SPRAGUE] an agent goes to you and says "Pay over; you must pay over or dismiss the man," so that he can put him to service to pay the expenses of his importation. That is exactly the character of this bill.

Mr. WILSON. A kind of slave trade.

Mr. MORRILL. It is a sort of "Coolie" business, close on to the business of slave importation. Now, he says there is an objection, somebody raises an objection to this sort of thing on the ground "that it is subjecting a man to an offensive bondage, inconsistent with our general principles, which give a man the right even to break a contract if he pleases, taking the legal consequences."

See his answer to that:

Answer:

"1. It puts no restraint on his person. There is no power of personal reclamation."

"2. The ordinary 'consequences,' where a man breaks his contract, are a liability to subjection in damages. But this liability is nothing to this class of men. The 'consequences' should be adapted to the case, and the only ones that can operate upon them are those which give a special right to a claimant to take the fruits of their labor."

"3. This remedy is peculiarly fit in this view. The employer is an importer of labor. This labor he buys at a peculiar risk. The workman, who alone has this commodity—

That is this laborer—

"in charge, runs away with it. How fit that the commodity should be seized wherever found."

That is the language here.

Mr. WILSON. What is that? What have you got there?

Mr. MORRILL. I have got a dissertation on the bill under consideration which they ask us to pass. This is the commentary, and these are the reasons for passing the bill—the reasons for making the Government of the United States a party to a system to engage in the purchase of labor in foreign countries and the importation of it into this country, and enforcing an alien on the labor and pursuing it into the far West wherever it goes, impounding the labor for the payment of the expenses of importation. That is it. There has been nothing more absurd than this in my day and generation in legislation.

I do not know that I ought to take up any more time in commenting on this essay by which the bill is explained. It is very lengthy and refined you will see. Another objection, it is said, is—"That the workman may be harshly treated, and so justified in running away."

Somebody, he imagines, will raise that objection. He answers that—

"The workman has some security in the fact that it is for the interest of every employer to treat him well, that he may not run away."

I supposed we had got through with that kind of argument long ago, especially when we emancipated the slaves. The idea of cruelty, he says, is no argument at all. To be sure we impound these men and impound their wages, but they are under contract and they ought to be impounded, and there is no hardship in it and there will be no oppression, because it will be for the interest of the employer always to treat them well! That is the old argument of slavery. The whole system was built up under it. Now, mind you, they not only ask that we shall authorize this board of commissioners to make this contract, but they ask us to enforce it; they ask us to send agents all over the country, into the West and elsewhere to enforce it.

By way of showing the refinement, the extent to which it goes, let me read a little more from this document:

"The new employer acts voluntarily in the matter."

That is to say, these agents have a right to follow this man, and if they find him employed they impound him, or they demand that the new employer shall pay the expenses of his importation or else discharge him; and it is fancied that somebody will object to that, and in reply to the objection, he says:

"1. The new employer acts voluntarily in the matter. He elects whether to keep the man with this liability, or to dismiss him. It is no burden imposed on him."

"2. It is clearly right in itself."

Here is the logic of it, and here is the morality of it:

"2. It is clearly right in itself. The original employer has imported the man at a far greater risk than that incurred by the new employer in keeping him."

Consider—

"1. That the importer took the risk of his being wrecked or dying on the way, and his being enticed away on landing."

"2. That the importer hired a man whom he had never seen, and took the risk of his capacity and character."

"3. That the importer has brought a new laborer into the country, and so is entitled to special consideration.

"And now consider, on the other side—

"1. That the new employer is only electing to keep a man whom he has seen and tried, and of whose capacity and trustworthiness he can judge."

This is the reasoning and this is the logic; but the query I am addressing to the Senate is, what reason is there that the Senate of the United States should become a party to this sort of morality and this sort of contracts? That is the question.

For these and a variety of other reasons which would suggest themselves to the Senate and which are very obvious, the main one being that this is an utter and entire departure from the policy of this Government from its foundation down, the Committee on Commerce could not agree to this bill. While, sir, we have opened our arms to receive the down-trodden and oppressed from all the nations of the earth, while we have desired and intended to make and have actually made this the asylum for the oppressed from all the nations of the earth and have made it particularly attractive, and while by the beneficence of our institutions every man when he lands on our shores is entitled to protection, and so we hold out the grandest inducement on the earth for the oppressed of all nations to come here, yet we have never thought it worth while to inaugurate a policy to go out among the peoples of Europe and purchase them in the market like cattle, and then bind them to us by penalties and conditions and terms which would disgrace a barbarous nation and which would carry us back to that period when we were engaged in the importation of Africans, and justified ourselves upon the ground that they were savages and we were improving their condition. This is but one step removed from that.

Mr. CHANDLER. I would ask my friend from Maine if he will permit this bill to go over until to-morrow?

Mr. MORRILL. I have just a word or two more to say of it, and then I shall be done. I have now touched the general subject. When the act of 1864, which got through this Senate not exactly by misadventure, was proposed, I thought I saw in it what the Senate would not approve; but it was passed in the morning hour without attracting much attention, on the idea that it was entirely inoffensive. I do not think it would have arrested the attention of anybody now but for this publication and for the amendments which are asked. When they had taken the incipient step and had got a Commissioner of Immigration appointed, the next thing was to enlarge his powers because it was a large subject; if this nation was going to deal in importing men and pay the expenses of the importation and bind them by contracts to pay the money and impound them until they do, it was a pretty large subject. It grew upon the minds of these parties; and those who were engaged in it, you will see, when they came to consider it found that it was a thing that needed very much elaboration and very much of detail and very much of refinement, and involved a great many principles that are not exactly in harmony with the principles of our Government. It called not only upon the Executive, but it called upon the judiciary and all the powers of the Government to enforce it.

This amended bill which came from the other House was framed to meet this necessity, to meet this demand set out here, and what do they propose? Why, sir, they propose to establish in several of the Atlantic cities a commissioner of immigration, to open an office under the Government of the United States, to have one commissioner and as many clerks as the case may be supposed to require. The present office in New York is to be strengthened; one is to be opened in Boston, I do not know but in Portland, in New Orleans, in Philadelphia, in San Francisco, and in some of the cities of the interior. In all these places agencies or superintendencies under the authority and direction of the United States are to be opened, upon whom are to be conferred powers similar to, those now conferred upon the superintendent in New York. Contracts are to be made, and a wholesale business of importing labor under the authority of the United States and under contracts sanctioned by these persons is to be carried on.

The committee having condemned the general principle, of course condemned it in detail, and having settled that they would not recommend the general principle they rejected the details, and they would have rejected the bill, perhaps, if for nothing but the expense. I will state the items of expense which illustrate, perhaps in some measure, what the tendency of this thing is and where it would go naturally and where it would land if the Government of the United States was once committed to it. It is now in its incipient stages, but the increased expense proposed by this Department by the increase of the several agencies in these cities is $72,600, which the Government of the United States are expected to pay to aid in the importation of this foreign labor. By this bill the machinery is enlarged so that the increased expense will be $72,600. I make no great account of that item of expense, but advert to it as showing how this thing grows upon us. In 1864 we authorized a Commissioner of Immigration to reside here with a superintendent at New York. It was said to be an indifferent affair, and from that time down to the present we have cooperated with a private corporation in the State of New York, making contracts, and now it comes before us in this shape. The committee to whom it was referred having given the fullest consideration to the subject, became satisfied that the whole scheme was not in harmony with the principles of this Government, that it would not be attended with beneficial results, and that not only the Horse bill, which is an amendment to the act of 1864, ought not to pass, but that the whole system ought to be repudiated. They therefore recommended that the bill should not pass, and provided for a repeal of the act of 1864.

Mr. JOHNSON. The question before the Senate is whether the bill as proposed to be amended should be indefinitely postponed; and in what I am about to say—I shall occupy the Senate but for a few moments—it is not my purpose to inquire into the proposed amendments which the House bill suggests to the original act of 1864, but merely to say a few words as to the nature and legality of the act of 1864.

I suppose my friend from Maine and the Committee on Commerce will hardly doubt that Congress had the power to pass the act of 1864. Under the authority to regulate commerce there can be no doubt that they could regulate the transportation of passengers, and under the same authority they could authorize the immigration of those who were unable to pay their own passage money. The country in 1864 was or was supposed to be very much in need of labor. There was a great deal of hard work to be done on railroads and canals; and more of that work perhaps is in prospect now than there was then. The country is about to be, if it is not actually, reinstated in its original integrity, and all those improvements must be increased.

Now, the act of 1864 does nothing more than this: it says to the man in Europe who wishes to come to the United States but who has not the means of coming of his own, or who is unable to procure there the means of coming, that he may come in an American ship for such sum as may be agreed upon, and that his agreement to pay the amount of that passage money shall be a personal obligation to be paid within twelve months, and shall be a lien at all times upon any real estate which he may acquire, so as to constitute it in the nature of a mortgage upon any real estate which he may acquire in his hands to return to the party who advances the money the amount of the advance.

That is the principal provision of the act of 1864. The remainder of that act is, in my judgment, just as advantageous. When the immigrant arrived at one of our large cities, and particularly New York, before the act of 1864 was passed, he was taken possession of by those who thought they could make money out of him, either fraudulently or otherwise; he was deceived and deluded. His purpose was to get to one portion of our country in the West or Southwest or South, but he often found that the tickets which were placed in his hands carried him to a very different locality; and the object of one provision of the act was to make it the duty of the Commissioner of Immigration to see that means were afforded to him of being transported where he wished to go. That is for his protection. There is no slavery about it except the slavery that exists in the case of any man who gets in debt for any sum, and whose debts by the law of the place where he may be made an incumbrance upon any real estate that he may have.

It seems to me, therefore, with due submission to my friend from Maine and to the committee, that the act of 1864 is a very good law; and as far as I am advised, I never heard any complaint from any quarter of the operation of that act, nor is there anything in this bill as it comes from the House which shows that there is any ground for complaint. The object of the bill is to enlarge the provisions of the original act of 1864. Now, whether that enlargement would or would not be beneficial is a question which I do not propose to discuss, for I have not examined the bill; but I agree with my friend from New York [Mr. MORGAN] that the original act of 1864 is a very wise act, very beneficial to the country, and especially to the new States, where labor is wanted, and that the proposition of the committee to repeal the act of 1864 ought of course to be rejected. I shall therefore vote for the motion made by that honorable member that the subject be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, it has been the policy of this country for many years to encourage immigration. I think it is the policy of the country still. I think it is for the interest of the country to encourage immigration. Governor Marcy when he was Secretary of State sent an agent to Europe, at a very large expense, who was gone nearly a year, on this particular business of encouraging immigration by giving information to persons desiring to come to this country. I think we need the labor, as has been said by the Senator from Maryland; these immigrants dig our canals, they help us in agriculture, they especially help the West, and we confer a great benefit and blessing on the men, women, and children that we bring to this country.

In view of all this, Congress in 1864 passed the law for the encouragement of immigration. Its operation has not been very expensive. I do not undertake to say that that law is correct in all its details; but some such law is very necessary. When this amended bill came from the other House the committee would not really entertain it for a single moment. The Senator from Maine, I think, will admit that the Committee on Commerce did not intend to pass the bill that came from the House increasing the powers of the Commissioner, on which he has commented; but they never, as far as I understood, entertained the idea of repealing the law of 1864. Although I am a member of that committee I never heard the proposition suggested; but on one occasion being absent I heard that a bill was brought in for its repeal. I need not say that I was greatly surprised at that result, because I had heard no complaint of that act either here or in the country. By that act there was a bureau established here, with an agent at New York. What are the duties of that agent? They are simply to direct the immigrant when he arrives as to the best lines of communication for him to take to find his abode in the western States. It is not a money-making affair. It is to keep him from being defrauded by railroad agents, shop-keepers, and others who might get hold of him, and I think it is a very proper duty for that officer to perform.

Now, sir, I am not prepared to say on such a bill as this that a law of so much importance should be repealed. It has had no consideration.

I am quite willing, however, to let the matter go over until to-morrow if that is deemed better than an indefinite postponement, and I will modify my motion by moving simply that the bill be postponed until to-morrow, so that the other bills which the Committee on Commerce desire to pass to-night may be taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY.) The motion of the Senator from New York is that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. HOWE. I think that the amendment reported by the committee ought to be adopted, and that the bill so amended ought to pass. I really think the act of 1864 has stood upon the statute-book too long. That act, if I do not misunderstand it, has a very different significance from that attributed to it by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. JOHNSON.] I do not understand it to be the whole scope or the main scope of that act to make these contracts entered into in different countries of Europe or elsewhere a lien on the land which the immigrant may acquire in this country. I understand it to be the main effect of these contracts to create a mortgage on the man himself.

Mr. JOHNSON. Oh, no. It only says the contract shall be a lawful one. It is no more a mortgage on the man than is any debt you or I owe a mortgage on us.

Mr. MORRILL. It says it shall be enforced.

Mr. JOHNSON. Of course, enforced like any other contract. Enforced how? By suit.

Mr. HOWE. The act is before me. It says:

"All contracts that shall be made by emigrants to the United States in foreign countries in conformity to regulations that may be established by the said Commissioner, whereby emigrants shall pledge the wages of their labor for a term not exceeding twelve months to repay the expenses of their emigration, shall be held to be valid in law."

If in any country in the world one seeking to emigrate to the United States has not the means to pay his passage over, shall pledge his labor for a term not exceeding twelve months, I do understand it to be the purpose of the second section of the act of 1864 to declare that a valid contract, and to authorize our courts to enforce it specifically against the immigrant. If that is not a mortgage of the man, so far, I should like to know what it is.

Mr. JOHNSON. It gives to whoever may be entitled to the benefit of the contract the right to receive his wages; that is all—a pledge upon his wages, not upon the man.

Mr. HOWE. And authorizes the courts to enforce that pledge.

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. HOWE. There is only one way of enforcing it, and that is specifically against the man.

Mr. JOHNSON. To make him labor?

Mr. HOWE. Yes; make him labor. It means that or it means nothing. I am just as much in favor of encouraging immigration as the Senator from New York, [Mr. MORGAN,] but it is only one kind of immigration that I want. All men throughout the world who have the means to pay for coming here are at liberty to come, good, bad, or indifferent. I would rather only the good men would come and the bad and indifferent men would stay at home; but the purpose of this act is to enable contracts to be made with those who cannot pay their passage, and to make it safe for those engaged in the business of importation to advance the money necessary to pay their passage over here, and to give them a lien on the labor of the man himself to repay the sum loaned. Now, I say, for one, I do not want men imported into this country who have not integrity enough and character enough to stand security for the money advanced to bring them over. It is not for the benefit of this country, it does not subserve any interest of it, to import that kind of labor.

But now look at the act of 1864 and see what it is worth. It creates a Commissioner of Immigration, with three clerks of such grade as the Secretary of State shall prescribe. That is the first section. What is the business of this Commissioner of Immigration and of his three clerks? Only to prescribe the forms for making contracts in Europe. That is all he has to do in the world; and you have a Commissioner of Immigration, at a salary of $2,500, with three clerks of such grade as the Secretary of State shall direct, with no other business in the world than just to prescribe rules for making contracts in Europe. He never makes any contracts; his office is to be here in the State Department; he is just as efficient an aid of immigration, it seems to me, as would be a superintendent of a New England manufacturing company who should have his office located in the basement of this Capitol. He cannot do a thing to aid immigration; he is the merest show in the world.

There is a superintendent of immigration also provided for in this act to reside in New York. What is his business? His business is to meet the immigrant when he arrives in New York and to make contracts with railroad companies for his passage to the interior, if the man has the money to pay his passage.

Mr. MORGAN. That is better than to have him robbed.

Mr. HOWE. In the interest of humanity I would not very much object to the establishment of such an office as that if it were necessary for the purposes of humanity; but I take it the State of New York will prevent these immigrants from being robbed. In point of fact these immigrants are coming over on contracts made by a corporation existing under the laws of New York, which corporation not only undertakes to provide for their passage from Europe to New York; but from New York to the interior, where their labor is wanted. So there seems to me no possible use for this superintendent of immigration in the city of New York. The act provides merely for a Commissioner of Immigration to reside in the city of Washington, and with the help of three clerks to keep his hands in his pockets, and a superintendent of immigration to reside in the city New York and to make contracts or to help to make contracts for a class of immigrants that do not come at all; that is, a class of immigrants who have got their money to pay their own bills, when we are only bringing those over who have not money to pay their own bills, but come on special contracts. I think this law has stood on the statute-book too long. I therefore favor the amendment which was reported by the Committee on Commerce to repeal this act instead of enlarging it. If this bill now pending is postponed, of course the act of 1864 stands. If we adopt the amendment to the bill which came to us from the House, and the House shall concur in that, then the act of 1864 falls to the ground and we are played out in the business of importing labor, as my friend from Maine calls it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I feel somewhat interested in this subject, and the people whom I represent here are considerably interested in it, and I hope that this law of 1864 will not be repealed. While the Senator from Maine was denouncing the law, I occupied my time in reading its different provisions, and I fail to discover in the law the objectionable features which he seemed to see. He is apprehensive that there is something in this law similar to the institution of slavery, and he says that it ought to be repealed because it operates with peculiar hardship upon immigrants to this country. I have heard of no abuses under this law. I do not believe that the immigrants for whose benefit it was intended have complained of its operation. I do not know why this effort is made to repeal the law. I have always supposed and understood that it was a law beneficial in its operation.

It is an admitted fact that there are thousands of people in Europe who are desirous to come to this country, and it is of advantage to the country that they should immigrate; their labor will be valuable to the United States. They have not the means to pay for their passage to the country. This law is intended to protect persons, ship-owners and others, that may provide those poor immigrants with a passage, because it provides that any contract that such an emigrant in Europe may make with a ship-owner to bring him to the United States shall be valid after his arrival here, and that it shall be enforced by the courts of the United States. The Senator says that the law provides for impounding the immigrant. I do not know what he means by that expression. There is nothing of that kind in the law.

Mr. JOHNSON. It says expressly that there shall be no servitude.

Mr. WILLIAMS. To guard against any inference of that kind, it expressly provides that "nothing herein contained shall be deemed to authorize any contract contravening the Constitution of the United States or creating in any way the relation of slavery or servitude." But suppose an emigrant in Europe makes this contract; he comes to the United States; he goes to the State of Ohio; under this law the contract which he has made may be enforced in the State of Ohio; he has pledged his wages for the payment of the money expended by the ship-owner to bring him to this country. If he refuses to pay, a suit may be brought, as I understand this law, by which his employer may be garnisheed—that is, the wages due the laborer may be stopped in the hands of the employer, and the employer, instead of paying the wages to the immigrant, may be required by an order of the court, as upon a garnishee process, to pay the money to the man who has transported him to the United States. That is all that that portion of the law means; and it does not in any way affect the liberty of the man but simply relates to his wages; and it further provides that if it be so stipulated in the contract and this contract be recorded in that State or county to which the immigrant removes, then that contract becomes a lien upon any land which that immigrant may purchase, and it operates like a judgment recorded; it becomes a lien upon the land and it may be collected by the sale of that land in case payment is refused.

That is all there is of the first provision, and I say instead of being injurious to the poor people of Europe it is an advantage to them, because it secures to those persons who advance money to bring them to the United States a mode of recovering back that money; and so persons are willing to advance their money for such purposes; and then it provides that when they arrive here this Commissioner of Immigration upon their arrival shall give them such information as they need as to those places in the United States where such labor is required, and it provides that this Commissioner of Immigration shall provide them with transportation and facilitate their removal to such portions of the United States as they may desire to go to. It seems to me that that provision is particularly desirable and useful, because when these people come here they are ignorant, they know nothing about the country, they are unable to speak our language, and they fall a prey to the sharks and others who are unprincipled and take advantage of their ignorance, and this law is intended to provide a person upon whom they can rely, who will give them the necessary information; and so far as I understand the operation of this law, in all respects it has been beneficial; it has assisted these poor people to come to this country; it has protected them after their arrival here; it has assisted them to travel from the large cities upon our eastern sea-board to the western States, where their labor is needed and where they can become useful and prosperous citizens; and there is no objection that I can conceive of to the law. The ghost that the gentleman from Maine conjures up here, that there is something like slavery about it, seems to me to be a figment of his own imagination. There is nothing in the law that warrants any such supposition, and I hope the law will not be repealed.

Mr. CONNESS. When the Senator from Oregon rose and began by saying that his constituents were deeply interested in this bill, I spoke from my seat and said that "that was true;" but I had no idea that their interest lay in the direction that the Senator has spoken in; and, sir, if I had a constituency whose interests lay in that direction, they might have a representative voice, but it could never be mine. This law, if I am not mistaken, when a bill, was considered in the Committee on Finance in 1864; that is my recollection. I may be mistaken.

Mr. MORRILL. That is so.

Mr. CONNESS. I remember precisely how it struck my mind at that time. I did not know until now that it had passed and become a law in so offensive a shape—offensive, I mean, to my mind.

I had noticed this class of bills passed by the House of Representatives, and do not intend to reflect upon that body when I say that it is more monstrous, as I believe, in character than the negro slavery that we have abolished, and that we claim the good opinion of mankind because we have abolished it. The Senator's argument is that encouraging immigration by laws of this kind—that is by provisions which authorize contracts to be made in foreign countries and compel their execution by the laborer in distant lands—is for the benefit of the poor immigrant. That is the argument upon which negro slavery was vindicated. Those who vindicated it believed, or at least always said, that they knew the negro character best; they knew his wants and capacities best; they knew that he was not able to take care of himself; and they always professed and said they were engaged in a work of mercy in taking care of him, when the fact was I apprehend generally that the negro took care of them; certainly they lived by his labor. And now the mission that this great Republic is to go upon among the nations of the earth is to hunt up and hunt out white men, to enable men who want their labor, and can make money and profit and wealth out of it to make contracts with them in their impoverished condition, in their misfortunes, and then use the right arm of the law to compel their execution under the stars and stripes!

Mr. President, I believe in the assimilation of the peoples of the earth, and I feel no clannishness toward any. I should favor any system of immigration which was based on the circulation in foreign countries of such facts and information as should induce a good class of emigrants to come to our new land, to cultivate its broad acres, to aid in its manufactures, and incidentally at the same time to improve their own condition. I should very gladly favor any protections that the law could throw around their coming into our country, and after they arrive here protecting them from the vile of our own population, and giving them safe passage and conveyance to the new States and Territories of the West, taking care of their immediate wants if they were in want. Everything of that kind is due to humanity, due from us to them, and I have no doubt that the addition of their labor in a large amount is beneficial to the productive wealth of the nation.

But, sir, these plans, cunningly devised, by which capital is to seize labor, by which labor is to be turned up in its vise and held as if poverty were a crime, I am utterly opposed to, for they are repugnant to my sense, and all the conceptions I have of what is right among men.

I do not launch these criticisms against the gentlemen who advocate another view of the case; but I should be unjust to myself if I said less than to describe the utter aversion I have for these plans and schemes. And, sir, it is not the office of a great nation to engage in them; it is not the office of its lawgivers to devote their talent to producing them; and I am very glad, and compliment the Committee on Commerce and its honorable chairman, and thank them for the report they have made, and the condemnation they have launched upon the existing law.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that this bill be laid aside informally, while I get the Senate to pass a couple of others.

Mr. CONNESS. No, pass it over formally.

Mr. CHANDLER. It seems that the debate will continue, and I desire to pass a couple of other bills and then resume the debate on this.

Mr. SPBAGUE. I concur with the views expressed by the Senator from California, the Senator from Wisconsin, and the Senator from Maine. I have yet to see the necessity for a bill of this kind. The Government of the United States have guaranteed through this law and by their commissioner a company in New York to do the business of importing labor. It has under the auspices of the Government of the United States solicited from the capitalists and manufacturers and agriculturists of the country opportunities to bring to this country laboring people. It has obtained from them in advance moneys for that purpose. My constituents have advanced money, believing that they were advancing that money under the security and patronage of the Government of the United States, as it was so stated to them; but many of them up to this time, to my certain knowledge, have never received back the money that they advanced nor the labor that that money was to produce. Beyond all contradiction, the Government of the United States are a party to fraud upon the people through this arrangement.

Sir, those who employ labor have not been able to avail themselves of this law. Prior to its enactment labor came free and without hinderance and without disadvantage. There were occasionally those who came who were not able or who were not willing to refund the money that was advanced, but it was so in very few cases; and I know that where there were any extraordinary restrictions placed upon labor by any peculiar contract made with them for the refunding of the passage money and other expenses it was the exception that in those cases payments were not made, whereas in the cases where a free introduction of labor was allowed the laborer himself felt in duty bound or felt free or was treated in such a way that he did pay.

Well, now, sir, under this law in my judgment, the money advanced by the capitalist, if you so call him, will not be paid back to him if the labor does not come; and the laborer if restricted by the law will never pay back a cent, and the consequence will be that your law will be a mere trap set by parties who are desirous to obtain percentages upon labor that may be imported.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to lay this bill on the table. We have other business.

Mr. COWAN. I have always been of opinion that this bill was a very impolitic one, although I think it is free from some of the objections which have been taken—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is to lay on the table. It is not a subject of debate.

Mr. COWAN. I should be very glad to see the law repealed.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the following bills and joint resolution:

A bill (H. R. No. 587) to incorporate the Soldiers' and Sailors' Union of Washington, District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 779) to incorporate the National Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Home; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 190) in regard to rations of Union soldiers held as prisoners of war.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following Senate bills and joint resolution, without amendment:

A bill (S. No. 361) to authorize W. J. Sibley; and others, trustees, to sell and convey lot No. 9, in square No. 76, in the city of Washington;

A bill (S. No. 382) to change the place of holding court in the northern district of Georgia;

A bill (S. No. 385) for the relief of Thomas W. Stevens; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 39) to refer the claim of the administrator of Richard W. Meade, deceased, to the Court of Claims.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the bill (S. No. 285) granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley railroad, and its extension to Red river, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 775) to establish certain post roads, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed a bill (H. R. No. 794) for the relief of Francis Colgen, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ADMISSION OF NEBRASKA.

Mr. WADE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 447) for the admission of the State of Nebraska into the Union; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. WADE. I move that the bill, together with the constitution of the State of Nebraska, which I now present, be referred to the Committee on Territories.

The motion was agreed to.

REVENUE OFFICERS IN THE SOUTH.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move to proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 108.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. No. 108) in relation to the pay and accounts of collectors of revenue who have failed to take the required oath of office.

The Committee on Commerce reported the joint resolution with an amendment to strike out all after the word "that," in line four, to the end of the resolution, as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized to adjust the accounts and pay the salaries and compensation of all officers and employees of the Treasury Department who have been heretofore actually engaged in collecting the revenue within the States lately in insurrection; such adjustment and payment to be made with and to each officer or employee who has failed to take the oath of office required by law, whenever his successor has been duly appointed and lawfully qualified, and not otherwise.

And in lieu thereof, to insert the following:

The Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized to pay a reasonable compensation to persons by him employed for the purpose of and who have been actually engaged in collecting the revenue within the States lately in insurrection, notwithstanding the failure or inability of such persons to take the oath of office required by law: Provided, That said compensation shall not be greater in any case than that provided for by law for officers of the revenue performing such services: And provided further, That this act shall not be deemed to authorize the continuance of such persons in such employment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It strikes me that it would be well to amend the amendment a little by adding at the end of it and as part of the proviso the following:

Nor shall any compensation or salary be paid for the services of any such person rendered after the 1st day of August, 1866, nor shall any such person be thereafter employed.

The object of this amendment is to provide for the departure of that class of persons out of the service, of the Government. There are loyal men enough who can be got to perform the service, and it is desirable to dissolve the partnership if possible.

Mr. NYE. I suggest to the Senator whether he had not better add in addition "that no such sum shall be paid until all such officers or agents have settled with the Government." There is nothing to compel these men to pay over anything; they are under no obligations to the Government.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would be a good addition to make, but I would put it in this form:

And provided further, That no such compensation shall be paid to any such person until his accounts shall have been finally settled and passed by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment as now modified.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment of the committee, as amended, was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I trust this joint resolution is not to pass, and I confess myself somewhat surprised to see it coming here with the indorsement of a committee of this body. There is a law, plain and positive, providing that no person shall be paid any compensation for the discharge of the duties of an office without taking the oath prescribed by law. In open defiance of this plain statute, men have been appointed to responsible and important offices, and now a bill is brought in to pay them, and a provision put upon it that they shall not be paid again. What do your laws amount to? Why reenact it over again? Next session, if these men continue, what good will your proviso do that has just been inserted, that they are not to be paid after a certain time? The law is now that they are not to be paid at all. Suppose the Secretary of the Treasury continues them as officers to collect the public funds of the nation, will you not be bound next session to pay them? Probably the Senators who are supporting this measure will say "no." The Secretary of the Treasury, in defiance of law, persisted in employing these men, and has been keeping them in office, I presume, ever since Congress met, and I suppose they are in office to-day, in the very teeth of a statute enacted for the very purpose of preventing men who were rebels to the country, who will not swear to their loyalty, from holding the offices of the country.

Now, sir, I am opposed utterly to paying these men one farthing for their services; I am opposed to legislating to cover up any such violations of the law, and I shall ask for the yeas and nays upon ordering this resolution to be read a third time. I trust we may have a fuller Senate when the vote is taken, that the bill may go over. Perhaps the better motion is to postpone it until to-morrow, until we can have a full Senate here, and let us vote deliberately whether we will pass such a bill as this; and when it is decided by the Senate that they will pass it, I propose, or I think the committee had better propose a repeal of the law which requires the oath.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator make that motion?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move to postpone it until to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My sympathies are entirely with the Senator from Illinois. I felt about this when it was first brought to my notice exactly as he did. I felt decidedly belligerent. There is another mistake about that; but when I came to be informed as a matter of fact that the fault about this business was much more with the Secretary of the Treasury than it was with these few gentlemen who were employed in collecting money for the United States and paying it over into the Treasury, my opinion changed, because the fact turns out to be that the Secretary of the Treasury informed these persons, who were men of individual honor as far as rebels could be such, and who were fit to be trusted in the ordinary respect of business, that this test oath would undoubtedly be repealed immediately on the assembling of Congress; and therefore he asked them to take hold and collect money in that sudden emergency before things could be sifted down there, to save the Treasury of the United States the hundreds of thousands of dollars which were coming in and which must be attended to then; and he told them that they would be paid or appointed because the test oath would be repealed, or if not the justice of Congress would provide what was fair and right under the circumstances. These gentlemen accordingly, and there are not a very great number of them, in personal good faith, "reconstructed" rebels as they were, in personal fidelity to the Government, took upon themselves the performance of these duties; they collected the revenues and remitted them to the Treasury. Now, the simple question is whether it is not just to them that a reasonable compensation, a quantum meruit should be paid for the actual days' labor which they have performed, and so dismiss them.

Our responsible agent induced them to undertake the performance of this labor under the expectation that the law would be so modified as to allow them to proceed in the performance of their duties. We have thought fit not to do it. It appeared to us upon consideration, and I believe unanimously, that simple justice, simple policy required us to go so far. That was my reason for agreeing to the report; and notwithstanding what has been said by the Senator from Illinois so eloquently and so vigorously, I am of that opinion still.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the Senate will act upon this bill now, although if the Senator from Illinois is anxious to have a full Senate I will not insist upon it. As my friend from Vermont says, every member of the committee was opposed to it when it was first introduced; but upon mature consideration, upon looking over the whole ground, as these men had performed the labor, we thought it better to pay them and let them go. They are being discharged; I believe they have all been discharged now; I do not think there are a dozen of them to-day in the employment of the Government.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Is there one?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not think there is one now. My impression is there is not one; certainly there are very few indeed. There ought to have been none, I admit; but had we not better pay them for the labor they have performed and dismiss them?

Mr. SPRAGUE. I ask whether these collectors, or persons so called, have not retained the amount of their salary from the taxes they have collected.

Mr. CHANDLER. In not one single instance as I have been informed.

Mr. JOHNSON. They paid everything over faithfully.

Mr. NYE. I hope this motion to postpone will prevail. I can see no obligation, legal or moral, to pay these men. The presumption of law, I believe, is that everybody understands, or should understand, or is presumed to know, what the existing laws are, and I think it no sort of apology at all that the Secretary of the Treasury held out inducements to these men that this test oath would be repealed. I do not know that he ever did. If he did, he was assuming to himself a prerogative that did not belong to him. I have no doubt that these reconstructed rebels supposed that the test oath would be repealed or modified when Congress convened; but they have learned ere this that no such foolish thing is going to be done at all. The Secretary of the Treasury, in the first place, had no right, under the law, to employ them. He knew it; they knew it; and therefore if there is a private contract existing between the Secretary of the Treasury and these men, let him settle with them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. NYE. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If that be so, what right has the Treasury to hold this money? We got it through these agencies; why not pay them back the $1,000,000? We take the fruit, and we ought to nourish the tree.

Mr. JOHNSON. Better return the money.

Mr. NYE. I have no doubt the Senator from Maryland would be very glad to have the money returned to these reconstructed rebels. Neither have I any doubt that the Government has a right to retain this money; it is its own; it does not belong to them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But had these persons a right to collect it from individuals?

Mr. NYE. Whether they had a right to collect it or not, if it has found its proper lodgment, that is as far as we have a right to inquire. In the first place, there could be no security taken from these men that they would refund one dollar of the money that they collected, and if they had taken every dollar of it the Government would have been as helpless to-day as they are helpless in point of law to be remunerated for their pay.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Exactly; after they have paid over every dollar.

Mr. NYE. That I do not know.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Secretary tells us so.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Where is the evidence?

Mr. EDMUNDS. In the letter of the Secretary.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Let us have it.

Mr. NYE. Whether they have paid the money or not is a matter entirely immaterial. Sir, these men were appointed in fraud of men who deserve at the hands of the Government its protection and its aid. The Secretary knew it as well as anybody when he appointed them; and we are not blind to the fact. The Secretary's letter has been on our desks asking for a modification of this law for the purpose of continuing these men in office, while around this city, as I have had occasion to say two or three times, there are starving men that have been faithful to this Union going around here wanting bread and belonging in these States. I confess that the case does not touch my sympathies at all as it did this Committee on Commerce. They have failed to arouse my sympathies for these reconstructed rebels in the least. They got their places in fraud of men who were entitled to them by every principle of honor and by every principle of duty on the part of this Government. In these States alone can be found crippled soldiers enough of this Union to fill the places that could have taken the oath, executed the bonds, and received the pittance for the collection that was their due for faithful service to this Government.

Sir, I protest against paying men who, although pretending to be reconstructed, are as rebellious to-day as they ever were, with the spirit of rebellion increasing in them, and this through the agency of the Secretary of the Treasury, is giving them the means to fight the battle against this Government and against the party that control it.

I am surprised that the distinguished Senator from Michigan, who is always so eagle-eyed to look out for these things, should have fallen into this net of the Secretary of the Treasury. Sir, they had no right to be appointed; the Secretary knew it; they have no right to be paid, and the Secretary knows it, and he appeals to this committee that have so kindly treated the thing, that were so shocked when it was first presented, and so mild upon mature deliberation! What phase of the case has been altered that changed this whole committee in the twinkling of an eye?

Mr. CHANDLER. It took a week.

Mr. NYE. My friend says "it took a week." It should have taken you a month to have undergone such a metamorphosis. Sir, I trust that before this is done we shall have a full Senate, so that we may take the deliberate sense of the body.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not object to that.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope, then, this resolution will go over until to-morrow.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Before it goes over I desire to say a word in reply to the suggestions that are made in favor of this proposition. The Senator from Vermont very gravely asks if the money collected should not be paid back. If this should be paid back, suppose the Secretary disobeys your law now, as he has been disobeying it for the last year, and continues these men in office. Next year you will pay them again, or else you will pay the whole money back.

Here is a palpable, clear violation of law. The law was enacted to meet just such cases as these. There was an apprehension in the mind of the Legislature when that statute was framed, that it was possible that persons might be appointed to office without taking the oath, and in order to provide against such cases there is a second provision that says that if they are so appointed they shall receive no compensation. Let me read a sentence from the statute:

"Hereafter every person appointed to any office of honor or profit under the Government of the United States, either in the civil, military, or naval departments of the public service, except the President of the United States, shall, before entering upon the duties of such office, and before being entitled to any of the salary or other emoluments thereof, take and subscribe the following oath."

He was given notice that before he undertook to discharge the duties of the office he must take this oath; but it was thought he might disobey that, and then before he should be paid any money he must take this oath. He understood this. The Secretary understood it; and when the Secretary of the Treasury appointed him to go on and collect the money of the Government, not his money, he violated the law. There is no money to be paid back. If a distillery manufacturer of the State of Georgia manufactured twenty gallons of whisky, the Government of the United States was entitled to forty dollars, two dollars a gallon on the manufacture of it; and the fact that it was collected by a traitor and paid over does not make it the traitor's money. I submit to the Senator from Vermont that the two-dollar tax does not go to the traitor because it came through his hands. As well might you say that if the man who manufactured it was a traitor you had no right to collect money from him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Could the person who owed the tax plead this payment in bar of prosecution?

Mr. TRUMBULL. He could plead this payment of money into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I take issue with you on that point as a matter of law.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I disagree with the Senator from Vermont as to the law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He could not justify through an illegal source.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It makes no difference how the money got into the Treasury of the United States. If he has paid the taxes to the United States, I care not whether there was any revenue collector or not. If the money has been received by the Government of the United States, the two dollars a gallon upon the whisky that has been manufactured, neither the Senator nor I nor any jury in Christendom would hold the man to pay it over the second time after we had received the money.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The law would hold so.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Nor the law. There is no such law in Christendom. That is neither justice nor right nor law. The law is founded upon justice and reason and right. It would be money had and received.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There are no offsets in such cases.

Mr. TRUMBULL. No, sir; there is no offset to this rebel collector. Now, sir, I say to pay these officers is giving up the value of this law. You might just as well admit one of these persons here as a Senator into this body without taking the oath and pay him. Suppose he came here and refused to take this oath, and discharged his duties, was allowed to come in here and discharge his duties, I do not believe the Senator from Vermont would allow him to come in; but suppose he did, would he vote, if he had got in here, to pay him?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should think if the other people had let him come in, I should vote to pay him when I turned him out. If my friend from Illinois who was here before me let him in, when I sent him away I should give him his compensation.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I would neither let him in, nor pay him when he got in, and I would not pay these officers or these persons who claim to be officers. They are not entitled to it in any sense. There were not officers. They were ineligible; they could not be appointed. They are neither entitled to hold the office nor to receive its emoluments. And this evening the Senator from Michigan says there are very few of these persons now holding office.

Mr. CHANDLER. I said I did not know there was one.

Mr. TRUMBULL. And subsequently did not know there was one, and yet the committee is not advised whether there is one or not. I do not know how it is. It is enough for me to know that there can be no officer who refuses to take this oath, and there can be no person entitled to receive the emoluments of office who refuses to take it.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator from Illinois quotes to us the law. We all know what that law is. The Secretary of the Treasury knew when he made these appointments what the law was. I know further that some of the best men of the country wrote repeatedly to the Secretary of the Treasury against these appointments, told the Secretary that Congress would not repeal this oath; but the Secretary believed that the Administration was to have a controlling influence in both Houses of Congress, and this act was to be repealed; and the persons selected to collect the revenue were given to understand that the law quoted here to-night was to be repealed promptly by Congress. They accepted the appointments given them in that belief; they have discharged their duties, as far as I know, with ability; and while I condemn the act of the Secretary of the Treasury as a willful violation of the law of the country, I do not think these persons selected by him ought to be punished for acting according to the understanding they had with the Government when they were appointed. I believe there were loyal persons enough in the disloyal States to fill these offices had they been sought for. But it is a well-known fact, clear to the observation of everybody, that persons who were loyal have been regarded very much since the war, by the Secretary of the Treasury especially, as they were regarded by the rebels during the war, as a sort of inferior portion of the southern people. All the blame in this matter belongs to one man, and one man only, and that man is the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, who deliberately acted against the advice of some of the best men of the country.

I think that we ought to pass this bill, that we ought to pay these persons, and they ought to go out of the service, those who have not already gone out, and that men who can take the oath ought to be selected to perform these duties. If they live in these States, select them there; if they do not live there, then select men from other portions of the country to perform the duty. It is well known, clear to the comprehension of every one in this country, that every one of these States has been put completely under the control and in the hands of rebels, and the great struggle is to keep them there, and no man in the country has gone so far and has acted so persistently in that course as the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States. He comes here now, and finding that he cannot obtain the repeal of this act—and if he had had any political intelligence or sagacity he would have known that before Congress met—he asks us to pay the persons he has appointed to office who have faithfully discharged their duties. I am for paying them. I do not think they are to blame. I think we ought to pass the resolution and that these persons ought to be paid and those who have not gone out ought to go out of the service, and let the responsibility of this action rest where it belongs, upon the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States. I am for the measure.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Suppose they do not go out.

Mr. WILSON. We will get them out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to postpone the further consideration of the joint resolution until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

DISMAL SWAMP CANAL.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move to reconsider the vote by which the House joint resolution No. 178, was laid over until to-morrow. The Senator from Vermont withdraws his objection to that resolution.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now withdraw my motion to postpone until to-morrow, so that the resolution may be before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution (H. R. No. 178) in reference to the Dismal Swamp Canal Company is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will state in a word for the information of the Senate that I am informed credibly that the United States own a few hundred shares of stock in this company which were subscribed for the purpose of aiding a public work, and that the State of Virginia owns some of the stock, and possibly some other State; that the canal is also under a mortgage, and that it is necessary in order to keep it open to the public that this stock should be in some way consolidated and disposed of to prevent its going into private hands and to prevent the canal being closed in the interest of a rival company. I think that is a satisfactory reason for passing the resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KANSAS AND NEOSHO VALLEY RAILROAD.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, requesting the Senate to return to the House the bill (S. No. 285) granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley railroad and its extension to Red river, in order that a correction might be made in the message announcing the amendments of the House to the said bill.

The Senate proceeded to consider the message of the House of Representatives, and it was Ordered, That the Secretary return to the House of Representatives the bill (S. No. 285) granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley railroad and its extension to Red river, with the amendments of the House thereto as requested by it.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 737, the miscellaneous appropriation bill, for the purpose of leaving it as the unfinished business for to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I rise to take the floor on that bill, as when it comes up to-morrow I desire to move some amendments to it.

Mr. RAMSEY. I desire to move an adjournment.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I give way to that motion.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 23, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. M. FRENCH.

On motion of Mr. PRICE the reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER stated as the first business in order the calling of the committees for reports to go upon the Calendar, and not to be brought back into the House by a motion to reconsider.

No reports were made.

The SPEAKER stated as the next business in order the calling of the States for resolutions in the inverse order, commencing with the State of Kentucky, where the call rested last Monday.

COMMITTEE ON RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I offer the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman offered one resolution on Monday last, and it requires unanimous consent to offer another.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the committee on reconstruction be required to report to this House whether any part of the $10,000 heretofore appropriated for the use of said committee has been paid out or expended, and if so, for what purpose and to whom paid, exhibiting all the vouchers for each payment or expenditure.

Mr. STEVENS. I object to the introduction of the resolution, and I will state that all money expended has been expended by the officers of the Senate entirely. The officers of the House have expended no part of it.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I did not know but that the committee might want some more money, and I thought it would be nothing but proper to give the Secretary of the Treasury notice.

Mr. STEVENS. I object to the resolution.

Mr. RITTER. I now offer the same resolution as was offered by my colleague; and I call the previous question upon it.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the committee on reconstruction be required to report to the House whether any part of the $10,000 heretofore appropriated for the use of said committee has been paid out or expended, and if so, for what purposes and to whom paid, exhibiting all the vouchers for each payment and expenditure.

Mr. STEVENS. Is that offered under the call of States for resolutions?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. Then I object to debate.

Mr. RITTER. I ask for tellers on the demand for the previous question.

Tellers were not ordered.

The House refused to second the demand for the previous question.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I rise to debate the resolution.

The resolution giving rise to debate, went over under the rule.

IMPORTED WOOL.

Mr. BINGHAM introduced a bill to provide increased revenue from imported wool, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. ANCONA. Does not that bill go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. Any bill proposing increased taxation must go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move a suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. That cannot be done during the morning hour.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BINGHAM entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; which was passed over for the present.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I ask leave to print a few remarks upon that bill.

No objection was made, and the leave was granted. [His remarks will be published in the Appendix.]

HOURS OF MEETING.

Mr. DELANO submitted the following resolution, upon which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That during this week the House will meet at eleven o'clock a. m., and will take a recess from half past four o'clock to half past seven o'clock p. m., and the first business in order at the evening session shall be business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. MORRILL. I demand tellers on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. DELANO and LÉ BLOND were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 59, noes 34.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

The question was upon agreeing to the resolution; and being taken, upon a division there were—ayes 69, noes 34.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. FARNSWORTH called for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays, and fifteen members voted in the affirmative.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois, called for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The resolution was accordingly agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to upon a division—ayes 64, noes 30.

FENIANS CAPTURED IN CANADA.

Mr. CLARKE, of Ohio, submitted the following resolution, upon which he called the previous question:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives respectfully request the President of the United States to urge upon the Canadian authorities and also the British Government the release of the Fenian prisoners recently captured in Canada.

Upon seconding the previous question, upon a division there were—ayes fifty-nine, noes not counted.

So the previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question was upon agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. ANCONA. Upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—ayes 112, nays 2, not voting 67; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Ancona, Anderson, Baker, Banks, Baxter, Benjamin, Bergen, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Boyer, Brewster, Buckland, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Dawes, Dawson, Deftrees, Delano, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Higby, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James K. Hubbell, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Johnson, Julian, Kelley, Kerr, Ketchum, Koontz, Kuykendall, Laffin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Loan, Lynch, Marston, McCullough, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Montton, Myers, Newell, Niblack, Nicholson, Neill, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Plants, Price, Radford, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Ritter, Rogers, Rollins, Ross, Schenck, Scofield, Shanklin, Shollabarger, Sitgreaves, Strouse, Taber, Taylor, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—112.

NAYS—Messrs. Jenckes, and Williams—2.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Belos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Barker, Beaman, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Broomall, Bundy, Chanler, Conkling, Cook, Cullem, Culver, Darling, Davis, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Donnelly, Dodge, Dumont, Finek, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Henderson, Hill, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Humphrey, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Longyear, Marshall, Marvin, McClurg, McIndoe, McKee, McKuer, Patterson, Phelps, Pomerooy, Samuel J. Randall, Sawyer, Sloan, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stevens, Stilwell, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Upson, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Winfield, and Wright—67.

So the resolution was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. ANCONA. My colleague, Mr. SAMUEL J. RANDALL, is detained from the House by indisposition. If he were here he would vote for the resolution.

Mr. RADFORD. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. WINFIELD, is absent on account of indisposition. If he were here he would vote for the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been requested to announce that Mr. THAYER and Mr. DODGE are detained from their seats by indisposition.

The result of the vote was announced as above.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a joint resolution of the House (No. 191) relating to the building lately occupied for a national fair in aid of the orphans of the soldiers and sailors of the United States.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, a joint resolution of the House (No. 93) declaring Tennessee again entitled to Senators and Representatives in Congress; in which amendments the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to Senate bill No. 269, to define the number and regulate the appointment of officers in the Navy, and for other purposes.

PARDON OF G. E. PICKETT.

Mr. SCHENCK submitted the following resolution, upon which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be respectfully requested to inform this House, if in his opinion not incompatible with the public interest, whether an application has at any time been made to him for the pardon of G. E. Pickett, who acted as a major general of rebel forces in the late war for the suppression of insurrection; and if so, what has been the action thereon; and that he communicate copies of all papers, entries, indorsements, or other documentary evidence having relation to any proceeding in connection with such application for pardon. And that he also inform this House whether, since the adjournment at Raleigh, North Carolina, on the 30th of March last, of the last board or court of inquiry which was convened to investigate the facts attending the hanging of a number of United States soldiers for alleged desertion from the rebel army, any further measures have been taken to bring the said Pickett or other perpetrators of that crime to punishment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ASSASSINATION OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

Mr. LE BLOND submitted the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That A. J. ROGERS, a member of the Judiciary Committee, be, and he is, authorized to take a copy of the evidence before said committee in the case referred to it, to inquire into and report whether Jefferson Davis, and others, had any connection with the assassination of President Lincoln; and that he have a stenographer to assist him, who is to be appointed by the Speaker, sworn to secrecy and to be under the control of the House; and that said copy be taken when the papers are not in actual use by Hon. Mr. BOUTWELL; and that the papers, or any of them, be not taken from the committee-room, and be used for no purpose but for the use of said ROGERS as a member of said committee in investigating said case.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I hope that the previous question will not be seconded.

On seconding the previous question, there were—ayes 30, noes 72.

Mr. ROGERS called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Speaker appointed Messrs. ROGERS and BOUTWELL.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 27, noes 73.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I rise to debate the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Then it goes over under the rule.

PAY OF A COMMITTEE CLERK.

Mr. WELKER submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the salary of the clerk to the Committee of Claims be fixed at the same rate as that of the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, to commence from the first day of the present session of Congress.

Mr. ANCONA. I make the point of order that, under the previous resolution of the House, this resolution must go to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. WELKER. I introduced it for reference to that committee.

The resolution was referred to the Committee of Accounts.

PROVOST MARSHAL GENERAL FRY.

Mr. ECKLEY. I submit the following resolution at the request of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DAVIS,] and I will state that I propose to debate it:

Whereas on the 30th of April a letter purporting to be written by General Fry was read in this House, together with sundry documents accompanying it, which letter was grossly libelous and reflected upon the public and private character of a member; and whereas the House having ordered an inquiry as to said letter and its truth or falsity; and whereas for that purpose a select committee was raised, which committee has ascertained and reported said letter to have been false and malicious; Therefore,

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee be instructed to inquire and report whether any breach of the privileges of the House not sufficiently reported upon by said select committee has been committed in connection with writing or sending said letter, the documents accompanying the same, or the introduction thereof into the House, or causing the same to be read in the House, or entered upon the record of the House, or making the same public, and if so, by whom, and what action, if any, should be taken; and that said committee also inquire and report whether said libel has been republished or renewed by the said General Fry or any other person since the termination of the session of said committee, and if so, by whom, and whether any and what action ought to be had thereon; and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers.

The SPEAKER. As the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ECKLEY] proposes to debate this resolution, it goes over under the rules.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 230) to amend an act to establish the charter of the Alexandria and Washington railroad, passed March 3, 1863;

An act (H. R. No. 559) to authorize the extension, construction, and use by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company of a railroad from between Knoxville and the Monocacy Junction into and within the District of Columbia;

An act (H. R. No. 379) to establish, in the District of Columbia, a House of Correction for boys;

An act (H. R. No. 261) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th of June, 1867, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 477) further to provide for the safety of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, to regulate the salaries of steamboat inspectors, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 124) authorizing the construction of a jail in and for the District of Columbia;

An act (H. R. No. 564) to annul the thirty-fourth section of the declaration of rights of the State of Maryland so far as it applies to the District of Columbia;

An act (H. R. No. 709) for the relief of Mrs. Eleanor C. Ransom;

An act (H. R. No. 601) to grade East Capitol street and establish Lincoln square;

An act (H. R. No. 615) legalizing marriages, and for other purposes, in the District of Columbia; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 159) authorizing the Commissioner of Public Buildings to employ three additional watchmen in the Smithsonian grounds.

FENIANS.

Mr. SPALDING submitted the following resolution; on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That this House respectfully request the President to cause the prosecution instituted in the United States courts against the Fenians to be discontinued, if compatible with the public interest.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. ANCONA demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. ANCONA moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

VERIFICATION OF ACCOUNTS.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, submitted the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That hereafter all bills or accounts for work or labor done, or materials or supplies of any kind furnished for the use of the House of Representatives of the United States, shall be verified by an affidavit that the same is correct, and the amount thereof is justly due and unpaid; that the items therein named were duly done or delivered for the use of the House of Representatives; that the prices therein charged, except when the price shall have been fixed by law or duly authorized contract, are the usual and ordinary prices; that nothing hath been, or is intended to be, paid, directly or indirectly, to any person as a consideration for the purchase of any of the items therein charged; and that no officer of the Government hath any interest, directly or indirectly, in the same: Provided, That this shall not apply to pay-rolls of the House, or to accounts incurred by any committee of the House, and approved by the chairman thereof in writing. And the resolution of the House of July 3, 1866, directing the mode of verifying accounts, is hereby repealed.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. KERR moved that the resolution be laid upon the table; and on that motion demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion to lay upon the table was disagreed to.

The resolution was then adopted.

Mr. ROLLINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT COMMITTEE.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, submitted the following resolution, on which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That a select committee of seven be appointed by the Speaker, to whom shall be referred all bills and joint resolutions now pending before any committee of this House, and all which may hereafter be offered, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, rendering any person who has been elected President, ineligible to a second term; as also all bills and joint resolutions proposing a change in the mode and manner of electing the President and Vice President of the United States.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. LE BLOND moved that the resolution be laid upon the table; and on that motion demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 71, nays 42, not voting 58; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ancona, Baker, Benjamin, Bergen, Davis, Dawson, Defrees, Driggs, Eldridge, Farquhar, Finck, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Hogan, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Johnson, Kasson, Kelley, Ketchum, Kuykendall, Laffin, Latham, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Loan, Marston, McCullough, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Myers, Newell, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, O'Neill, Phelps, Pike, Radford, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, Rollins, Ross, Schenck, Scofield, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Stevens, Strouse, Taber, Taylor, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Robert T. Van Horn, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—71.

NAYS—Messrs. Ames, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Banks, Barker, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Dixon, Donnelly, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Hart, Hayes, Higby, Holmes, James R. Hubbard, Julian, Keontz, George V. Lawrence, McKuer, Morgan, Moulton, Orth, Paine, Perham, Price, John H. Rice, Spalding, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Bart Van Horn, Welker, and Windom—42.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, Baldwin, Barker, Beaman, Blaine, Blow, Boyer, Brandegee, Buckland, Bundy, Chanler, Cook, Cullom, Culver, Darling, Dawes, Delano, Doring, Denison, Dodge, Dumont, Ferry, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Henderson, Hill, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, Hulburd, Humphrey, Jencks, Jones, Kelso, Kerr, Longyear, Lynch, Marshall, Marvin, McClurg, McIndoe, McKee, Morris, Patterson, Plants, Pomerooy, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Sawyer, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Sulwell, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Upson, Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Winfield, and Wright—38.

So the resolution was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired, and the House resumes the consideration of the amendment of the Senate to House bill No. 365, which was under consideration when the House adjourned on Saturday.

NEW JERSEY SOLDIERS' CERTIFICATES.

Mr. NEWELL, by unanimous consent, introduced the following concurrent resolution; which was read a first and second time:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the adjutant general of New Jersey be authorized to transmit through the mail free of postage certain certificates of thanks awarded by the Legislature to the soldiers of that State, under such regulations as the Postmaster General may direct.

The resolution was read a third time and passed.

Mr. NEWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SOLDIERS' CEMETERIES IN TENNESSEE.

Mr. SCHENCK. The Secretary of War has communicated to the Committee on Military Affairs a number of very interesting reports in relation to the national cemeteries for soldiers in Tennessee. I ask that they may be printed and laid on the table.

No objection being made it was so ordered.

ASSISTANT HOUSE STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. ROLLINS. I ask unanimous consent to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Speaker be authorized to appoint a competent stenographer as assistant official reporter to the committees of the House, who shall be paid out of the contingent fund, commencing 1st of June, 1866, the same compensation paid to such official reporter, whose term of service shall expire March 4, 1867.

Mr. RADFORD objected.

Mr. ROSS. I call for the regular order.

DITCHES AND CANALS IN PACIFIC STATES.

The House accordingly resumed the consideration of the regular order; being the unfinished business of Saturday, which was the amendment of the Senate to House bill No. 365, granting the right of way to ditch and canal owners over the public lands in the States of California, Oregon and Nevada, on which the previous question had been ordered, the pending question being the motion of Mr. SCHENCK to lay the bill and amendment on the table, on which the yeas and nays had been ordered.

Mr. HIGBY. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

Mr. JULIAN. I will not object if I can make a statement also.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. INGERSOLL. How much time does the gentleman want? Five minutes?

Mr. HIGBY. I do not want more than two minutes. I only ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] to withdraw his motion and that the House by unanimous consent allow twenty or thirty minutes for a statement of this case, giving the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands [Mr. JULIAN] one half the time. I think we can dispose of this matter, which is one of great importance not only to the West but to the East.

Mr. SCHENCK. I am perfectly willing to withdraw it with that understanding.

The SPEAKER. How long does the gentleman from California want for debate?

Mr. HIGBY. Fifteen minutes to each.

Mr. KASSON. Before that I would ask if this will allow the carrying out of an arrangement with the gentleman in charge of the bill, that is, to endeavor to get the consent of the House to offer certain amendments that will remove certain objections.

Mr. HIGBY. I have no control of the matter except by the unanimous consent of the House. The bill is beyond debate except by unanimous consent, and I have no power to make any arrangement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ROSS. I object.

Mr. STEVENS. I find that this is a very important measure and ought to have examination. I therefore move to reconsider the vote by which the House ordered the main question to be put.

The motion was agreed to—yeas fifty-three, noes not counted.

Mr. JULIAN. I am very glad to have the opportunity which I have sought to discuss this extraordinary measure; and in the outset I desire to state some facts which are necessary to a full understanding of the questions involved. About two weeks ago the Senate passed a bill on the subject of the occupation and sale of the mineral lands of the United States. The bill was sent to this House, and on my own motion was committed to the Committee on Public Lands. That committee to-day has the whole subject under its consideration, and is maturing and perfecting the bill as fast as it can, and will soon be able to report it in some form to the House.

The friends of this bill in the other end of the Capitol, becoming eager and impatient of delay, on Saturday last called up a bill of the House of Representatives entitled "An act granting the right of way to ditch and canal owners over the public lands in the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada," and struck out the whole of it except the enacting clause, and inserted the very bill which is now before the House Committee on Public Lands. This was done by the Senate, apparently without comprehending its own action, through the adroit tactics of the gentlemen referred to. The bill was sent in hot haste to this House on Saturday afternoon, when it went to the Speaker's table; and when, soon afterward, we proceeded to business upon the Speaker's table, the bill was taken up, and under the gag, with no opportunity for debate or amendment, the attempt was made to force through this House a measure revolutionizing the whole land policy of the Government, abdicating in the name of the nation its authority and jurisdiction over the richest mineral possessions on the face of God's earth, found imbedded here and there over a million square miles of our national territory.

Now, sir, if I had not obtained the opportunity to discuss this measure I should have raised the point of order that this bill is not properly before the House, and cannot be, without a successful motion to reconsider its reference to the Committee on Public Lands, or a motion to discharge that committee from the further consideration of it in order that the House may now act upon it. That point of order, however, is, perhaps, not now necessary, since the House has decided to allow the bill to be debated. But I refer to these facts to show how the attempt is made here to overturn all those parliamentary safeguards by which hasty and dishonest legislation is sought to be prevented in this body. For, if this style of legislation is to be tolerated by this House, every one of its standing committees becomes a sham and a mockery, and the House is defrauded of its right to have those committees prepare and mature measures for its action. Sir, this indecent haste, this attempt to thrust upon us a bill under a false title, which has taken its ordinary course under our rules, this plot to obtain legislation under false pretenses, is a reproach to public decency and common fair play, and merits the rebuke of this body.

Mr. Speaker, before proceeding to discuss this measure, I desire to move to amend the bill by striking out all after the first section, and insert what I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act the lands of the United States containing gold, silver, and other valuable minerals, the sale of which has not already been provided for by law, shall be subject to sale on the following terms and conditions, to wit: all such lands as are now known to contain, or which may hereafter be found to contain, such minerals, shall be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, after six months' public notice of the time and place of sale, at least once a week for six months in some newspaper having the largest general circulation, published in the vicinity of the land to be sold, but at not less than the minimum price per acre fixed on said lands as hereinafter provided for. Said public notice to contain a full description of the location of said lands, the character and quality of the minerals, the nature of the deposits in which they are found, the general topographical features of the country, the means of access to the lands, and such other matters as may be deemed important by the officers having in charge the execution of this act.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the public sales of said lands provided for in the foregoing section shall not remain open longer than two weeks; and no sales of any of the lands embraced in such public notice shall be permitted at private entry during the continuance of such public sale. Should full, fair, and free competition be prevented at any of such public sales by combinations, the titles to all lands purchased by any person engaged in such combinations or their assigns shall be utterly null and void, whether the patents for such lands shall have been issued or not, and whether the fact of such combinations shall have been discovered before or after the titles shall have issued for said lands. No person shall be permitted to bid at any such sales, or to purchase any such lands, except citizens of the United States, or those who shall have declared their intention to become such, and any such bid or purchases shall be absolutely null and void. No lands shall be offered at any such public sale except such as shall appear to the Commissioner of the General Land Office to be required by the wants of the community; and they shall be offered in separate lots, beginning at the lowest numbered lot and proceeding in regular numerical order, giving a reasonable time for bidding on each lot. All lands thus offered and remaining unsold at the close of any such public sale shall be subject to private entry at the minimum price fixed on such land.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the surveyor general for the district in which any such lands are situated to prepare plats of subdivisions of any of said mineral lands, said subdivisions to be made in accordance with the provisions of the act of 5th of April, 1832; that is to say, where it is found necessary to subdivide a quarter section such subdivisions shall be made by drawing lines from a point equidistant between the two corners of each boundary of such quarter section to a point in the opposite boundary corresponding thereto; and where it is found necessary or expedient to subdivide any such quarter section into smaller lots than ten acres each, each of such ten-acre lots shall in like manner be subdivided into four equal parts, or still smaller, on the same principle, wherever it is deemed necessary; and fractional quarter sections, or fractional quarter quarter sections, shall in like manner be subdivided into lots of suitable size for mining. Said lots shall be numbered in the same manner that sections are numbered in townships.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That for each land district there shall be appointed at least one geologist, who shall also be a good mining engineer, whose duty it shall be to make a thorough exploration of all the lands in such district containing or supposed to contain gold, silver, or other valuable ores, whether such lands are being worked or not, and to make full report of the same, with the size of the subdivisions necessary and proper to enable each purchaser to work and mine the land properly, and giving full descriptions of the kind and character of such lands and the mineral found in them; said report to be in triplicate, one to be sent to the General Land Office, one to the surveyor general, and the third to the district land office in which the land described is located; and the same shall be open to the inspection of all persons desirous of examining it for the term of at least three months prior to the time of sale of any of the lands described therein. The geologists shall be appointed in the same way as the district land officers, and receive per annum for their services — dollars.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That whenever a person is or shall hereafter be in the occupancy of a mine, or lead, or deposit of mineral, and shall be actually mining or working the same, such person shall be, and is hereby, authorized to enter the lands so actually worked, and is hereby, by legal subdivisions at a price to be computed by the costs of survey and the fees of the proper land offices. The purchase money for all said lands shall be paid in gold or silver or in bonds of the United States as hereinafter mentioned. Proof of the actual mining or working of such lands shall be made to the satisfaction of the register, receiver, and geologist for the district, or any two of them, at least thirty days before the commencement of the public sale; the proof of such mining or working shall be the affidavit of the party so mining or working, sustained by the affidavits of two respectable disinterested witnesses; and any person swearing falsely in any such case shall suffer all the pains and penalties of perjury, and forfeit all right, title, and claim he or she may have acquired to any such lands. Where any such lands are worked or mined by a company that is incorporated, the preemption right shall be proven, the entry made, and the patent issued in the name of such corporation or its assignees; but where any such company shall not be incorporated, the preemption right, entry, and patent shall be in the names of all the shareholders: Provided, however, That any such shareholder in either case, who is not a resident of the district, shall acquire, have, and hold no right to any such preemption, entry, or title: And provided further, That where two or more persons or companies shall occupy and mine or work the parts of the same lot or subdivisions, such persons or companies shall enter such lot as tenants in common; the rights of each to cover the land mined or worked by him or her, and the portion of each of the lot so occupied, shall be in proportion to the extent and value of their improvements or mines, and shall be so specified in the certificate and patent.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the register and receiver of the land district, in conjunction with the geologist, shall classify said lands with reference to their value, respectively, and the subdivisions that should be made of them to accommodate those who are actually working or mining them, or those who may thereafter desire to do so, and report to the surveyor general and the General Land Office, giving the minimum price that should be fixed on each class of lands, the location and extent of each deposit and of each settlement or mining operation, with full reasons for each conclusion. If the surveyor general has any reason to doubt the correctness of such report, he shall state his doubts and the reasons for them to the General Land Office and to the land officers and geologist, and the decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall be final as to the minimum prices of said lands and the extent of the subdivisions. No person, corporation, or association shall be permitted to purchase at public or private sale more than forty acres of any such mineral lands, nor shall any person, corporation, or association enter a second tract till he or they have shown to the satisfaction of the land officers and geologist that he or they have worked the mineral out of said lands, and that it will no longer pay the expense of working. Said purchaser shall also, before being permitted to make a second entry, sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, for cash, the land embraced in his first entry, and which he proposes to abandon.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That, for the purpose of assaying and coining said gold and silver, the President of the United States shall be, and is hereby, authorized to lay off said mineral regions into suitable assaying and coining districts, having regard to the mints now established by law, and all gold or silver mined or procured from any of the lands sold under this act shall be assayed and coined at United States assaying offices and mints, the owners paying — per cent. for assaying and coining gold, and — per cent. for assaying and coining silver; and any person who shall remove or attempt to remove any gold or silver out of the coining district in which it was procured without first having the same assayed and coined, shall forfeit said gold or silver, one half of which shall go to the informer and the other half to the United States.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That before any person shall be permitted to purchase any of said mineral lands he shall take the oath of loyalty to the United States prescribed by law; and any violation of said oath, and any malfeasance on the part of any of the officers whose appointments are authorized by this act, shall be deemed a felony, and upon being proven before any court of competent jurisdiction the offender shall be punished by a fine of not less than — thousand dollars, or imprisonment at hard labor for not less than — years, or both, at the discretion of the court; and in case of the officers, they shall forever be disqualified from holding office under the Government of the United States.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That the net proceeds of said lands shall be, and they are hereby, dedicated to the payment of the principal and interest of the bonds of the United States; and all bonds of the United States, principal and interest redeemable in gold, shall be received in payment for any of these lands. And all the provisions of this act relative to lands shall be carried out under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for that purpose, and all relative to assays, mints, coinage, &c., under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury for that purpose.

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That upon the survey of the lands aforesaid, the Secretary of the Interior may designate and set apart such portions of the said lands as are clearly agricultural lands, to which preemption or homestead rights shall not have attached as provided by law.

Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That in extending the United States surveys over the mineral regions, the surveyor general shall be, and he is hereby, authorized, whenever he shall find mining settlements, made in accordance with surveys executed by such settlers, to establish such surveys by lines, courses, corners, and so forth, connecting such lines and corners with the boundaries and corners of the sections of the rectangular surveys, and designate those lots by suitable numbers on the plats of survey, giving the reasons and facts in full for such anomalous surveys: Provided, however, That no such mining lot shall contain more than forty acres, nor shall more land be included in any such survey than the area being actually worked or mined by the settler: And provided also, That the surveyor general, under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, may cause adjacent lands to those mineral lots to be subdivided in the same manner with those lots, when the interest of the Government or the convenience of settlers shall, in his opinion, require it.

Sec. 13. And be it further enacted, That, when in his judgment it shall be necessary for the public interest, the President shall have the power, and is hereby authorized, to increase the number of land districts in any State or Territory, fix the boundaries of the same, appoint a register and receiver for each district so created, and to appoint such additional number of geologists in any land district as may be deemed necessary fully to carry out the purposes and intent of this act, the compensation of said officers to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Sec. 14. And be it further enacted, That all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. JULIAN. If that amendment is not adopted I desire to offer some amendments, which I ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend Senate bill No. 257, in line eight, section two, by striking out "one thousand" and inserting "five hundred."

Mr. JULIAN. I have designated my amendments by the lines and sections of that bill, because this is virtually the same bill, and the one now before us is not printed.

The SPEAKER. Senate bill No. 257 is not now before the House.

Mr. JULIAN. I know that, but I refer to it simply by way of designating my amendments.

Mr. HIGBY. I make the point of order that the bill to which the gentleman offers his amendments is not now before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Chair cannot entertain an amendment to Senate bill No. 257.

Mr. JULIAN. Well, I wish to offer these amendments to the bill in case my first amendment be voted down, and I will designate them without reference to the Senate bill.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is a very extraordinary one, as I shall endeavor to show by reference to its provisions. It declares that the mineral lands of the United States shall be open to exploration and occupation, "subject to the local custom or rules of miners." It then provides that the miner shall locate his claim, which shall be extended and bounded according to "the local custom or rules of miners." It provides that he shall improve or develop the mine according to "the local custom or rules of miners." It provides, then, that he shall have the right to have his lead or vein surveyed by the surveyor general of the land district, not according to the public surveys, and under the authority of the United States; not having reference to any base lines at all; but that he shall call upon the surveyor general to survey the vein according to the boundaries already fixed by "the local custom or usage of the miners," precisely as I call upon the surveyor of my county to survey my private estate. Upon that survey the surveyor general is to make out a plat or diagram of the vein, and transmit it to the General Land Office at Washington, upon which it is made the duty of the Land Office to issue a patent to the claimant.

The bill further provides that in case of any conflict between different claimants of any vein or lead it shall be determined by the local courts having jurisdiction, without any appeal to the general or local land office, or to any tribunal authorized to speak in the nation's behalf. The bill, in other words, as the House will observe, is an absolute deed of quitclaim of all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the mineral lands of the nation, and committing them to the management, keeping, and disposition of the miners, who alone are henceforward to settle every question as to boundary, title, survey, and every other matter and thing involved in this stupendous innovation upon the policy of the nation.

Now, I submit that this is an extraordinary measure indeed; and I take occasion here to refer to the argument, so persistently urged in support of this bill, that it is acceptable to Nevada and California and to the mining regions of our country. Why, undoubtedly it is acceptable to them. I should deem it marvelous if they did not accept a free gift of the gold and silver to be found interspersed over a million square miles of the richest mineral lands on the globe, at the hands of the Government of the United States, which is thus to renounce and abdicate in their behalf its ownership of the whole of it. If I had my home in the center of these mining regions, and owned an immense fortune in minerals, like some of the supporters of this bill, I should undoubtedly favor it. I would urge the passage of the bill with all the zeal which self-interest and local feeling could prompt. I do not think I would resort to the crooked and indefensible legislative tactics to which I have already adverted in order to carry my point, but certainly I would be swayed very strongly by circumstances so controlling.

It is altogether consistent with the interests of these mining districts that their Representatives should zealously labor for this bill, and that honorable gentlemen, not members of this House, should come upon this floor and perambulate these aisles as they did on Saturday and are again doing to-day, and tell us to vote for this bill, and command us, in the tone of slave-drivers, to "Get up, get up, help us, this is a local measure, help us to carry it!" Admirably natural and characteristic! But occupying the stand-point that I do outside these mineral districts, and of the contagion of local opinion and feeling, and having no other desire than the establishment of a broad and enduring national policy—

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I rise to call the gentleman to order. I submit that reflections upon members of the Senate are not in order.

Mr. JULIAN. Mr. Speaker, I made no reflection upon any member of the Senate; and the gentleman's point of order is not well taken.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to make reflections upon Senators. The Chair stated on a previous occasion that Senators have the right to come upon this floor to confer with members in regard to legislation, as Representatives have the right to go upon the floor of the Senate Chamber to confer with Senators in regard to legislation; and Senators coming on this floor must not be criticised by members, as the Presiding Officer of the Senate would refuse to allow Senators to criticise Representatives.

Mr. JULIAN. I understand the point of order perfectly. I have not mentioned any Senator from any portion of the country, and I shall not do so. I commented upon the conduct of distinguished gentlemen, not members of this House, who have undertaken to dragoon members on this floor into the support of a measure in which they are interested. But I have alluded to no Senators, for the simple reason that it would be unparliamentary to do so.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the basis of this policy, thus revolutionary of all the past action of the Government, the basis of this extraordinary movement here is the local custom or rules of the districts containing this mineral; the crudely extemporized usages of the miners; and I desire to show what a sandy foundation it is upon which these gentlemen propose to build up their grand superstructure of a land policy for the United States. I propose to read some passages—and I ask for them the attention of the House—from a Senate report of the Legislature of Nevada, the home of the mining gentlemen so deeply interested in this bill, and the locality, probably, of the richest mineral in America. It is an official legislative document, which one of the Senators from Nevada has told me is authentic, and its statements to be accepted. I want the House to see upon what a sorry foundation this new edifice is to be built:

"1. As to uniformity, there is now nothing approaching it. There never was confusion worse confounded. More than two hundred petty districts within the limits of a single State, each one with its self-approved code; these codes differing not alone each from the other, but presenting numberless instances of contradiction in themselves. The law of one point is not the law of another five miles distant, and a little further on will be a code which is the law of neither of the former, and so on, ad infinitum, with the further disturbing fact superadded, that the written laws themselves may be overrun by some peculiar custom which can be found nowhere recorded, and the proof of which will vary with the volume of interested affidavits which may be brought on either side to establish it.

Again, in one district the work required to be done to hold a claim is nominal, in another exorbitant, in another abolished, in another adjourned from year to year. A stranger seeking to ascertain the law is surprised to learn that there is no satisfactory public record to which he can refer; no public officer to whom he may apply, who is under any bond or obligation to furnish him information, or guarantee its authenticity. Often in the newer districts he finds there is not even the semblance of a code, but a simple resolution adopting the code of some other district which may be a hundred miles distant. What guarantee has he for investment of either capital or labor under such a system?"

That, Mr. Speaker, is the foundation upon which the fabric of this new policy is to be built. Why, sir, the man who builds his house upon the sand is a philosopher in comparison with the men who would erect an enduring land policy for this nation on the basis of such confusion and bewilderment and jargon under which the people of Nevada are to-day groaning.

Mr. BIDWELL. I desire to ask the gentleman whether or not the report from which he has just read is not the strongest possible argument in favor of the bill now before the House; whether that report does not favor precisely this bill.

Mr. JULIAN. I will answer with very great pleasure. I answer that, so far as it from being true that these facts warrant the policy of this bill, the policy of making this confusion and conflict a basis of action, they prove directly the reverse. What you want is not to recognize this system of uncertainty and instability, but to sweep it away, and usher in through the authority of the nation a system of permanence and peace. The bill before us hands over the miners everywhere to interminable litigation, discord, and strife. Instead of leading them out of the bondage into which the non-action of the Government has led them, it leaves them to wrestle with their destiny as best they may. That is what the nation will do in remanding this question to the miners, as provided for in this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I will tell the gentleman from California [Mr. BIDWELL] what these facts and statements which I have read prove. They prove the absolute necessity for interposing the arm of the national Government through its system of surveys, and thus clearing away this disorder and confusion through the well-adapted machinery of the land department. That is my answer to the gentleman from California.

This machinery is as old as the Government, and perfectly fitted to do the work without any new inventions. My friend from New Hampshire [Mr. MARSTON] suggests that this bill overturns the common law of the world, by allowing one man to run half a mile under the land of another. I may have occasion to refer to that in another connection before I conclude. I resume the reading of the Nevada report:

"2. As to permanency of the regulations, even such as they are, there is now no guarantee even of that. A miners' meeting adopts a code; it stands apparently as the law. Some time after, on a few days' notice, a corporal's guard assembles, and, on simple motion, radically changes the whole system by which claims may be held in a district."

And this "local custom of miners," enacted by "a corporal's guard" of adventurers, who are here to-day and gone to-morrow, is to be the basis of a national policy, and the harbinger of order and peace in the mining regions! Instead of extirpating this pernicious system, or

"Before a man may traverse the State, the laws of a district, which by examination and study he may have mastered, may be swept away and no longer stand as the laws which govern the interest he may have acquired, and the change has been one which by no reasonable diligence could he be expected to have knowledge of. But if the laws be uniform and registered upon the statute-book of the State, he will have security in his tenure, and reasonable notice of any change therein.

"3. As to protection to the miner and encouragement to the capitalist, the present system, or lack of system, affords neither. The curse of uncertainty of titles to land in our sister State did not, through fifteen years of her history, more paralyze her progress, than the uncertainty of mining titles in the outside districts now retards our development. Five years ago a horde of greedy prospectors, from every part of the Pacific coast, swept over our State, leaving their notices of location on every 'dip, spur, and angle,' 'thick as leaves in Vallombrosa,' and after a year or two of feverish unrest, swarmed away again to the newer fields of Idaho and Montana, leaving nothing to mark their passage but their faded 'notices' mouldering on the hill-sides, their pitiful burlesque of development in the way of assessment work, and the threatening terrors of the common-law doctrine as to 'vested rights.'"

Sir, in the light of these remarkable facts, coming to us in an authentic form from the State of Nevada herself, I argue the folly of now establishing any new dispensation on any such foundation. I repeat it, what the nation wants to-day, what the miners and the whole country are hungering and thirsting for, is the interposition of the national Government through the directing hand of the land department, dispelling the chaos and disorder which now afflict the mining regions, bringing light out of darkness, and opening up the pathway to prosperity and peace. That is what we want.

Why, Mr. Speaker, the Constitution of the United States declares that Congress "shall make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property of the United States." What right has the Congress of the United States to abdicate its jurisdiction over this great domain? What right has the central Government, owning these lands in fee, to say to these embryo communities in the far West that it gives up to their absolute discretion and management these great magazines of mineral wealth? Why, sir, it would be a most wanton recreancy to the grand trust devolved upon us if we should do so. Here is the General Land Office in Washington, with its local land offices multiplying in every portion of the public domain in which they are demanded. The State of Nevada has registers and receivers, with their offices located in the very midst of her minerals, and armed under existing laws with the power to deal with all questions which may arise affecting the public lands.

The register and receiver under the laws of Congress, charged with the execution of our land policy within their respective districts, and in the vicinity of the matter in dispute, can call parties before them, hear their statements, take evidence, and determine the whole matter, with the reserved right of either party who may feel aggrieved to appeal to the General Land Office at Washington or to the Federal courts under existing laws. Why do you propose to take away from the register and receiver of the land districts of Nevada their jurisdiction over this question? Why do you wish to confer the jurisdiction and settlement of a national question upon a State or territorial tribunal? Did anybody, before this bill was introduced, ever hear of such a proposition? Can Congress thus delegate such a power?

Mr. Speaker, it is said that the reason why these disputes should be referred to the local tribunals is that they are disputes about the possession of the land only, and not about the title; that it only involves the question as to whether A or B has been the trespasser upon the possessory title of the other. Why, sir, if you will read this bill you will find that the question of possession is the question of title, for it declares expressly that the party to whom is awarded by the local court the possession of the land shall thereupon receive the title from the Federal Government. A novel idea, indeed, that this does not involve anything but the right of possession; that I, owning a tract of land about which two men are quarreling, shall not have the right to say that the honest man and not the rogue shall take it if I see fit to grant it to either.

The nation owns the fee of every rood of these mineral lands. Every inch of them is, to-day, legally the property of the Republic. The title is in the great body-politic of the nation; and is it not a surprising doctrine that the Government, representing this body-politic, shall not be consulted as to the question of title between conflicting claimants? The House cannot fail to see that this question of possession, which it is proposed to refer to the local tribunals, is a question of title. The gentlemen from California know it. They know that the moment the question of possession is settled under this bill, it is made the duty of the land department to execute a patent accordingly. Even if it were not so, there is no occasion for transferring the question from the land department of the Government to the local tribunals of the miners. The machinery of the Land Office is well understood and is perfectly adapted to the work of settling all disputes.

Sir, I repeat, what we want to-day is the intervening arm of the national authority in the settlement of all disputes and the consequent security of titles. I see here around me gentlemen from the Northwest who know something about the policy pursued in relation to the lead and copper mines in the upper peninsula of Michigan and in the State of Illinois. Years ago we adopted the policy of leasing those mineral lands, and retaining the fee in the national Government. The result was an utter failure, financially and otherwise. We established, at length, the policy of survey and sale, and I remember that Congress instituted a geological survey, which was conducted, I think, by a distinguished scientific gentleman from my own State, David Dale Owen, in connection with another gentleman; and their labors proved to be of great value to the country and to the land department. We had also the ordinary land survey and subdivision of the mineral regions, and the lands were opened to purchase upon six months' notice. The moment we instituted this policy of survey and sale order began to bear rule in the mining regions, sober and intelligent citizens became purchasers and settlers, and organized and prosperous communities were established.

Sir, I would enact a law—and the Committee on Public Lands have agreed upon a bill to that effect—extending our surveys over all these mineral lands. The bill provides, in connection with the general survey, for a geological survey, the surveyor to be a mineralogist and mining engineer, and the mineral regions to be explored and classified preliminary to their sale. The bill, however, provides that these lands shall be open to occupancy and settlement, and the title is to be conferred in fee upon every man who is, or shall hereafter be found, in the occupancy of the lands, and developing the same, on payment of the fees of the Land Office and the costs of survey. Unlike the bill before the House, we require no thousand dollars' worth of improvement beforehand, and no five dollars per acre as a price, but we say to the adventurers and explorers from all quarters: explore these mineral regions; select your claim; occupy and improve it in good faith, and you shall have your lead or vein of land, with its minerals, on these conditions. This is the homestead law, in its essential principles, applied to these fields of gold and silver.

That is the policy that I propose. A bill making provision for these things and conforming to the land policy of the United States has been agreed upon by the Committee on Public Lands, as I have stated; and I have offered the sections of that bill as a substitute for the bill now before us. I hope, if any legislation is to be had upon this subject at this session, it will be legislation of that character, and I can see no reason whatever for discarding the well-tried instrumentality of the Land Office for the purpose of trying experiments like this. I know it is said by the friends of this bill that these mines are so numerous and so peculiarly situated, and the strife growing out of them is so unusual, that the land department is incapable of settling it at all; that it would cost the miners more than their claims are worth to settle their disputes except in their local tribunals, and that it would be practical confiscation to require these disputes to be settled as other land controversies. But why should this be so? There are land offices in the mining districts. They are there for the purpose of surveying and disposing of the agricultural lands. The machinery of these offices extends everywhere over the Republic, and whether it applies to the gold and silver lands or not. I want to know why these offices cannot be used in the settlement of these difficulties.

Mr. McRUER. I would ask the gentleman if the registers and receivers of the land office have final jurisdiction over these questions, and if every single case brought before them is not subject to appeal to the Land Office in this city?

Mr. JULIAN. I will answer the gentleman. I supposed he knew, having been in California, and knowing all about these questions, that there is an appeal from the local land offices to the General Land Office in Washington. But let me say further that I can imagine no reason why the United States, owning these lands in fee, should not have the right on final appeal to determine the question of title. It may be attended with expense. It may be that a poor man in Nevada could not carry up his case to Washington, while a rich man could, but still the nation ought not to thrust itself in the way of applicants for relief. Why should we close the door against them? And let me say, that under the bill of the Senate, there may be litigation in the Federal courts at all events. If there is a claim between citizens of different States that delay and litigation which the gentleman so much dreads might occur. He does not wholly evade the difficulty by taking the jurisdiction from the local land offices; but I venture to say that in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the final adjudication will be before the registers and receivers of the local land office. It would only be in rare cases that an appeal would be sought. All disputed claims between preëmptors and purchasers and homestead claimants on the public lands go before these officers, and the claimants of mineral lands certainly ought to have the right to appeal if they should desire it.

But, Mr. Speaker, I need not dwell upon that. If this bill is not disposed of in the way that I desire, by the adoption of the substitute I have offered, then I shall propose to amend certain features in the way I will now indicate. Where it requires the purchaser to pay five dollars per acre, I would change it so that he may pay but $1 25 per acre, in conformity with our laws in other cases. The object is not to make money by the sale of these lands so much as to develop them. And any policy which stimulates exploration and development is the wisest policy for the Government, for individual wealth is national wealth.

I also propose to strike out that clause which requires the miner to have expended $1,000 on his improvement before he can obtain a title to it. I think if a man spends $500, or even $100, on a vein, he should have a title; or even if he has expended a dollar on it, and will go on it, and work it and develop it, the Government ought to give him a title. I would not cripple the exploration and settlement of these lands by the interposition of this obstacle of $1,000. It might do for my distinguished friend, the Senator from Nevada, to exact a condition of that kind; it might put money in his pocket, for aught I know. But it cannot serve the interests of the rank and file, the poor men who are exploring these mines and desire to find homes. And I propose further to provide, in accordance with the views already expressed, that the settlement of disputed cases shall be determined by the land department of the Government, as in other cases, subject to the right of ultimate appeal to the Land Office at Washington.

If we adopt this bill at all it certainly should be with the amendments I have indicated. But I hope the substitute I have offered may prevail. I wish to inquire of the Speaker, before I take my seat, whether it is now in order for me to move to commit this bill to the Committee on Public Lands, as I gave notice the other day I would do, that committee now having charge of the subject.

The SPEAKER. That motion will be in order.

Mr. JULIAN. I will make that motion. As I said before, this bill is in the Committee on Public Lands, who have partially matured it. We are now completing the consideration of it, and perhaps after another session we will be through with it. The bill has been reenacted by the Senate under a false title, and is hurriedly brought here for the purpose of ousting a standing committee of this House of its jurisdiction. That action, I claim, ought not to receive the sanction of this House, unless we are willing to take from our standing committees their powers in the preliminary examination of questions upon which we are to act. I now move that this bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced to the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a House bill (No. 776) in relation to the unlawful tapping of Government water-pipes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment, a joint resolution of the House (No. 190) in regard to rations of Union soldiers held as prisoners of war, in which amendment the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed joint resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 133) to change the place of holding the terms of the circuit court for the district of West Virginia; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 139) for the benefit of the Illinois Soldiers' College and Military Academy.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, asked and obtained indefinite leave of absence for himself.

Mr. SCHENCK. My colleague, Mr. BUNDY, is compelled to leave on imperative business, and I ask leave of absence for the remainder of the session for him.

No objection was made, and leave was accordingly granted.

PRINTING OF TESTIMONY.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, from the Committee on Territories, reported certain testimony taken by that committee, in pursuance of the order of the House, in connection with Utah; which was laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. SPALDING. I ask leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. BUCKALEW, after Wednesday next.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I must object to any further leaves of absence being granted this session, unless some very good reason is assigned.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks leave of absence for the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. GRINNELL.

Mr. SPALDING. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks leave of absence for the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. NOELL.

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the votes this morning show the presence of only eighteen more than a quorum.

JANES, FOWLER, KIRTLAND AND COMPANY.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill No. 429, for the relief of Janes, Fowler, Kirtland & Co., be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. SPALDING. I object.

MINING DITCHES, ETC.—AGAIN.

Mr. KASSON. I have several amendments which, by an arrangement that has been made, I propose to offer to this bill. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from California [Mr. HIGBY] whether he would prefer that I shall offer those amendments before or after he has submitted his remarks.

Mr. HIGBY. I would like to know by what agreement or arrangement the gentleman is to have the opportunity to offer those amendments.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman in charge of this bill, with whom such understandings are always arrived at, agreed that I should have the opportunity this morning to offer the amendments. If the gentleman from California wishes to preclude all amendments to this bill, even those most friendly to his interests, I certainly shall not press them upon the attention of the House.

Mr. HIGBY. I was not aware that there had been any such agreement. Whatever arrangement has been made, I of course will live up to it.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to remark upon the character of this bill that it is an entire divestment of the United States of two things, which I think the United States should always retain within its control: one is the fee of the mining property; the other is the right to regulate the production of gold, in order that no private interests, no local rules or regulations may interfere with the proper and legitimate supply of the mineral which furnishes our measure of value in the United States. As the Constitution gives us the right to exercise this control we should, in my opinion, never part with it.

With these views, deliberately and long entertained, I have made inquiry to ascertain whether this bill as it comes from the Senate could be intelligently amended so as to secure those two results, and at the same time attain the great object which the gentlemen from the mining districts have in view—an object equally legitimate and equally deserving the attention of the House—which is that security shall be given to the possessory titles and the interests already vested, under no authority from the United States, but simply through the enterprise and irrepressible zeal which characterize the American people. How shall we accomplish these two purposes—the reservation of this supreme right of the United States and the security of those who are willing to invest their property and even expose their lives in the production of this very valuable mineral?

In order to answer that question, I propose to amend in the fourteenth line of the second section by changing the phrase "granting such mine" so as to read, "granting the use of such mine;" also, by striking out in the sixteenth and seventeenth lines all after the word "adjoining." This, Mr. Speaker, is for the purpose of providing that the parties who now have possession of a mine shall have a patent granting to them the use of a mine, which, when the title is ascertained, is to be exclusive of all others making claim thereto hereafter, and will secure the investments already made by citizens of the United States.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JULIAN] has suggested that we shall violate a great principle of the common law if we allow these miners to enter the adjoining lands. I wish to say, sir, that I differ with him; and with the adoption of my amendment his objection will fall to the ground. Gentlemen who have not visited the mining districts may not, perhaps, be aware that the different veins and lodes are not perpendicular, but descend frequently at an angle, the angle being sometimes even forty-five degrees; and thus they go down hundreds of feet into the earth. They have been known to run a short distance very nearly horizontally, and then to descend at an angle.

The lode must be followed wherever it leads. I recollect two mines in Colorado of very great value indeed, where two lodes cross each other some three hundred feet below the surface of the earth, and each man must follow his own lode, and where it crosses he must go on the other side, on the other land, and vice versa, the other claimant must go on other land. This bill is intended to provide that each may use his own lode and nobody else, though in descending the earth he may strike another; that each must follow his own lode, wherever that may lead. That I regard as indispensable.

In the third section, page 3, line fifteen, where it provides that upon the payment to the proper officer of five dollars per acre, together with the cost of such survey, plat, and notice, and giving satisfactory evidence that said diagram and notice have been posted on the claim during said period of ninety days, the register of the land office shall transmit to the General Land Office said plat, survey, and description, &c., I propose to strike out "per acre" and insert "for each one hundred lineal feet along the vein or lode." It is simply to make it follow the grant of the use of the mine, and that takes with it so much of the adjoining land as is necessary for the development of the mine. That is also indispensable.

I then insert "for the use thereof" and "a claim on;" so it will read:

And a patent for the use thereof shall issue for the same thereupon. But said plat, survey, or description shall in no case cover more than one vein or lode, and no patent shall issue for a claim on more than one vein or lode, which shall be expressed in the patent issued.

I also in the fourth section propose, in the adjustment of the survey, that it shall be made under regulations to be provided by the Commissioner of the Public Lands.

In the eighth and ninth lines of the fourth section I strike out "local rules, laws, and customs of miners" and insert "rights hereby conferred." That also accomplishes the purposes of the gentlemen from the mining districts.

At the end of the fourth section is a proviso that no person may make more than one location on the same lode, and not more than three thousand feet shall be taken in any one claim by any association of persons. It is previously provided that the discoverer may make two. That is right, and I propose to insert "other than the discoverer." It will then read:

And provided further, That no person other than the discoverer may make more than one location on the same lode, and not more than two thousand lineal feet shall be taken in any one claim by any association of persons.

In the fifth section, where it is provided that "as a further condition of sale, in the absence of necessary legislation by Congress, the local Legislature of any State or Territory may provide rules for working mines involving easements, drainage, and other necessary means to their complete development, and those conditions shall be fully expressed in the patent," I would add "until otherwise ordered by Congress." That gives them temporary regulation until we find it necessary to exercise the reserved supreme right of the United States. There are some other verbal corrections in the next and following sections. In the ninth section, instead of saying we protect the owners of reserved rights, I say so far as the rights of the United States are concerned as against any legal claims they may have the right of way as granted and limited by a right of way across and through the public lands of the United States.

In the tenth section, where agricultural lands are granted, I say it shall be done without prejudice to the right of the United States to deal with them as mineral lands in case of discovery of such mineral therein.

Then I add an additional section, as follows:

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That Congress reserves the right of forfeiture and of redispotion of all claims patented under the provisions of this act, which shall not be in good faith developed, used, and worked within three years from the date of such patent, and with reasonable continuity thereafter; and to provide all rules, regulations, and conditions for ascertaining the same and relating thereto; and if any such claim shall be abandoned, the same shall be thereby forfeited, and may be again patented to any other claimant on the same terms as before, the facts to be ascertained by the like proceedings as provided in the second and third sections of this act; and the proper regulations for carrying this act into effect shall be provided by the Commissioner of Public Lands, approved by the Secretary of the Interior; and Congress further reserves the right to adjust, by general law, in any mining district, any discrepancies, irregularities, or uncertainties touching the character and management of mining claims.

This concludes my own views as to the necessity of a reservation of the rights of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, the great object of the Government should be to develop the mineral resources of that part of the country; and in doing that it can best be accomplished by providing that they shall not absorb these lodes and veins and hold them, as they do the public lands of the United States, for purposes of speculation, but they shall go on and continue in good faith to develop them. If they do that, then the title will be granted; if they do not, the title reverts to the United States. Unless this be done, I see no safety in passing this bill as it comes from the Senate.

Mr. HIGBY. I yield five minutes to my colleague.

Mr. McRUER. I wish to make one or two remarks touching this bill. In the first place, I wish to say that the proposition to sell the mineral lands did not come from the Pacific coast or from the mineral region. Two years ago we were progressing, as we have progressed for the last seventeen years successfully, to develop the wealth of that country, and possessory titles were considered sound. They were bought and sold with entire confidence and faith in the legislation of this country, the same as titles to real estate were bought and sold. But, sir, since that time there have been introduced into Congress schemes to sell the mineral lands without any regard to the possessory titles.

I hold in my hand a bill that was introduced into the Thirty-Eighth Congress, reported from the Committee on Public Lands, which proposes—what? Why, sir, to put up every possessory right within that whole region, and sell it at auction to the highest bidder. And the whole logic of the speech and the report made in regard to that measure was, that the people of the mineral regions were a set of vagabonds, and the women were, to a large extent, unchaste, and therefore we should drive out that worthless class of people, sell the mineral lands, and thus attract a meritorious class of people to those regions as settlers. That was the logic of the speech made to the Thirty-Eighth Congress.

It is in consequence of the apparent encouragement which such a scheme has received here that we now feel that our whole titles are insecure. It has disturbed the faith, it has disturbed the credit, and consequently those who are interested in that region, those who have the interests of that country at heart, have set themselves to work to frame a bill recognizing the possessory rights of all these people, recognizing the fact that they are and have been a meritorious class of citizens and that the development of that region to its greatest extent is for the best interest of the whole country.

Now, sir, this bill came from the Senate some weeks since. It was sought to be referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, which, in my opinion, was the proper committee to which it should have gone. But through the influence of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands it was sent to his committee. And I wish to state to the House now that the majority of the Committee on Public Lands are in favor of this bill as it came from the Senate; and if it had not been for action of which the House has been advised it would have been reported to the House before this time. I understand the Committee on Mines and Mining have considered this bill, and are ready to report favorably upon it at any time.

It has also been before the Committee on Territories, and they approve of it. And, sir, I hope that this House will pass the bill just as it came from the Senate, without any further amendment; because there is an imperative necessity for something being done that will assure the people in those regions that the Government does not mean to undermine them.

Mr. HIGBY. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Nevada.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. Mr. Speaker, as a matter of course, in the brief space allowed me, I cannot discuss this bill fully. There are two or three objections that have been urged to this measure as if they were of vital importance. It is objected, first, that our local rules in regard to mining are conflicting. In regard to that, I will say that they are not so much so as the report which was read this morning by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JULIAN] would indicate. There are differences, it is true, but by no means to the extent indicated, as some of us know by experience.

Again, it is said that this bill is to overturn the whole land system of the United States. Sir, the United States has had a system applicable to farming lands, but since the discovery of our gold and silver mines, I will ask any gentleman to tell me what system this Government has had. In 1850 it was proposed to legislate upon this subject. A discussion took place in the Senate, but ultimately nothing was done, on the ground that Congress was not sufficiently informed, and it would, therefore, leave the people of the mining region to get along as best they could. Accordingly, they were let alone, and for seventeen years they have been going on under their own local rules. Rights of property have grown up. Men have spent seventeen years of their lives there, and invested their capital. Their future hopes are all centered in that country. They have considered themselves safe heretofore, and I tell you if we could be sure that the Congress of the United States would never interfere with our occupation of these lands, would never survey and cut them up into square parcels and sell them at auction, we would not come here asking you to dispose of these lands in the manner proposed by this bill, because the local title would be considered safe.

Sir, we ask gentlemen not to put us off. We want security. We have lived there almost a generation, and is it too much that we come here and ask you to pass this measure? Are we to be charged with being impudent because we are earnest and want you to believe us? We, as American citizens, ask that we shall have the same rights as you have. You own your property here. We ask that the Government of the United States shall give us the same titles to ours. I know that the response of every true man is that we are right. Why should we be lessees and tenants always? Is that the system that the American Government wishes to establish—that all the rest of you may own your homes, but we who delve in the earth for the precious metals shall be tenants and serfs always? I ask the House now to say "no."

Heretofore the United States has had no system in regard to the mineral lands. Now we propose that the people shall hold these lands under their local rules. This is a legalization of the system by the United States, a thing which has never been done except by permission heretofore. We ask that our occupation may be declared legal, simply retaining the right on the part of the United States to dispose ultimately of these lands to the possessors. That is the first section of the bill.

This bill gives a permissive right to a man in occupation of a mine or lode to buy of the United States provided he has expended $1,000 upon it, showing that he is in earnest and has settled in good faith, and is not seeking to seize it and hold it for speculative purposes. Now, there have been disputes between men over what they consider valuable mines, involving sometimes millions of dollars. The rights of the different parties to this dispute are dependent on our local rules. We occupy upon the doctrine of possession, upon that great common law that the people have established for themselves during the twenty years past, of which you know nothing and with which Congress has never undertaken to meddle. That determines our rights as between ourselves. Now, we say it is nothing to the United States who buys the land, but it is of immense importance to us that the man should be held to be the owner who, under our rules, regulations, and customs, is entitled to possession.

It is objected to the bill that we are to settle that question in our local courts. I tell you all our rights in these mining regions depend upon local rules and customs, and they must be settled there. We will trust to a jury of our countrymen and to the mode of procedure in our courts, our interests, our homes, our whole possessions much more freely and with much more confidence than we will trust them to any man who happens to be appointed to political position in the Government, whether he be commissioner in a land office, or Secretary of the Interior, or a clerk who may be deputed to decide upon our disputes. Our rights that have grown up under the common law give us that equal protection that Englishmen and Americans have always claimed, that their disputes shall be submitted to the courts and to a verdict of their peers. I ask this House not to change that, but let these disputes be settled there in our courts, for we can decide them much better there.

Further, let me tell this House that if Congress shall say that these disputes must go to the Land Office, it will have the effect of opening litigation which has been settled for years past, and mining claims that are now supposed to be worth fifty, sixty, or one hundred thousand dollars, will become worthless the moment the information reaches there that this Congress has decided that the Secretary of the Interior shall have the final decision of these claims.

Sir, there is not a man from those States and Territories who dare go home and face the indignation of that people if he should vote to throw this property into litigation again, after it has passed through the ordeal and had the determination of our highest courts. I have stated now all the overturning of our land system which this bill contemplates. You have never had any system as to our mineral lands. Now, we ask that the determination of the question as to who are rightfully in possession shall be left to our courts, and not to the Secretary of the Interior.

I know I have been a little broken in my argument, for I cannot state it fully and regularly in the brief time that is allowed me. I think I have referred to the prominent objections which have been made to this bill. In regard to whether the amount to be expended by a miner to entitle him to a title to his claim shall be $1,000 or $500, we are satisfied with the sum as it is in the bill, $1,000. We would not object to $500, except that it would involve delay to amend the bill. And so, too, in regard to the price per acre. We would not object to $1 25, except that the bill now has it five dollars per acre, and we think it better to pass that way and changed afterward by another bill, if it should be considered necessary.

Mr. HIGBY. Mr. Speaker, I find that any bill asking for the settlement of questions pertaining to the great West, of the country beyond the Rocky mountains, has to be fought here through a terrible struggle before we can get a vote on it. Other questions of vast importance are settled here in a very few minutes if they only relate to matters near at hand. But when a bill comes up, for instance, to quiet land titles in the State of California, embodying the simplest proposition that could be presented to this body for its action—and he who would take the bill and read it would see how full of justice it was—it was subjected to a contest of several days. And the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, [Mr. JULIAN,] who was instructed by his committee to report the bill favorably, occupied some two hours and a half of that time in an effort to defeat the bill. And now when we come before this body with a bill that has met with the sanction of the Treasury Department, and of the Interior Department, and of every man who represents any portion of the mineral regions of our country, the minds of all coinciding in reference to the terms it contains, we find the very same man with his concentrated hostility trying to get this House if he possibly can to defeat the bill. He speaks of the bill as a swindle, and calls us pickpockets. Sir, that is undignified language to be used upon the floor of a body like this.

A few words, now, as to the merits of this bill. Let me first show the manner in which it came here, and the means and manner by which it went to the Committee on Public Lands. It was sent to the Committee on Mines and Mining of the Senate, that being the legitimate committee to consider it. The Senate gave that committee the care and custody of that bill because it properly belonged to that committee, it being a standing committee of that body.

The bill passed the Senate and came here, and we supposed it was proper that it should go to the Committee on Mines and Mining of this body. I moved its reference to the Committee on Mines and Mining; but the member from Indiana, [Mr. JULIAN,] as an amendment, moved its reference to the Committee on Public Lands, to which committee it was sent. That committee may have many respectable members upon it; one of them is my colleague [Mr. McRUER.] But I do not know whether he has ever been much in the mineral regions or not. But I presume from the character of the business he has pursued, he is at least conversant with the great question pertaining to the mineral lands. But, sir, the Committee on Public Lands are by no means well fitted, in comparison with the Committee on Mines and Mining, to take charge of this question; for we have upon the latter committee three members from the mineral belt, as well as members from other mining regions of the country. That was the proper committee. But by the malice and petty spleen in which the member from Indiana seems to have been indulging on this occasion and one other we are justified in believing him hostile to every interest of the Pacific coast. It has been stated here by a member of the Committee on Public Lands that a majority of that committee are ready to report a bill precisely similar to the bill now before us. The Committee on Territories have had the same subject before them; and I understand that the members present when the question was under consideration agreed unanimously to report a measure of this character.

That bill having gone to the Committee on Public Lands, the Committee on Mines and Mining felt that they had the right, with the mass of matter which had been referred to them, to report a bill and ask this House to pass it. A bill which was a precise copy of that which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and of the bill now under consideration, has been considered and carefully examined by the Committee on Mines and Mining, who have unanimously decided to report in favor of the bill.

Thus the bill has the recommendation of two committees, as it would have of a third committee, but for the fact that its chairman is determined to stand in the way of the great interests of the mineral belt, and therefore prevents the committee from reporting upon the question. The Representatives from the States interested in this measure are unanimous in favor of its passage. It has also the approval of the Treasury Department and the Interior Department, as well as of the Senate Committee on Mines and Mining, and the same committee of this body. I trust it will also receive the approbation of a large majority of the members of this House.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Will the gentleman from California yield to me for a question?

Mr. HIGBY. I will.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Do I understand the gentleman from California to say that the Committee on Mines and Mining have had this bill under consideration and unanimously recommend its passage?

Mr. HIGBY. They have had before them a bill precisely similar, word for word, and have unanimously agreed to report it.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Let me ask one further question: has the same bill, or a bill substantially the same, received the approval of a majority of the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. HIGBY. My colleague, [Mr. McRUER,] who is a member of the committee will answer that question. I have understood from him that such is the fact.

Mr. McRUER. The majority of the committee are ready to vote in favor of reporting the bill whenever an opportunity is afforded to them.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Do I understand that they have had the bill before them and that a majority of the committee are willing to report it?

Mr. HIGBY. They have had before them the Senate bill, which is precisely similar.

Now, Mr. Speaker, having given a history of this bill, let me say a few words as to its merits. Sir, the bill does not contain a single sentence which will compel any miner, if it becomes a law, to purchase one foot of mineral lands. It leaves untouched a large class of mineral lands, to be occupied as they have been for the last fifteen or seventeen years. I refer to the placer mines, the deep-shaft claims, the tunnel claims, and the hydraulic claims, where they have, by hydraulic power, washed down hills fifty, seventy-five, and even one hundred feet high. All these different classes of mines are left by this bill as they have been for fifteen or seventeen years, to be occupied by the people of the country. Such is the first section of the bill; and not only does it leave that class of claims, but it leaves the other class of claims, in reference to which provision is made in the second section, to precisely the same rules and regulations and the same conditions. All manner of mining is left open precisely as heretofore, and it is left optional, as you may see by the second section, with those who have quartz claims, by taking a certain course, to finally get a patent from the General Government. They are not compelled to take this course, but may do so if a patent title is desirable.

I will say further, Mr. Speaker, if a man has a quartz claim, holding it under the rules and regulations and customs of miners, if he does not see fit to take this step to get a patent from the General Government there is no man or company of men who can, under the provisions of this bill, force him or a company to leave the claim and give them an opportunity to proceed to obtain a patent for the same. The simplest proposition in the world is contained in this bill. It is but one proposition, and that is to leave the whole mineral district as heretofore, only saying that what the Government has tolerated for fifteen or seventeen years shall now be legalized by the Government. With millions, tens of millions, ay, many tens of millions of property in these mines, yet there are men entirely ignorant of this matter who seem to be determined to destroy the great interest we have acquired by fifteen years of labor. I say to this House that all these men who go upon mineral lands want is that their occupancy shall be their title for the time being. They do not want anything else.

Mr. Speaker, I wish now to say a word to this House why it is we are anxious to have some legislation at this session. It is true that it is late in having a bill prepared in the Senate, but this, like other important matters, takes time for consideration. It has to be amended and reamended and amended again, so as to get it in such shape that it will meet the concurrence of the various executive branches of Government, the Representatives of the mineral belt and of the Senate. Thus it has come here late, thus it passed the Senate late, thus it comes to the House late, and at a time when I would have forborne to say anything on the subject, much less to enter into any lengthy debate, if the opposition came from an honest and sincere heart, as it is perfectly evident that it does not.

Sir, I will state the reason for this bill. As was well said by my colleague in the Thirty-Eighth Congress in its last session a bill was introduced by the Committee on Public Lands. It was crude and deformed. It had not a single feature in it that could be adapted to the mineral lands. If it had been enforced as law in any mineral district in ten years that district would have been a desolation. The chairman of that committee has brought forward another bill this session. It has been reported. I do not know whether a speech has been made upon it at this session, but there was one at the last session. It has been printed and sent back to that committee; and a report was made by that committee which came from the chairman. It is but a mere string of glittering generalities. There is not a particle of anything applicable to the question one way or the other. As I have said, these bills have been printed. Boys of twelve years old all along the mineral belt know what the gentleman from Indiana has been doing. They know that he is at the head of the Committee on Public Lands. The people there keep close watch of what is being done here. Sir, capital ready to go there hesitates and will not go. Capital already invested hesitates to add capital to carry on improvements. Why? Because of this very bill which the gentleman has reported at this session. Let it become a law and be enforced, and from one half to two thirds of the valuation of property in the mineral districts would be wasted by such a proposition in one year's time after its enforcement.

Mr. Speaker, I have said that different Departments of the Government had sanctioned this bill; and I send up to the Clerk to be read, as a part of my remarks, a few lines written on the back of the bill by the Secretary of the Interior. When these lines have been read I demand the previous question on the bill and the pending amendment.

Mr. KASSON. Before the question is put I would ask the member from California whether, in case the motion to commit the bill is defeated, he will then allow me to offer the amendment which I have already explained to the House.

Mr. HIGBY. I do not know that I have any objection to allowing a vote to be taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that when the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] was upon the floor by the permission of the gentleman from California, [Mr. HIGBY,] he indicated certain amendments which he proposed to offer with a view of perfecting the amendment of the Senate. But previous to that time the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JULIAN] had moved to commit the bill to the Committee on Public Lands, which of course prevented any amendment being offered. If there be no objection the amendments indicated by the gentleman from Iowa will be considered as pending.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I object.

Mr. KASSON. Then I hope the bill will be committed.

Mr. HIGBY. I now ask for the reading of the indorsement upon the bill which I send up.

The Clerk read as follows:

I have read the within bill. I do not hesitate to say that I heartily approve its principles and the policy indicated for the disposition of the mineral lands.

JAMES HARLAN.

July 23, 1866.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; being first upon Mr. JULIAN's motion to commit the bill to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JULIAN demanded the yeas and nays, and tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. JULIAN's motion was disagreed to—yeas seventeen, noes not counted.

The question recurred upon the amendment submitted by Mr. JULIAN for the amendment of the Senate, and being put, the said amendment was disagreed to.

The question then recurred upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. JULIAN demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 73, nays 37, not voting 71; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Ancona, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Bergen, Bidwell, Boyer, Broomall, Buckland, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Davis, Dawson, Eggleston, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Ferry, Glossbrenner, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Higby, Hogan, Hotchkiss, John H. Hubbard, James K. Hubbell, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Johnson, Kelley, Kerr, Koonz, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Marshall, McClurg, McTuer, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, Niblack, Nicholson, O'Neill, Perham, Price, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Ritter, Sawyer, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Strouse, Taber, Taylor, John L. Thomas, Trimble, Trowbridge, Burt, Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Welker, Whaley, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—73.

NAYS—Messrs. Baker, Bingham, Boutwell, Bromwell, Reader W. Clarke, Dawes, Deftrees, Delano, Eliot, Finck, Aaron Harding, Holmes, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Jenckes, Julian, Kasson, Kuykendall, Latham, William Lawrence, Loan, Marston, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Orth, Paine, Pike, Plants, Radford, Rollins, Ross, Scofield, Shellabarger, Stevens, Thornton, and James F. Wilson—37.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Allison, Ames, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Beaman, Benjamin, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Bundy, Chanler, Cook, Cullom, Culver, Darling, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Farquhar, Garfield, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Henderson, Hill, Hooper, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Humphrey, Jones, Kelso, Ketoham, Longyear, Lynch, Marvin, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, Morrill, Noel, Patterson, Phelps, Pomeroy, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rogers, Schenck, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stilwell, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Upson, Van Aernam, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Wentworth, Winfield, and Wright—71.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HIGBY moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found correctly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 236) to authorize the construction of certain bridges and to establish them as post roads;

An act (S. No. 123) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific railroad of California, to Portland in Oregon; and

An act (S. No. 269) to define the number and regulate the appointment of officers in the Navy, and for other purposes.

ASSAULT UPON A CLERK.

Mr. ALLEY. I rise to a question of privilege. The special committee, to whom was referred the investigation of the assault upon Uriah H. Painter by B. F. Beveridge, have instructed me to report the testimony, with the accompanying resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have passed.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to deliver into the custody of the civil authorities Benjamin F. Beveridge, and to prosecute the said Beveridge before the criminal court in this District for an assault upon the person of Uriah H. Painter, an officer of this House, within the walls of the Capitol, and that the evidence taken in the case by the special committee of the House be delivered to the United States district attorney for this District.

Mr. ALLEY. I will not ask for the reading of the testimony, as it is very voluminous, but I will state as briefly as may be the facts of the case. [Several members, "Oh, no; let us vote."] It seems to me that this is a very important matter, and that it should not be disposed of without some reference to the testimony, involving as it does the liberty of a citizen. As a member of this House, I cannot reconcile it to my sense of duty and propriety to allow the question to be taken without some explanation; but I will be brief and endeavor to say what I have to say in a very few words, for no one appreciates more than I do the value of time at this late stage of the session. I will simply remark that the testimony shows that Mr. Painter was on his way to the committee-room in the lower halls of the Capitol, and was engaged in conversation with a friend, when he was met by this man Beveridge, knocked down, kicked several times in the head and leg, and, in the opinion of some of the witnesses, but for the interference of some who were present, as well as those who came to his assistance, he would have been killed. Such briefly are the facts, as the evidence will show.

Now, in regard to the authority for arresting and keeping in custody Beveridge, I will remark that there are a great many precedents for the action of the House, which I will not trouble the House by now referring to. In innumerable instances have Congress and the Legislatures of the States, when a breach of privilege has been committed, arrested and imprisoned the person committing the breach of privilege. The most prominent case of the kind that has come under the observation of the committee, is the case of Anderson vs. Dunn, which was taken up to the Supreme Court of the United States and there decided. The decision sets forth the authority of Congress at length. As to the duration of imprisonment, the court says:

"And even to the duration of imprisonment a period is imposed by the nature of things, since the existence of the power that imprisonment is indispensable to its continuance, and although the legislative body ceases to exist on the moment of its adjournment or dissolution. It follows that imprisonment must terminate with that adjournment."

This language seems to be susceptible of two constructions, and lawyers are not agreed upon the proper construction to be put upon it. The committee are of opinion that we have not the power to imprison this man beyond the present session of Congress; and that unless some measure is adopted, such as I have reported from the select committee, this man must be released when the present session of Congress shall terminate, and thus receive no adequate punishment. In view of that fact it was deemed best to report the resolution I have submitted, to have this person turned over to the civil authorities to be prosecuted for this assault.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I do not like to have it go upon the record that I, as a member of this select committee, hold the law to be at all as stated by the chairman of the committee, [Mr. ALLEY.] I do not understand that the committee came to any such conclusion. My opinion is very clear that Congress has the right to imprison this person until the 4th day of March next. I do not see why it may not as well imprison over the recess until December next as over a recess of three days or one day.

Mr. ALLEY. I have consulted several of the most eminent lawyers in the House and in the Senate, and with a single exception they all came to the conclusion that we had not the power to imprison beyond the present session of Congress. I am no lawyer myself, but I will remark that it has been decided by the Supreme Court, by all the commentators on the Constitution, Kent, Story, and others, that when Congress terminates by adjournment or periodical dissolution, any person imprisoned by its order must be liberated. Now, there is a difference of opinion in regard to these terms used by the Supreme Court in this case. Story and Kent both held that adjournment and periodical dissolution, in the sense used by the court, are synonymous terms, and almost every one with whom I have consulted holds the same view, that they are synonymous; that when Congress adjourns permanently, that is, adjourns sine die, it terminates and the person must be liberated. Now, in regard to the period of dissolution, some hold that that term applies to the termination of Congress on the 4th of March. Others hold that it applies to the annual termination of Congress by the adjournment sine die at the end of each session, such as will probably take place now in a few days. The committee, I understood, with perhaps one exception, to take that view of the case. That, at any rate, is the view taken by almost all the lawyers with whom I have consulted.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. I desire to state merely, as a member of this committee, that while I do not desire to say anything against this resolution reported by the majority of the committee, I desire to place myself right upon the record by stating that I am not in favor of the majority report. My ideas of the laws and of the powers of Congress differ somewhat from the ideas of the chairman [Mr. ALLEY] and I believe the majority of the committee. I am of opinion that this House has the power, and having the power it ought to exercise it to keep this man in confinement until the 4th of March, 1867. I believe the power of the House extends that far, but in that opinion the majority of the committee did not agree with me. I desire to make this statement merely to place myself right on the record.

Mr. ALLEY. It is true, as the gentleman observes, that he did not concur with the majority of the committee in their opinion as to the construction of the law. With this exception I understood the committee to be unanimous. But the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FARNSWORTH] now says that he dissents.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I do not dissent from the resolution. I believe that it was originally my own proposition to turn this man over to the civil authorities. But I dissent from the statement that the committee came to the conclusion that this House has no power to imprison this man beyond the present session. I maintain that the House has power to hold him in custody till the 4th of March next.

Mr. ALLEY. I understood the gentleman to say that he was opposed to the resolution. I was somewhat surprised at this, because, as I have presented it, it is almost identical in form with a resolution which the gentleman himself drew up. The committee reluctantly came to the conclusion that it was the best course to report a resolution similar to that which the gentleman first proposed. I understood the gentleman to maintain in committee that it was a matter of great doubt whether the House has the power to hold this man beyond the close of the present session, and that he for one believed we had no such power. I of course accept the gentleman's correction. I have only mentioned this to show that I had reason for representing him as in favor of the resolution.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, my only purpose is to put myself right on the record, as this case may be cited as a precedent hereafter. I concurred in reporting this resolution partly for the reason that I thought it well enough to turn this man over to the civil authorities, to be punished by them, but chiefly because the person assaulted, although an officer of the House, was not at the time in the performance of his duty as such officer; and therefore a question might arise as to the power of the House in such a case. The committee at first came to the conclusion to report a resolution providing for turning the man over to the civil authorities, to be kept in close confinement in the jail of the District of Columbia until the further order of the House, the object being to keep him there till the close of the next session of Congress. Subsequently the committee revised that conclusion, and thought it best, on the whole, to report this resolution, in which I concurred. I think it best, on the whole, that the resolution should be adopted.

I rose simply to protest that I did not concur in the opinion expressed by the chairman of the committee, that the House has no power to hold this man in custody beyond the close of the present session. As this report may be cited hereafter as a precedent, I want to go upon the record as in favor of the right of either House of Congress to punish a man for contempt or breach of its privileges by confining him until the termination of the Congress—its dissolution, and not the mere end of the session.

Mr. ALLEY. I will add but a few words; and then I will call the previous question.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ALLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Speaker, I heartily indorse this resolution, with the exception of that part which instructs the Sergeant-at-Arms to prosecute this man. I think that part is rather a reflection upon the local authorities of the District of Columbia. Still I presume that those authorities will not regard it in that light. I have been in favor all the time, since hearing the evidence, of turning this man over to the civil authorities, to be dealt with in accordance with the laws passed by Congress for the government of such cases in this District. Consequently I am in favor of the resolution. At the same time I do not believe that we have the power to keep this man in custody one moment beyond the close of the present session of Congress.

Mr. ALLEY. Mr. Speaker—

Several MEMBERS. Question! Question!

Mr. ALLEY. I understand my rights on this floor. Gentlemen may call "Question" as much as they please, but it does not affect me. This is an important matter, important as a precedent, and involving the rights and liberty of a citizen of this District.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. What is the question? I do not understand any one objects.

Mr. ALLEY. I will say a single word in reply to the gentleman from Illinois, and then I will call for the previous question. The committee felt that this was a most aggravated assault, entirely without reason or provocation; and if it were in the power of this House to punish this man we all thought he deserved it, and we were disposed to inflict the severest punishment upon him. I understood most distinctly that they believed it was very doubtful at any rate whether we had the power, and therefore instructed me to offer the resolutions I have reported. It was for that reason, and that alone, I consented to report the resolutions. I believe the punishment inflicted upon this individual should be of the severest character, as for a great and heinous crime. But doubting our power to punish, as I do, after consultation with the best lawyers in both Houses of Congress, I have submitted the proposition before the House. I now demand the previous question.

Mr. ROSS. For how many papers does Mr. Painter report?

Mr. ALLEY. I do not yield for any purpose and insist upon the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

TENNESSEE—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. TRIMBLE. I rise to a question of privilege. The Constitution declares that "each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members." On Friday last this House declared by resolution as follows:

"That the State of Tennessee is hereby declared to be restored to her former proper, practical relations to the Union, and again entitled to be represented by Senators and Representatives in Congress, duly elected and qualified upon their taking the oaths of office by existing laws."

As I suppose this House will not stultify itself by refusing those gentlemen seats in this Hall, I now move as a question of privilege that N. G. Taylor, J. W. Leftwich, and Edward Cooper be sworn in as members of this House.

The SPEAKER. The Constitution does declare that each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members; but the House of Representatives has decided, with the concurrence of the Senate, that certain States, not represented during the last four years in the Congress of the United States, shall not be entitled to representation again until by concurrent action of both branches they shall be declared to be entitled to representation. The House, therefore, declared it has no constitutional right so to judge. The Chair overrules the demand that gentlemen claiming seats from Tennessee shall be sworn in.

Mr. TRIMBLE. From that decision, with all due deference, I take an appeal.

Mr. STEVENS moved that the appeal be laid upon the table.

Mr. LE BLOND demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 94, nays 18, not voting 69; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Baker, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Davis, Defrees, Delano, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Hulburd, Julian, Kelley, Koontz, Laffin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Lynch, Marston, McClurg, McRuer, Mercur, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Plants, Price, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Spalding, Stevens, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—94.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Dawson, Finck, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Hogan, Le Blond, Nicholson, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Taber, and Trimble—18.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Beaman, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Bundy, Chanler, Sidney Clarke, Cook, Cullom, Culver, Darling, Daves, Deming, Denison, Dodge, Donnelly, Dumont, Eldridge, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Henderson, Hill, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Jencks, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Kerr, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Longyear, Marshall, Marvin, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, Niblack, Noell, Patterson, Phelps, Pomeroy, Rogers, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stillwell, Strouse, Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Upson, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Winfield, and Wright—69.

So the appeal was laid upon the table.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON MANUFACTURES.

Mr. LATHAM, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed of the report of the Committee on Manufactures, lately submitted, twenty-five hundred extra copies for the use of the committee, and five hundred extra copies for the use of the House.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move that the House proceed to the business on the Speaker's table. The motion was agreed to.

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' NATIONAL UNION.

The first business on the Speaker's table was the Senate's amendment to House bill No. 587, to incorporate the Soldiers' and Sailors' National Union of Washington, District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' ORPHAN HOME.

The next business in order on the Speaker's table was the Senate's amendment to House bill No. 779, to incorporate the National Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Home.

The amendment was agreed to.

POST ROADS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the Senate amendments to House bill No. 775, to establish certain post roads.

Amendments to the Senate amendments were moved by Mr. COBB, Mr. CONKLING, Mr. ANCONA, Mr. NEWELL, and Mr. MOULTON, which were severally agreed to.

The Senate amendments, as amended, were then agreed to.

TENNESSEE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the amendments of the Senate to House joint resolution No. 83, declaring Tennessee again entitled to Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I demand a separate vote on the amendments.

The first amendment of the Senate was to strike out of the resolution the words "duly elected and qualified upon their taking the oaths of office required by law," so that the resolution would read as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the State of Tennessee is hereby restored to her former proper, practical relations to the Union; and is again entitled to be represented by Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Mr. BINGHAM demanded the previous question on the amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Senate was to strike out the preamble of the House and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Whereas in the year 1791, the government of the State of Tennessee was seized upon and taken possession of by persons in hostility to the United States, and the inhabitants of said State in pursuance of an act of Congress were declared to be in a state of insurrection against the United States; and whereas said State government can only be restored to its former political relations in the Union by the consent of the law-making power of the United States; and whereas the people of said State did, on the 22d day of February, 1865, by a large popular vote, adopt and ratify a constitution or government whereby slavery was abolished and ordinances and laws of secession and debts contracted under the same were declared void; and whereas a State government has been organized under said constitution, which has ratified the amendment to the Constitution of the United States abolishing slavery; also the amendment proposed by the Thirty-Ninth Congress, and has done other acts proclaiming and denoting loyalty: Therefore,

Mr. ELDRIDGE. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ROSS. I would inquire if the preamble is voted down, the resolution being adopted, would there not be a disagreement between the two Houses?

Mr. GARFIELD. If the House should vote this down would it not kill the joint resolution?

Mr. LE BLOND. It is not likely the House will kill it.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. If the lightning should kill all the members the bill would not be passed. [Laughter.]

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 93, nays 26, not voting 62; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Defrees, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, Ketcham, Koontz, Kuykendall, Laffin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Lynch, Marston, McClurg, McRuer, Mercur, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Plants, Price, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Spalding, Stevens, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—93.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Dawson, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Jencks, Johnson, Latham, LeBlond, Marshall, Niblack, Nicholson, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Ritter, Ross, Shanklin, Strouse, Taber, Taylor, Thornton, and Trimble—26.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Beaman, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Culver, Darling, Davis, Daves, Deming, Denison, Dodge, Dumont, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Henderson, Hill, Hogan, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, Humphrey, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Kerr, Longyear, Marvin, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, Noell, Patterson, Phelps, Pike, Pomeroy, Rogers, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stillwell, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Upson, Warner, Elihu B. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Winfield, and Wright—62.

So the Senate amendment was agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. BINGHAM stated that Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, had paired with Mr. Dawson.

Mr. LATHAM said: Believing that the preamble states what is not true, and believing that Tennessee is entitled to representation as well without this preamble as with it, I vote "no."

The result having been announced as above recorded,

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Senate was to strike out the title and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Joint resolution respecting Tennessee and her relations to the Union."

Mr. BINGHAM. On that I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was agreed to—ayes 88, nays 9.

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the title was amended; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RATIONS OF UNION PRISONERS.

The last business on the Speaker's table was the Senate's amendment to House joint resolution No. 190, in regard to rations of Union soldiers held as prisoners of war.

The Senate's amendment was in the nature of a substitute, allowing payment of rations during imprisonment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, asked and obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Frederick Laracker.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAVES in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 791) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1866, and for other purposes.

On motion of Mr. STEVENS, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with, and the Clerk proceeded to read it by sections for amendment.

The Clerk having read the following paragraph:

For mail steamship service between the United States and Brazil, from November 1, 1865, to June 30, 1866, $100,000—

Mr. KASSON said: I move to amend by adding "or so much thereof as may be due." My impression is it is not due.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. I move to amend the bill by inserting after line eighty the following:

Salary of the deputy solicitor of the Court of Claims: That the salary of the deputy solicitor shall be the same as the salary of the assistant solicitor of said court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. DELANO. I move to strike out the following paragraph:

To pay Roy Stone, of Pennsylvania, for certain buildings owned by him in Memphis, Tennessee, and which were taken possession of, used, occupied, and destroyed by and for the benefit of the forces of the United States, the sum of $12,000: Provided, That it shall first be shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War that said buildings were of the value of $12,000, and were the property of said Stone: And provided further, That this sum shall be in full satisfaction of all claims on account of said property against the United States.

I do not know why this clause was introduced into this appropriation bill. If members will examine it they will see that it is in two particulars in direct violation of the rule of this House in reference to the payment of claims resulting from the destruction of property during the late war. In the first place, it is a claim from a rebel State; and in the second place, it embraces such damages as were the necessary result of the ravages of war.

I can give to the House some very strong cases of this character that have been rejected by the Committee of Claims in consequence of the rule of the House to which I have referred. A case from the State of Ohio has been reported to this House, and in my opinion is much more deserving the favorable action of this House than this case is. And yet that case has been referred to the Committee of the Whole, and I have no doubt it will be ultimately rejected. That was the case of a man holding a large property in Nashville, a man who was loyal beyond all doubt, and who was a paralytic at the time of the rebellion. He was carried upon a litter to the polls and voted against the ordinance of secession. His entire possessions were taken by the military and occupied for the purposes of a fortification. That was all the property the man possessed, and now with a wife and four children he is living upon the charity of friends in Ohio. That property was taken and torn down and the premises occupied for a fortification. And the Secretary of War has absolutely gone so far as to recommend that the Government have liberty to purchase the property for the use of the Government, in order that thereby we may be enabled to give this man compensation and not violate the rule of the House.

Mr. SCHENCK. Does my colleague [Mr. DELANO] refer to the case of Mr. Best?

Mr. DELANO. No, sir; though that was also a meritorious case. I refer to the case of Mr. Morrison, known to my colleague, [Mr. SHELLABARGER.]

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I wish to inquire if the case of Morrison has been referred to the Committee of the Whole. I thought it was before the Committee of Claims.

Mr. DELANO. It may have been rereferred to the Committee of Claims some time when I was absent. I am myself prepared to recommend that claim on the simple and single ground that the Secretary of War has recommended that Congress confer upon him the right to purchase the property. I am therefore prepared to recommend a bill for the purchase of the property. But this whole subject, I submit, had better be left to be examined, in all instances by the Committee of Claims under the rule of the House, unless the House are willing at once to set that rule aside and open the flood-gates, I was about to say, of financial ruin and bankruptcy. I know of no investigation of this claim of Roy Stone; it has been referred to no committee that I know of.

Mr. LATHAM. I raise the point of order that this appropriation is not for the purpose of carrying out any existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made too late; it should have been made when the bill was reported to the House by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LATHAM. The bill was not printed then, and this is the first opportunity we have had of knowing what it contains.

Mr. DELANO. I do not know but I have said all that I desire to say on this subject.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would like to know from my colleague [Mr. DELANO] if the claim to which he referred a moment ago was the claim of Mr. Morrison, of Nashville.

Mr. DELANO. It was.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not know how that claim came under discussion. But since it has been referred to, I wish to say that I am personally acquainted with it, and think it one of the most meritorious claims that ever came before Congress; and I should think it wrong at any time to exclude a claim of that kind.

Mr. DELANO. I was calling the attention of the House to the circumstances of that case to show the distinction between it and this case. I desire only to say to the House and to the country that we are treading on dangerous ground in this matter if we pass the claim contained in this bill.

Mr. TRIMBLE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether the Committee of Claims had not before it numerous claims from citizens of Kentucky, some of them from my own district, citizens whose loyalty is unquestioned—claims for compensation for property destroyed by order of the commanders of United States troops, and whether the committee have not reported against those claims in accordance with a general rule which they have adopted.

Mr. DELANO. I answer the gentleman affirmatively in regard to the first branch of his question. I can also say that a large number of those claims were entitled, so far as I know, to more consideration than the claim proposed to be paid in this bill. I know nothing about the facts of this case except as they are recited in the bill.

Mr. TRIMBLE. I understand the gentleman to admit that the parties in the cases of which I speak made good their claims, if the committee had decided in favor of paying for property destroyed in that way.

Mr. DELANO. Undoubtedly. Those claims were rejected, because, in the first place, we did not feel ourselves authorized to report in favor of paying for property destroyed by the ravages of war; and secondly, we did not feel authorized, under the ruling of the House, to recommend the payment of such losses occurring in the rebel States.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I have nothing to say against the payment of the claims referred to by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DELANO,] the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. TRIMBLE,] and other gentlemen. All those claims may be as meritorious as the gentlemen who have spoken in their favor represent them to be; and when they come before the House—

At this point, the hour of half past four having arrived, the committee rose and the House, agreeably to order, took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolutions and a bill of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 83) restoring Tennessee to her relations to the Union;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 191) relating to the building lately occupied for a national fair in aid of the orphans of the soldiers and sailors of the United States; and

An act (H. R. No. 776) in relation to the unlawful tapping of Government water-pipes.

COMMITTEE OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Mr. BANKS. I ask unanimous consent that Thursday next, after the morning hour, may be assigned for the consideration of reports from the Committee on Foreign Affairs upon the several subjects of public interest referred to that committee.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I would like to have the subjects named.

Mr. BANKS. The subjects upon which the committee report, and upon which, should the House accede to my request, their propositions will be ready in print on Wednesday, will be a resolution referred to the committee in regard to the invasion of Canada; the several propositions of gentlemen from different parts of the country in regard to aid to be given to Mexico; propositions relating to the interest which the Government of the United States has in the assertion of what is called the "Monroe Doctrine;" and subjects akin to those I have named.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I object.

Mr. BANKS. I appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withdraw his objection.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I cannot withdraw it.

Mr. BANKS. Then I will ask the consent of the House that the Committee on Foreign Affairs may be permitted to report on Thursday upon the first subject that I have named—the neutrality laws.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BANKS. I would state that the report of the committee will be in print in season for the consideration of the House.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that it may not be wise for us to appropriate our time so far ahead. On the day named there may be various bills coming from the Senate which will require the consideration of the House.

Mr. BANKS. I would not press my proposition if I thought it would interfere with any business absolutely necessary to be disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state that should the business named by the gentleman from Massachusetts be made a special order it can, when reached, be postponed like any other special order. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. WENTWORTH. I will not object if the House will allow me to refer a resolution to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. BANKS. I trust that may be done.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. STEVENS. At what time is it to be made a special order?

The SPEAKER. After the morning hour. The resolution will be referred to the committee.

Mr. BANKS. I feel it to be my duty, so many propositions have been referred to the Committee—

Mr. WENTWORTH. Let my resolution be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be requested to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill applying the same regulations toward the Fenian belligerents that the Government of Great Britain applied to the so-called confederates of this country.

Mr. STEVENS. I desire to know how much of the day the special order is to occupy. We cannot go beyond what we have.

Mr. BANKS. We will submit the question to the House without debate. Unless gentlemen of the House shall choose to debate it we will not debate it.

Mr. STEVENS. I will not object if the gentleman does not ask more than two hours.

Mr. MORRILL. One hour.

Mr. BANKS. I will ask but two hours.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. BANKS moved to reconsider the vote by which the subject of the neutrality laws was made the special order for Thursday next after the morning hour; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MEXICO.

Mr. BANKS. I move to postpone the regular order of business and to suspend the rules for the purpose of fixing Thursday next for the consideration of the reports from the Committee on Foreign Affairs in reference to Mexico.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. BANKS. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] gives notice that he will oppose the motion, and as there is no quorum voting I give notice for the second time that I will on the first opportunity report from the committee on that subject.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. And for the second time I give notice I shall object.

NORTON'S CANCELING STAMP.

Mr. FERRY. I ask unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads which is recommended by the Post Office Department. I ask the Clerk to read the letter of the acting Postmaster General.

Mr. ANCONA. I demand the regular order of business.

REORGANIZATION OF THE DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask leave of the House to set apart to-morrow after the morning hour for the consideration of the bills reorganizing the Interior, the Treasury, and the Post Office Departments, and for that purpose only.

Mr. STEVENS. I object. I will not object to day after to-morrow.

Mr. MORRILL. I will say day after to-morrow.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object. I would not object to giving to-morrow. The evident purpose is to continue the session.

Mr. MORRILL. I suggest to-morrow evening.

Mr. LOAN. I object.

FRANCIS COLGEN.

Mr. BAKER. I ask not exceeding two minutes for a report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions in behalf of a blind soldier.

Mr. ANCONA. I withdraw the call for the regular order of business for that purpose.

Mr. VAN AERNAM, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Francis Colgen; which was read a first and second time.

It provides that Francis Colgen shall be placed upon the pension-rolls at the same rate allowed to soldiers and seamen who have lost the sight of both eyes in the military and naval service.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

COMMITTEE ON PACIFIC RAILROAD, ETC.

Mr. PRICE. I move to suspend the rules to enable me to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That all other business be postponed, and that the Committee on the Pacific Railroad and the Committee on Public Lands be each allowed one hour of this evening's session for reports.

The rules were not suspended.

NORTON'S CANCELING STAMP—AGAIN.

Mr. FERRY. I ask leave to report from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads a joint resolution to provide for the payment of the use and title to Norton's post marking and postage canceling stamp. I ask that the letter of the Post Office Department be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, APPOINTMENT OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, July 23, 1866.

Sir: Information has been received at this Department that the application of Mr. Norton for remuneration for the use of his patent marking and canceling stamp has not been reported upon by your committee.

This matter is considered one of great public importance and especially to this Department, and a report to the House and the prompt action of Congress on this subject would relieve the Department from much embarrassment in the future essential use of this stamp.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ALEXANDER W. RANDALL,
Acting Postmaster General.

Hon. JOHN B. ALLEY,
Chairman Committee on Post Offices.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I make the point of order that the joint resolution makes an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. An appropriation bill must itself take money out of the Treasury. This will require another bill.

Mr. KASSON. Is not this the same stamp which has been used in the Post Office?

Mr. FERRY. Yes, sir, for three years.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the joint resolution be laid upon the table.

Mr. FERRY. That motion is not debatable, but I trust it will not be agreed to.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 57, noes 17; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER, under the rules, ordered tellers, and appointed Mr. FERRY and Mr. SPALDING.

Mr. MORRILL. I withdraw the motion to lay upon the table.

Mr. FERRY. I withdraw the report.

KANSAS AND NEOSHO VALLEY RAILROAD.

The House proceeded to the business upon the Speaker's table.

The first bill was Senate bill No. 285, granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley railroad and its extension to Red river.

The bill was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That for the purpose of aiding the Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad Company, the same being a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Kansas, to construct and operate a railroad from the eastern terminus of the Union Pacific railroad, eastern division, at the line between Kansas and Missouri, at or near the mouth of the Kansas river, on the south side thereof, southwardly, through the eastern tier of counties in Kansas with a view of its extension, so as to effect a junction at Red river with a railroad now being constructed from Galveston to Red river at or near Preston, in Texas, there is hereby granted to the State of Kansas for the use and benefit of said railroad company every alternate section of land or parts thereof, designated by odd numbers, to the extent of ten sections per mile on each side of said road; but in case it shall appear that the United States have, when the line of said road is definitely located, sold any section, or any part thereof, granted as aforesaid, or that the right of preemption or homestead settlement has attached to the same, or that the same has been reserved by the United States for any purpose whatever, then it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to cause to be selected for the purposes aforesaid, from the public lands of the United States nearest to the sections above specified so much land as shall be equal to the amount of such lands as the United States have sold, reserved, or otherwise appropriated, or to which the right of homestead settlement or preemption has attached as aforesaid, which lands, thus indicated by the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be reserved and held for the State of Kansas for the use of said company by the said Secretary for the purpose of the construction and operation of said railroad, as provided by this act: Provided, That any and all lands heretofore reserved to the United States by any act of Congress, or in any other manner by competent authority, for the purpose of aiding in any object of internal improvement or other purpose whatever, be, and the same are hereby, reserved and excepted from the operation of this act, except so far as it may be found necessary to locate the route of said road through such reserved lands, in which case the right of way two hundred feet in width is hereby granted, subject to the approval of the President of the United States: And provided further, That said lands hereby granted shall not be selected beyond twenty miles from the line of said road.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the sections and parts of sections of land which by the aforesaid grant shall remain in the United States, within ten miles on each side of said road, shall not be sold for less than double the minimum price of public lands when sold, nor shall any of said lands become subject to sale at private entry until the same shall have been first offered at public sale to the highest bidder, at or above the minimum price aforesaid: Provided, That actual bona fide settlers under the preemption laws of the United States may, after due proof of settlement, improvement, and occupation, as now provided by law, purchase the same at the price fixed for said lands at the date of such settlement, improvement, and occupation: And provided also, That settlers under the provisions of the homestead act, who make their settlement after the passage of this act, and comply with the terms and requirements of said act, shall be entitled, within the said limits of ten miles, to patents for an amount not exceeding eighty acres each.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the grant of lands hereby made is upon condition that said company, after the construction of its road, shall keep it in repair and use, and that at all times be in readiness to transport troops, munitions of war, supplies, and public stores upon its road for the Government, when required to do so by any Department thereof, the Government at all times having the preference in the use of the road for all the purposes aforesaid, at fair and reasonable rates of compensation, not exceeding that paid by private individuals, or the average paid for like services on other roads. And the lands hereby granted, held, and reserved as aforesaid shall inure to the benefit of said company, as follows: when the Governor of the State of Kansas shall certify that any section of ten consecutive miles of said road is completed in a good, substantial, and workmanlike manner as a first-class railroad, then the said Secretary of the Interior shall issue to the said company patents for so many sections of the land within the limits above named as are contemporaneous with said completed section hereinbefore granted; and when certificates of the Governor aforesaid shall be presented to said Secretary, of the completion, as aforesaid, of each successive section of ten consecutive miles of said road, the said Secretary shall in like manner issue to said company patents for the land for each of said sections of road as in the first instance, until said road shall be completed: Provided, That if said road is not completed within ten years from the date of the acceptance of the grant hereinbefore made, the lands remaining unpatented shall revert to the United States: And provided further, That the said lands shall not, in any manner, be disposed of or incumbered by said company or its assigns, except as the same are patented under the provisions of this act.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That as soon as said company shall file with the Secretary of the Interior maps of its line, designating the route thereof, it shall be the duty of the said Secretary to withdraw from the market the lands granted by this act, in such manner as may be best calculated to effect the purposes of this act and subserve the public interest.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the United States mail shall be transported on said road and its extension, under the direction of the Post Office Department, at such price as Congress may by law provide: Provided, That until such price is fixed by law the Postmaster General shall have power to fix the compensation.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the right of way through the public lands be, and the same is hereby, granted to said Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, for the construction of a railroad as proposed; and the right is hereby given to said corporation to take from the public lands adjacent to the line of said road material for the construction thereof. Said way is granted to said railroad to the extent of one hundred feet in width on each side of said road where it may pass through the public domain; also all necessary ground for station buildings, workshops, depots, machine-shops, switches, side-tracks, turn-tables, and water-stations.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the acceptance of the terms, conditions, and impositions of this act by the said Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad Company shall be signified in writing, under the corporate seal of the said company, duly executed pursuant to the direction of its board of directors first had and obtained, which acceptance shall be made within one year after the passage of this act, and not afterward, and shall be deposited with the Secretary of the Interior.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That said Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized and empowered to extend and construct its railroad from the southern boundary of Kansas south, through the Indian Territory, to Red river, at or near Preston, in the State of Texas, so as to connect with the railway now being constructed from Galveston to a point at or near Preston, in said State; the right of way through the Indian Territory wherever such right is now reserved or may hereafter be reserved to the United States by treaty with the Indian tribes, is hereby granted to said company to the same extent as granted by the sixth section of the act through the public lands, and in all cases where the right of way as aforesaid through the Indian lands shall not be reserved to the Government, the said company shall, before constructing its road, procure the consent of the tribe or tribes interested, which consent, with all its terms and conditions, shall be previously approved and indorsed by the President and filed with the Secretary of the Interior.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That the same grants of lands through said Indian Territory are hereby made as provided in the first section of this act, whenever the Indian title shall be extinguished by treaty or otherwise, not to exceed the ratio per mile granted in the first section of this act: Provided, That said lands become a part of the public [domain] lands of the United States.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That said Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, shall have the right to negotiate with, and acquire from any Indian nation or tribe, authorized by the United States to dispose of lands for railroad purposes, and from any other nation or tribe of Indians through whose lands said railroads may pass, subject to the approval of the President of the United States, or from any company or parties incorporated or authorized for such purposes, by such nation or tribe, or which such parties may have acquired under the laws of the United States.

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That any railroad company chartered under any law of the United States, or of any State, which may have been heretofore or shall hereafter be recognized and subsidized by any act of the Congress of the United States, may connect, unite, and consolidate with this railroad company, after the same shall be located to the valley of the Neosho river, upon just, fair, and equitable terms, to be agreed upon between the parties, and shall not be against the public interest or the interest of the United States; nor shall any road authorized to connect as aforesaid charge the road so connecting a greater tariff per mile for freight or passengers than is charged for the same per mile by its own road: And provided further, That should the Leavenworth, Lawrence, and Fort Gibson Railroad Company, or the Union Pacific Railroad Company, southern branch, construct and complete its road to that point on the southern boundary of the State of Kansas where the line of said Kansas and Neosho Valley railroad shall cross the same, before the said Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad Company shall have constructed and completed its said road to said point, then and in that event the company so first reaching in completion the said point on the southern boundary of the State of Kansas shall be authorized, upon obtaining the written approval of the President of the United States, to construct and operate its line of railroad from said point to a point at or near Preston, in the State of Texas, with grants of land according to the provisions of this bill, but upon the further special condition, nevertheless, that said railroad company shall have commenced in good faith the construction thereof before the said Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad Company shall have completed its said railroad to said point: And provided further, That said other railroad company, so having commenced said work in good faith, shall continue to prosecute the same with sufficient energy to insure the completion of the same within a reasonable time, subject to the approval of the President of the United States: And provided further, That the right of way, when not otherwise granted in this bill, shall be obtained by said Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad Company, or either of the other companies named in this act, in accordance with the provisions of section three of an act to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862.

Mr. ANDERSON. On behalf of the Committee on Public Lands, I submit the following amendment: in section one, line seventeen, after "road" insert "to be selected within twenty miles from the line of said road;" and in same section, line forty-four, strike out "said" and "not" and insert "none of them;" so it will read: "that none of the said lands hereby granted shall be selected," &c. Section three, line six, strike out "any Department thereof," and insert "at the cost, charge, and expense of said companies." In line seven, after the word "Government," insert "of the United States," and strike out the words "at all times having the preference in the use of the road for all the purposes aforesaid, at fair and reasonable rates of compensation, not exceeding that paid by private individuals, or the average paid for like services on other roads."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. VAN HORN, of Missouri, demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. VAN HORN, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. PERHAM, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bill of the House No. 692, increasing the pensions of widows and orphans, and for other purposes, made the following report, upon which he demanded the previous question:

The committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 692) increasing the pensions of widows and orphans, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from their disagreement to the first amendment of the Senate.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the second amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with the following amendments, namely: Insert the following new sections:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That if any person, during the pendency of his application for an invalid pension, but after the completion of the proof showing his right thereto, has died or shall hereafter die, but not in either case by reason of wounds received or disease contracted in the service of the United States and in the line of duty, his widow, or if he left no widow, or in the event of her death or marriage, his relatives in the same order in which they would have received a pension if they had been entitled under existing laws on account of the service and death in the line of duty of such person, shall have the right to demand and receive the accrued pension to which he would have been entitled had the certificate issued before his death; and in all cases where such person so entitled to an invalid pension has died, or shall hereafter die, under the circumstances hereinbefore mentioned, either by reason of a wound received or disease contracted in the service of the United States and in the line of duty, or otherwise, without leaving a widow or such relatives, then such accrued pension shall be paid to the executor or administrator of such person in like manner and effect as if such pension were so much assets belonging to the estate of the deceased at the time of his death.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the repeal by the act entitled "An act supplemental to the several acts relating to pensions," approved June 6, 1866, of parts of certain acts mentioned in the first section of said act shall not work a forfeiture of any rights accrued under or granted by such parts of such acts so repealed, but such rights shall be recognized and allowed in the same manner and to all intents and purposes as if said act had never passed, except that the invalid pensioner shall be entitled to draw from and after the taking effect of said act, the increased pension thereby granted in lieu of that granted by such parts of such acts so repealed.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That nothing in the fourth section of the act entitled "An act supplemental to the several acts relating to pensions," approved March 3, 1865, or in any other supplementary or amendatory acts relating to pensions, shall be so construed as to impair the right of a widow whose claim for a pension was pending at the date of her remarriage, to the pension to which she would otherwise be entitled had her deceased husband left no minor child or children under the age of sixteen years.

HENRY S. LANE,
P. G. VAN WINKLE,
GARRETT DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
S. PERHAM,
M. C. KERR,
P. SAWYER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES P. JOHNSON.

The next business on the Speaker's table was bill of the Senate No. 374, for the relief of James P. Johnson; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, moved that the bill be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

BRITISH SHIP MAGICIENNE.

The next business in order on the Speaker's table was the bill of the Senate No. 297, for the relief of the owners of the British vessel Magicienne; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move that that bill be referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope that motion will not prevail. It is merely an appropriation to carry out a treaty.

Mr. PRICE. Is not this an appropriation bill?

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. It contains an appropriation, and I ask that it go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The bill certainly contains an appropriation.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Then I make the point of order that it must be first considered in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The bill was referred, under the rules, to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

WYANDOTTE AND QUINDARO CHURCH.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 353, for the relief of the trustees of the Mission church of the Wyandotte Indians; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read at length. It appropriates the sum of $4,680, in consideration of the destruction of their church buildings and library, to the trustees and stewards of the Wyandotte and Quindaro church, the same to be applied to the rebuilding of said buildings and inclosing the grave-yard of the Wyandotte Indians, of the State of Kansas.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask that this bill be put upon its passage at this time. The Senate has twice passed this bill, and although the bill has not been taken from the Speaker's table; it has been examined by the Committee on Indian Affairs, for they knew they would not possibly have time to report if the bill was referred to them. It provides a certain sum of money to supply what was destroyed in the border-ruffian times in Kansas, at which time the Government was under treaty obligation to protect these Indians.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I do not intend to offer any factious opposition to any bill. But we all know that just at the close of the session we are liable to be imposed upon by claims which members may think at the time to be right. Now, I do not know anything about this claim, and I suppose most of the members here are in the same situation. I therefore prefer that this claim should go to the Committee of Claims. If there is any objection to that, then I shall insist that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole as containing an appropriation.

Mr. WINDOM. It does not belong to the Committee of Claims. If it goes to any committee it should go to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I insist upon my point of order, that this bill contains an appropriation, and therefore, under the rule, should go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

JAMES P. JOHNSON.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill for the relief of James P. Johnson was referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was entered.

NORTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF GEORGIA.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 382, to change the place of holding the court in the northern district of Georgia; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read at length. It provides for changing the place of holding the court of the northern district of Georgia from Marietta to Atlanta.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ASBURY CHAPEL, WASHINGTON.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 361, to authorize W. J. Sibley and others, trustees, to sell and convey lot No. 9, in square No. 76, in the city of Washington; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read at length. The preamble sets forth that lot No. 9, in square No. 76, in the city of Washington, was conveyed for the purpose of erecting a church, but the church was not built, though one has been erected near there to which the trustees desire to apply the proceeds of said lot. The bill grants to the trustees authority to sell the lot and apply the proceeds to the benefit of Asbury chapel, of the city of Washington.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move to refer this bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, upon which I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question was taken upon the motion to refer; and upon a division, there were—ayes 41, noes 40; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. STEVENS, and Mr. LAWRENCE of Ohio, were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 47, noes 48.

So the motion to refer was not agreed to. The question was upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RICHARD W. MEADE, DECEASED.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate joint resolution No. 39, to refer the claim of the administrator of Richard W. Meade, deceased, to the Court of Claims; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move that this bill be referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. This matter has been before the Committee on the Judiciary, and by a vote of that committee I, as a member of it, was instructed to report a bill to the House with a recommendation that it pass. But before the Judiciary Committee was called the resolution was passed by the Senate and came here.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. As this joint resolution has been considered by the Judiciary Committee, I will withdraw the motion to refer.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The joint resolution was then read the third time and passed.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON GLASS COMPANY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 227, to incorporate the Washington Glass Company; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to refer that bill to the Committee for the District of Columbia; and upon that motion I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion to refer was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THOMAS W. STEVENS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 385, for the relief of Thomas W. Stevens; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. This is a simple claim, which has been examined by the Committee of Claims, and I have their leave to say that it is correct.

The bill was read at length. It provides for the payment of $1,025 50 to Thomas W. Stevens, on account of services as inspector of customs at the port of Albany, from the 1st of March, 1862, to the 1st of April, 1863.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I call the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. HOTCHKISS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SOUTHERN BRANCH UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 224, granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the southern branch of the Union Pacific railway and telegraph from Fort Riley to Fort Smith, Arkansas; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read at length. The first section provides that for the purpose of aiding the Union Pacific Railroad Company, southern branch, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Kansas, to construct and operate a railroad from Fort Riley, Kansas, or near said military reservation, thence down the valley of the Neosho river to the southern line of the State of Kansas, with a view to an extension of the same through a portion of the Indian Territory to Fort Smith, Arkansas, there is hereby granted to the State of Kansas, for the use and benefit of said railroad company every alternate section of land or parts thereof designated by odd numbers, to the extent of ten sections per mile on each side of said road; but in case it shall appear that the United States have, when the line of said road is definitely located, sold any section, or any part thereof, granted as aforesaid, or that the right of preemption or homestead settlement has attached to the same, or that the same has been reserved by the United States for any purpose whatever, then it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to cause to be selected for the purposes aforesaid, from the public lands of the United States nearest to the sections above specified so much land as shall be equal to the amount of such lands as the United States have sold, reserved, or otherwise appropriated, or to which the right of homestead settlement or preemption has attached as aforesaid, which lands, thus indicated by the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be reserved and held for the State of Kansas for the use of the company by the Secretary for the purpose of the construction and operation of the railroad, as provided by this act; provided, that any and all lands heretofore reserved to the United States by any act of Congress, or in any other manner by competent authority, for the purpose of aiding in any object of internal improvement or other purpose whatever, be, and the same are hereby, reserved and excepted from the operation of this act, except so far as it may be found necessary to locate the route of the road through such reserved lands, in which case the right of way, two hundred feet in width, is hereby granted, subject to the approval of the President of the United States; and provided, further, that the lands hereby granted shall not be selected beyond twenty miles from the line of said road.

The second section provides that the sections and parts of sections of land which by the aforesaid grant shall remain in the United States, within ten miles on each side of said road, shall not be sold for less than double the minimum price of public lands when sold, nor shall any of said lands become subject to sale at private entry until the same shall have been first offered at public sale to the highest bidder, at or above the minimum price aforesaid; provided, that actual bona fide settlers under the preemption laws of the United States may, after due proof of settlement, improvement, and occupation, as now provided by law, purchase the same at the price fixed for said lands at the date of such settlement, improvement, and occupation; and provided also, that settlers under the provisions of the homestead act, who make their settlement after the passage of this act and comply with the terms and requirements of said act, shall be entitled, within the said limits of ten miles, to patents for an amount not exceeding eighty acres each.

The third section provides that the grant of lands hereby made is upon condition that the company, after the construction of its road, shall keep it in repair and use, and shall at all times be in readiness to transport troops, munitions of war, supplies, and public stores upon its road for the Government, when required to do so by any Department thereof, the Government at all times having the preference in the use of the road for all the purposes aforesaid, at fair and reasonable rates of compensation, not exceeding that paid by private individuals, or the average paid for like services on other roads. And the lands hereby granted, held, and reserved as aforesaid shall inure to the benefit of the company, as follows: when the Governor of the State of Kansas shall certify that any section of ten consecutive miles of the road is completed in a good, substantial, and workmanlike manner as a first-class railroad, then the Secretary of the Interior shall issue to the company patents for so many sections of the land within the limits above named, and continuous with the completed section hereinbefore granted; and when certificates of the Governor aforesaid shall be presented to the Secretary of the completion, as aforesaid, of each successive section of ten consecutive miles of said road, the Secretary shall in like manner issue to the company patents for the land for each of its sections of road as in the first instance, until the road shall be completed, provided, that if the road is not completed within ten years from the date of the acceptance of the grant herein before made, the lands remaining unpatented shall revert to the United States.

The fourth section provides that as soon as said company shall file with the Secretary of the Interior maps of its line, designating the route thereof, it shall be the duty of the Secretary to withdraw from the market the lands granted by this act, in such manner as may be best calculated to effect the purposes of this act and subserve the public interest.

The fifth section provides that the United States mails shall be transported on said road, and under the direction of the Post Office Department, at such price as Congress may by law provide; provided that until such price is fixed by law the Postmaster General shall have power to fix the compensation.

The sixth section provides that the right of way through the public lands be, and the same is hereby, granted to said Pacific Railroad Company, southern branch, its successors and assigns, for the construction of a railroad as proposed; and the right is hereby given to said corporation to take from the public lands adjacent to the line of said road material for the construction thereof. Said way is granted to said railroad to the extent of one hundred feet in width on each side of said road where it may pass through the public domain; also all necessary ground for station buildings, workshops, depots, machine-shops, switches, side-tracks, turn-tables, and water-stations.

The seventh section provides that the acceptance of the terms, conditions, and impositions of this act by the Pacific Railroad Company, southern branch, shall be signified in writing, under the corporate seal of the company, duly executed pursuant to the direction of its board of directors first had and obtained, which acceptance shall be made within one year after the passage of this act, and not afterwards, and shall be deposited with the Secretary of the Interior.

The eighth section provides that the Pacific Railroad Company, southern branch, its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized and empowered to extend and construct its railroad from the southern boundary of Kansas, south through the Indian Territory along the valley of Grand and Arkansas rivers, to Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas; and the right of way through said Indian Territory is hereby granted to said company, its successors and assigns, to the extent of one hundred feet on each side of said road or roads, and all necessary grounds for stations, buildings, workshops, machine-shops, switches, side-tracks, turn-tables, and water-stations.

The ninth section provides that the same grants of lands through said Indian Territory are hereby made as provided in the first section of this act, whenever the Indian title shall be extinguished by treaty or otherwise, not to exceed the ratio per mile granted in the first section of this act; provided that said lands become a part of the public lands of the United States.

The tenth section provides that the Pacific Railroad Company, southern branch, its successors and assigns, shall have the right to negotiate with, and acquire from, any Indian nation or tribe, authorized by the United States to dispose of lands for railroad purposes, and from any other nation or tribe of Indians through whose lands said railroad may pass, subject to the approval of the President of the United States, or from any company or parties incorporated or authorized for such purposes, by such nation or tribe, or which such parties may have acquired under the laws of the United States.

The eleventh section provides that any railroad company chartered under any law of the United States, or of any State which may have been heretofore or shall hereafter be organized and subsidized by any act of the Congress of United States, may connect, unite, and consolidate with this railroad company after the same shall be located to the valley of the Neosho or Grand river, upon just, fair, and equitable terms, to be agreed upon between the parties as shall not be against the public interest, or the interest of the United States.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. I understand that the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HOLMES,] from the Committee on Public Lands, has some amendments which he has been instructed by that committee to offer to this bill. I will therefore yield the floor to him for that purpose.

Mr. HOLMES. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands to submit the following amendments:

In section two strike out the following words: "nor shall any of said lands become subject to sale at private entry until the same shall have been first offered at public sale to the highest bidder, at or above the minimum price aforesaid."

Section three, line four, strike out "be in readiness to."

Line six, same section, insert after the word "Government" the words "to the United States free from all cost or charge therefor;" and strike out the words "at all times having the preference in the use of the road for all the purposes aforesaid, at fair and reasonable rates of compensation, not exceeding that paid by private individuals, or the average paid for like services on other roads."

In line eighteen, same section, after the word "land" insert the words "herein granted."

Section ten, line three, after the word "acquire" insert "title to land for railroad purposes;" and in line five strike out the words "for railroad purposes."

Section eleven, line four, strike out the words "and subsidized."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. I demand the previous question.

Mr. SPALDING. Has the bill been before the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. I will state for the information of the House that this bill has been examined by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SPALDING. Did not the bill come from the Senate?

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPALDING. How, then, has it been before the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. This identical bill, as printed, was before the committee and has been examined, and the amendments submitted by that committee have been adopted.

Mr. WRIGHT. Is that in accordance with the rules for the committee to consider and act on a bill not referred to them? Is it not a violation of the rules of the House? Should not every measure go before the committee in the proper way? Is it the province of the committee to have the bill before them for examination and action, but they must wait till we send it to them. It is the right of the House to send it to them.

The SPEAKER. The examination by a committee of a bill pending in the Senate is not a violation of the rules. If the gentleman wants it referred, he can vote down the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. This bill grants ten sections on each side of the road for each mile of the road. It covers an extent of forty miles wide, the grant being by alternate sections. It is not five sections per mile, but ten on each side of the road, equal to twenty sections per mile. If that be the design of the House, let the House understand it. If it be not, let that also be understood. Let the bill be made to conform to, and carry out the purpose of the House.

As the bill is now drawn it is not ten sections per mile, but ten sections per mile on each side of the road; and being in alternate sections, it will extend over a country forty miles wide. It strikes me that is twice as much as was ever granted before. It admonishes us of the evil of having these bills passed hastily without proper examination. I do not want to object if this is the usual form of such bills. I know there are grave objections to disposing of our public lands in this way. It destroys our homestead system. It withdraws public lands from settlement and places them in the hands of corporations. But I do not expect the House to change its policy of granting lands for railroad purposes. I think it ought to go to some committee. I do not wish to place myself in the attitude of making objection to the bill, but I hope the gentleman from Kansas will consent to its going to some committee.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. I have already said that a copy of this bill has been before the Committee on Public Lands, and it is in the same form as those that have already passed granting lands for railroad purposes.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I think the gentleman is mistaken. The form in which they have heretofore passed has been to grant ten sections per mile. This grants twenty sections—ten on each side of the road. I do not say that this language has been framed by design to operate as a fraud upon the House; but I do say it is high time that these bills should be examined, and that the House should understand what it is doing. Let the paragraph be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Every alternate section of land or parts thereof designated by odd numbers, to the extent of ten sections per mile, on each side of the road: Provided, Such land shall not be selected beyond twenty miles from the said road.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Just double the amount granted heretofore.

Mr. STEVENS. Just exactly the amount granted hitherto. The gentleman has not looked into one of these acts and he gets up here to object.

Mr. WRIGHT. If this is a meritorious bill, what objection can there be to having it examined by a committee? If it is not meritorious, then I for one object to it.

Mr. JULIAN. It is not an extraordinary provision.

The question being taken on ordering the bill to be read a third time, there were—ayes 45, noes 44; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and the Speaker appointed Messrs. CLARKE of Kansas, and BERGEN.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 48, noes 53.

So the bill was rejected.

Mr. RADFORD. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected, and also to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. CLARKE, of Kansas. On the latter motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken on laying the motion to reconsider on the table, there were—ayes 59, nays 58, not voting 64; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Benjamin, Bergen, Boutwell, Boyer, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Conkling, Dawes, Defrees, Dixon, Eldridge, Eliot, Finck, Aaron Harding, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Hulburt, Jenckes, Johnson, Kasson, Ketcham, Koontz, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, LeBlond, Marston, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Merrill, Morris, Moulton, Niblack, Nicholson, Orth, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Ritter, Rollins, Ross, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Strouse, Taber, Taylor, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Ward, Williams, Winfield, and Wright—59.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Bidwell, Bingham, Bromwell, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cullum, Davis, Delano, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Perry, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Higby, Hogan, Holmes, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Julian, Kelley, Kuykendall, Ladin, Loan, Lynch, McKuer, Myers, Noel, O'Neill, Paine, Per-ham, Price, John H. Rice, Sawyer, Schenck, Stevens, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, James F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—58.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Beaman, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Bundy, Chandler, Cook, Culver, Darling, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Dodge, Dumont, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Henderson, Hill, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, and Stephen F. Wilson—64.

The SPEAKER. The Chair votes in the negative, making a tie.

So the motion to lay on the table was not agreed to.

The question recurred on reconsidering the vote by which the bill was rejected; and being put, there were—ayes 59, noes 55.

Mr. SPALDING demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—ayes 64, nays 49, not voting 68; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Bidwell, Bingham, Bromwell, Buckland, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cullum, Davis, Delano, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Higby, Hogan, Holmes, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Julian, Kelley, Kuykendall, Loan, Lynch, McKuer, Mercer, Moulton, Myers, Noel, O'Neill, Paine, Perham, Pike, Price, John H. Rice, Sawyer, Schenck, Stevens, Thornton, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, James F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—64.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Benjamin, Bergen, Boutwell, Boyer, Broomall, Conkling, Dawes, Defrees, Dixon, Eldridge, Eliot, Finck, Aaron Harding, John H. Hubbard, James R. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, and Stephen F. Wilson—68.

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question recurred upon ordering the bill to a third reading.

Mr. McRUER. I now move to amend the bill by striking out in line twelve the word "ten" and inserting "five alternate;" so that the bill will read, "five alternate sections per mile on each side of the road." That was doubtless the intention of the framers of the bill, but as the language is perhaps a little ambiguous, I move this amendment, and I now renew the demand for the previous question.

Mr. DRIGGS. I ask the gentleman to add the words "to the extent of ten sections per mile." I have only a word to say. It is contended that the bill is indefinite, and I offer this amendment so as to make it entirely definite.

Mr. McRUER. I accept the amendment, and move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof of Mr. McRUER's amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be read a third time, and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. McRUER. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. WRIGHT demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The bill was passed.

Mr. McRUER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

CLAIMS OF IOWA.

The next business on the Speaker's table was joint resolution (S. R. No. 93) providing for the appointment of a commission to examine and report upon certain claims of the State of Iowa; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. PRICE. I desire that this bill may be acted upon at the present time, and I call the previous question.

The joint resolution, which was read at length, provides that the President of the United States be authorized and required to appoint three commissioners, whose duty it shall be to examine and report on or before the 1st day of December next upon the claim of the State of Iowa for forage, transportation, subsistence, and clothing furnished by that State to certain volunteers of the State, who, under the command of Colonels Morledge and Edwards, and at the request of certain officers commanding troops of the United States in the State of Missouri, marched into the State of Missouri to cooperate with the troops of the United States in that State in suppressing the rebellion; also the claim of the State of Iowa for repayment of certain moneys paid by the State in raising, arming, equipping, paying, and subsisting certain troops of the State maintained by the State on the southern and northwestern borders hereof during the late rebellion, for the purpose of defending the State against attacks by bushwhackers and Indians; and also the claim of that State for compensation for certain forage procured and barracks built by the State on the northwestern border thereof and turned over by the State to and used by the United States.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I would like to offer an amendment to this bill.

Mr. KASSON. I trust that will not be done. There is no land and no money in the bill; it is a simple proposition to state an account.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I desire to enlarge the scope of the inquiry of this commission. I wish to amend by providing that the commission shall also inquire into the claim of the State of Ohio for forage.

Mr. KASSON. That should be put in a separate bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PRICE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRITISH SHIP MAGICIENNE—AGAIN.

Mr. BANKS. I understand that the objection to the passage of the bill for the payment of the award in the case of the Magicienne is withdrawn; and I move that, by unanimous consent, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, that it may be put upon its passage now.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. No. 297) entitled "An act for the relief of the owners of the British vessel Magicienne."

Mr. BANKS. This award, made under an agreement between the President of the United States and the Queen of England, is to pay for a vessel wrongfully seized by the Government of the United States in 1863. We cannot escape the payment of the award, because it is made in pursuance of our own agreement. I trust the bill may be passed. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BANKS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. STROUSE. I ask unanimous consent to present for consideration at the present time a bill which I am instructed to report from the Committee on Territories.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I insist on the regular order.

JAMES POOL.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a bill (S. No. 311) entitled "An act for the relief of James Pool;" which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read at length, provides that the Secretary of the Interior be authorized and directed to pay to James Pool the sum of $1,287 10, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; $487 50 of the amount to be paid out of any annuities or moneys payable to the Senecas and Shawnee Indians, if there be any, and if none, then the whole sum to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. ROSS. I make the point of order that this bill, containing an appropriation, must go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask my friend from Illinois to withdraw his objection to this bill. I investigated this claim during the Thirty-Seventh Congress, and it is certainly correct.

Mr. ROSS. I insist on my objection.

COMSTOCK LODGE, NEVADA.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 352) entitled an act granting to A. Sutro the right of way, and granting other privileges, to aid in the construction of a draining and exploring tunnel to the Comstock lode, in the State of Nevada; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada. Mr. Speaker, a bill similar to this was introduced in this House about four weeks ago and referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, who have unanimously agreed to report in favor of it. As the measure involves to some extent the question of the right of way over public lands, I some time ago called the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands to the bill, and asked him to consider it that he might decide whether the public interests required its reference to his committee. I am not authorized to state positively, but I understand that he does not consider it necessary that the bill should be so referred.

It has become absolutely necessary for the development of the great Comstock lode that there should be a deep draining tunnel, which will be about four miles long, and the construction of which will require a large amount of capital. The bill is designed, not to grant any greater rights than exist under the present law, but to give to the parties investing their money in this undertaking a greater assurance that their rights will be secure.

Mr. STROUSE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that a bill similar to this, having been referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, has been examined by each member of that committee. By the chairman it was referred to me. I have given it a thorough examination; I have ascertained all the facts connected with it; and I am satisfied that the construction of this tunnel is one of the greatest enterprises ever undertaken on the American continent. As the completion of the tunnel will require a large expenditure of capital, it is necessary that the enterprise shall have the sanction of the American Congress. This great work when constructed will be of vast benefit, not only to the Pacific slope, but to the country. The Committee on Mines and Mining are thoroughly satisfied that the bill should pass.

The bill, which was read at length, provides in the first section that for the purpose of the construction of a deep draining and exploring tunnel to and beyond the Comstock lode, so called, in the State of Nevada, the right of way be granted to A. Sutro, his heirs and assigns, to run, construct, and excavate a mining, draining, and exploring tunnel; also to sink mining, working, or air shafts along the line or course of the tunnel, and connecting with the same at any points which may hereafter be selected by the grantee, his heirs or assigns. The tunnel is to be at least eight feet high and eight feet wide, and to commence at some point to be selected by the grantee, his heirs or assigns, at the hills near Carson river, and within the boundaries of Lyon county, and extending from said initial point in a westerly direction, seven miles, more or less, to and beyond the Comstock lode; and the right of way is to extend northerly and southerly on the course of the lode, either within the same or east or west of the same, and also on or along any other lode which may be discovered or developed by the tunnel.

The second section grants to A. Sutro, his heirs and assigns the right to purchase, at $1 25 per acre, a sufficient amount of public land near the mouth of the tunnel for the use of the same, not exceeding two sections, and such land is not to be mineral land or in the bona fide possession of other persons who claim under any law of Congress at the time of the passage of this act, and all minerals existing or which shall be discovered therein are excepted from the grant. It is provided that upon filing a plot of said land, the Secretary of the Interior shall withdraw the same from sale, and upon payment for the same a patent shall issue. And Sutro, his heirs and assigns, are granted the right to purchase, at five dollars per acre, such mineral veins and lodes within two thousand feet on each side of the tunnel as shall be cut, discovered, or developed by running and constructing the same, through its entire extent, with all the dips, spurs, and angles of such lodes, subject, however, to the provisions of this act and to such legislation as Congress may hereafter provide. The Comstock lode, with its dips, spurs, and angles, is excepted from this grant; and all other lodes, with their dips, spurs, and angles, located within the said two thousand feet, and which are or may be at the passage of this act, in the actual bona fide possession of other persons, are also excepted from the grant. The lodes herein excepted, other than the Comstock lode, are to be withheld from sale by the United States; and if such lodes shall be abandoned or not worked, possessed, and held in conformity to existing mining rules, or such regulations as have been or may be prescribed by the Legislature of Nevada, they shall become subject to such right of purchase by Sutro, his heirs or assigns.

The third section proposes to enact that all persons, companies, or corporations, owning claims or mines on the Comstock lode or any other lode, drained, benefited, or developed by the tunnel, shall hold their claims subject to the condition—which shall be expressed in any grant they may hereafter obtain from the United States—that they shall contribute and pay to the owners of the tunnel the same rate of charges for drainage, or other benefits derived from the tunnel or its branches, as have been or may hereafter be named in agreements between such owners and the companies representing a majority of the estimated value of the Comstock lode at the time of the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Nevada, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

KANSAS AND NEOSHO VALLEY RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VAN HORN] has discovered that in the engrossment of the amendments to the bill (S. No. 285) granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley railroad and its extension to Red river, the word "not" was accidentally omitted. Is there any objection to ordering the recall of the bill from the Senate that the mistake may be corrected?

There was no objection; and it was so ordered.

ETHAN RAY CLARK, ETC.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 402, to confirm the title of Ethan Ray Clark and Samuel Ward Clark to certain lands in Florida claimed under a grant from the Spanish Government; which was read a first and second time.

On motion of Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, the bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PURCHASE OF PETTIGRU'S LIBRARY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate joint resolution No. 79, to authorize the purchase for the Library of Congress of the law library of James L. Pettigru, of South Carolina; which was read a first and second time.

It authorizes the Joint Committee on the Library to contract with the heirs of the late James Louis Pettigru for the transfer of the law library left by him to the Library of Congress, and appropriates the sum of $5,000 out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for that purpose.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. KELLEY. It has been before that committee, and has met with their approval.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I should like to join in doing honor to the memory of that good man.

Mr. STROUSE. The library is worth far more than we offer to give for it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If it be referred let it be with authority to report at any time.

Mr. LOAN. I object.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The motion to refer was disagreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, demanded the previous question on the passage of the joint resolution.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, moved that the joint resolution be laid upon the table.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. SPALDING demanded the yeas and nays; and tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered; and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The joint resolution was then passed.

Mr. BANKS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REIMBURSEMENT OF MASSACHUSETTS.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate joint resolution No. 121, providing for the auditing of the accounts of the State of Massachusetts for moneys expended during the war for coast defense; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WRIGHT moved that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois, moved that the House adjourn.

The motion was disagreed to.

ALOIS KLAUS.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate joint resolution No. 164, for the relief of Alois Klaus; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. DELANO. It is to pay a poor soldier $32 90. He paid his own transportation from Chicago to Fort Smith. It is all right.

ELECTION OF SENATORS.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate joint resolution No. 414, to regulate the times and manner of holding elections for Senators in Congress; which was read a first and second time. It is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Legislature of each State which shall be chosen next preceding the expiration of the time for which any Senator was elected to represent said State in Congress, shall, on the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization thereof, proceed to elect a Senator in Congress, in the place of such Senator so going out of office, in the following manner: each House shall openly, by a viva voce of each member present, name one person for Senator in Congress from said State, and the name of the person so voted for, who shall have a majority of the whole number of votes cast in each House shall be entered on the Journal of each House by the clerk or secretary thereof; but if either House shall fail to give such majority to any person on said day, that fact shall be entered on the Journal. At twelve o'clock, meridian, of the day following that on which proceedings are required to take place, as aforesaid, the members of the two Houses shall convene in joint assembly, and the Journal of each House shall then be read, and if the same person shall have received a majority of all the votes in each House, such person shall be declared duly elected Senator to represent said State in the Congress of the United States; but if the same person shall not have received a majority of the votes in each House, or if either House shall have failed to take proceedings as required by this act, the joint assembly shall then proceed to choose, by a viva voce vote of each member present, a person for the purpose aforesaid, and the person having a majority of all the votes of the said joint assembly, a majority of all the members elected to both Houses being present and voting, shall be declared duly elected; and in case no person shall receive such majority on the first day, the joint assembly shall meet at twelve o'clock meridian of each succeeding day during the session of the Legislature, and take at least one vote until a Senator shall be elected.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That whenever, on the meeting of the Legislature of any State, a vacancy shall exist in the representation of such State in the Senate of the United States, said Legislature shall proceed, on the second Tuesday after the commencement and organization of its session, to elect a person to fill such vacancy, in the manner hereinbefore provided for the election of a Senator for a full term; and if a vacancy shall happen during the session of the Legislature, then on the second Tuesday after the Legislature shall have been organized and shall have notice of such vacancy.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Governor of the State from which any Senator shall have been chosen as aforesaid to certify his election, under the seal of the State, to the President of the Senate of the United States, which certificate shall be countersigned by the secretary of state of the State.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, demanded the previous question.

Mr. LE BLOND moved that the bill be laid upon the table; and on that motion demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken on laying the bill on the table, it was decided in the negative—yeas 21, nays 87, not voting 73; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Eldridge, Finck, Aaron Harding, Hogan, Johnson, William Lawrence, Newell, Niblack, Nicholson, Radford, Ritter, Ross, Strouse, Taber, Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, Winfield, and Wright—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Culom, Davis, Dawes, DeFrees, Delano, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, Jencks, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Koontz, Ladin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, Loan, Lynch, Marston, McRuer, Mercier, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Moulton, Myers, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Price, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Spalding, Stevens, John L. Thomas, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—87.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Beaman, Blaine, Blow, Boyer, Brandegee, Bundy, Chandler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Culver, Darling, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Dumont, Eggleston, Glossbrenner, Goddard, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Hayes, Henderson, Hill, Asahel W. Hubbard, Dennis Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Humphrey, Jucosoll, Jones, Kelso, Kerr, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Le Blond, Longyear, Marshall, Marvin, McClurg, McCullough, McDermoe, McKee, Noell, Patterson, Phelps, Plants, Pomeroy, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Rogers, Shanklin, Stigsen, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stillwell, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, and Walker—73.

So the motion to lay on the table was not agreed to.

The question recurred on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed—aye seventy-eight, noes not counted.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REIMBURSEMENT OF MASSACHUSETTS—AGAIN.

Mr. DAWES. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Massachusetts claim was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. It is precisely like the one in reference to Iowa, merely to authorize a statement of the account. I think there can be no objection to it. Several of them have passed.

Mr. SCHENCK. The bill creates a couple of commissioners, and I do not know whether their salary is fixed or not. I doubt very much the necessity of settling this question in that way. I have now ready to report from the Military Committee a bill giving authority to the Secretary of War to audit the accounts of the Territory of Colorado for services of the militia of that State called out and actually employed in the Army of the United States.

Mr. DAWES. I do not want anybody but the Secretary of War to do this.

Mr. SCHENCK. It can be done by the accounting officer without creating a commission and having two or three officers to be paid liberal salaries, or eight or ten dollars a day for doing what the accounting officer ought to do.

Mr. DAWES. If the gentleman will allow me I will enter the motion to reconsider and prepare an amendment. I will also demand the previous question so as to bring it up tomorrow morning.

Mr. CONKLING. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at ten o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. PIKE: The petition of S. T. King, and 32 others, of Calais, Maine, for inter-State insurance law.

Also, the petition of L. Leighton, 2d, and others, for reimbursement of money defrauded from them by claim agent.

By Mr. HOLMES: The petition of L. C. Rogers, and others, citizens of Madison county, New York, for Bureau of National Insurance.

By Mr. RAYMOND: The petition of Ignatius T. Chutkowski, of the city of New York, praying compensation for real and personal property used by the United States.

Also, two memorials of hardware dealers of New York and Philadelphia in regard to the tariff.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, July 24, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.
On motion of Mr. CONNESS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SUMNER, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom were referred resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York in favor of timely and adequate appropriations for exhibiting the products of the American Union at the Exposition at Paris in 1867, in such a manner and on such a scale as shall maintain its just rank among the nations of the earth, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of James Roache, praying for compensation for services rendered in Ireland during the late rebellion, in behalf of this country, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

PACIFIC RAILROAD BONDS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 772) to authorize the issue of certain bonds in denominations greater than $1,000, to report it back without amendment, and as it relates to a matter very simple in itself, I ask that it be put on its passage now.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that hereafter the bonds of the United States authorized by the act of July 1, 1862, to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean, and by all acts amendatory thereof, may be issued in denominations greater than $1,000, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury; but it shall at all times be optional with any railroad company whether they will receive bonds of a larger denomination than $1,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. HOWARD. The Committee on the Pacific Railroad to whom was recommitted the bill (S. No. 387) to secure the speedy construction of the Northern Pacific railroad and telegraph line, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes, have had the same again under consideration, and have instructed me to report it back to the Senate with certain amendments. In making this report, I beg the indulgence of the Senate for one moment, while I say that the Committee on the Pacific Railroad do not expect that at this late period of the session it will be possible for the Senate to act upon the bill further. Indeed, many of them are of opinion that it is not expedient under the circumstances to proceed further with the consideration of the bill at the present session, and I shall be content for one to have its consideration postponed until the commencement of the next session of Congress.

The amendments of the committee, I beg to say, are very brief, and I seize upon this opportunity of stating substantially what they are. The committee amend the scheme of guaranty embraced in the bill by dividing the whole route of the Northern Pacific railroad into three sections, the first section commencing at the eastern terminus on Lake Superior and running westwardly to the one hundred and eleventh degree of longitude, the distance being about one thousand one hundred miles, and on this section the amendments guaranty the interest on stock at the rate of $16,000 per mile, that is, for one hundred and sixty shares, the shares of the company being $100 each. The second section commences at the one hundred and eleventh degree of longitude, running west to the one hundred and nineteenth degree, being, according to the bill which was referred to the committee, five hundred and twenty miles in length. This is the mountain region and is called the mountain district. On this section the amendments of the committee guaranty interest on stock at the rate of $48,000 a mile, or four hundred and eighty shares per mile. The third section commences at the one hundred and nineteenth degree, running to the western terminus, that is the main trunk to Puget's sound and the branch to Portland, in Oregon; and on this section the amendments of the committee guaranty interest on stock at the rate of $32,000 per mile, or three hundred and twenty shares. The distance to Puget's sound is supposed to be about two hundred miles, and the length of the branch, as near as it can be estimated by the materials which the committee have in their possession, is about four hundred miles.

The scheme presented by the amendments of the committee gives to the company the same rate of aid in guarantying stock per mile as the Union Pacific railroad has in bonds, and is in fact a reduction of the aid claimed in the original bill by nearly one half the whole amount of guarantied stock, that amount being by the scheme presented in the amendments about sixty million dollars in such stock so far as the distances can at present be estimated.

I present the following, Mr. President, as a rough estimate of each of the three sections of this Northern Pacific railroad route: the first section says eleven hundred miles at $16,000 guarantied stock per mile would require $17,600,000 of guarantied stock. Of course I speak of principal. The second section, being by the bill as originally presented five hundred and twenty miles, at the rate $48,000 per mile would require $24,960,000. The third section, including the branch to Portland, Oregon—these lines measuring, the main line to Puget sound, say two hundred miles, and the branch to Portland say four hundred miles, amounting together to six hundred miles, at the rate of $32,000 per mile, would require $19,200,000. The total of aid in the shape of guarantied stock being thus $61,760,000. The annual interest upon it would be $8,705,600, and the whole interest for twenty years $74,112,000.

I avail myself of this opportunity of making this statement in order that the facts may appear upon the reports of our proceedings, and I ask that this bill be postponed until the next session of Congress, with a view to elicit discussion throughout the country upon the part of all persons who have an interest in the prosecution of this great enterprise. I therefore submit the motion that the bill be postponed until the next session of Congress, and that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOWARD. In connection with this subject I desire to present a resolution, and I hope the Senate will take it under present consideration. It is simply for the purpose of obtaining information from the War Department and from the Interior Department with a view to the ultimate cost and expense of building this road, and the amount of transportation which the Government will find it necessary to have upon it. I hope the resolution will be passed. It will lead to no debate, I am sure.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to furnish to the Senate such information as may be in the possession of the War Department touching the probable cost of constructing a railroad on the route mentioned in the charter of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, together with estimates of the probable amount of Government transportation on said road, derived from such data as may be in his power, and that the Secretary of the Interior render him such aid he may call for in answering this resolution.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. POMEROY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 448) to credit sea service to officers of the Navy who have served during the war to suppress the rebellion who may have resigned prior to said rebellion; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. POLAND asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 449) authorizing special juries in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions of the Senate without amendment:

A bill (S. No. 164) for the relief of Alois Klaus;

A bill (S. No. 297) for the relief of the owners of the British vessel Magicienne;

A bill (S. No. 352) granting to A. Sutro the right of way and granting other privileges to aid in the construction of a draining and exploring tunnel to the Comstock lode, in the State of Nevada;

A bill (S. No. 414) to regulate the times and manner of holding elections for Senators in Congress;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 79) to authorize the purchase for the Library of Congress of the law library of James L. Pettigru, of South Carolina; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 93) providing for the appointment of a commission to examine and report upon certain claims of the State of Iowa.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the bill (S. No. 224) granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of a southern branch of the Union Pacific railway and telegraph from Fort Riley, Kansas, to Fort Smith, Arkansas, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had corrected the error in the engrossment of its amendments to the bill (S. No. 285) granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley railroad and its extension to Red river, and had returned the bill and amendments to the Senate, and asked the concurrence of the Senate in the amendments.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 480) to provide for and to regulate the weighing of exports, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 795) to authorize the entry and clearance of vessels at the port of Calais, Maine.

MILITARY PEACE ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 138) to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I will simply state that in March last the Senate passed an Army bill, which is the one now pending, and, some weeks ago passed another. On the very day on which we passed the last bill, the House of Representatives took up our Army bill that had lain for four months on their table, and passed it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. I propose now to concur in that amendment, first striking it all out after the word "that," which is the first word in it, and inserting a bill which is the same that we last passed, with one or two small changes. I make that motion now, and as the amendment I offer has been passed by the Senate, it is not necessary to read it. I suppose this will put the matter in a shape that will lead to a committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the amendment made to this bill by the House of Representatives be amended by striking out all after the word "that" and inserting what he has sent to the Chair. The proposed amendment will not be read unless called for by some Senator.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to, and the House amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

BOUNTIES OF COLORED SOLDIERS.

Mr. WILSON. I desire now to take up another very important resolution, which will take but a moment, and for the want of which there is great suffering in the country. We passed a bill a month ago which has stopped entirely the whole matter of bounty pertaining to colored persons; the House of Representatives made a mistake in it, and they have corrected it. I should like to put that resolution on its passage. It is very important and there is a great deal of complaint about it. I move to take up the House joint resolution No. 176.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 176) amendatory of a joint resolution entitled "A resolution respecting bounties to colored soldiers, and the pensions, bounties, and allowances to their heirs," approved June 15, 1866.

The Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia reported the resolution with amendments.

The first amendment was to strike out all after the enacting clause of section two down to and including the words "United States," in line nine of section three, as follows:

That whenever application shall be made by any claimant for bounty under the provisions of the joint resolution aforesaid, through any attorney or agent, the post office address of the claimant shall be furnished, giving the name of the county and State in which it is situated, and the amount of commission or fee which the attorney or agent is to receive for his service in the settlement of the claim, which charges in no case shall exceed the sum of five dollars; and every such application shall be accompanied by the written affidavit of the attorney or agent, that he has not charged, nor agreed for, and will not accept, more than such sum of five dollars for his services in the case. The Paymaster General, or proper accounting officer of the Treasury, upon ascertaining the amount due, shall cause to be transmitted to such claimant the full amount thereof, less the fee to be paid to the attorney or agent, which fee shall be paid to the said attorney or agent in person, or transmitted to such address as the attorney may direct.

SEC. 5. And be it further resolved, That any attorney or agent who shall receive from any claimant a sum greater than five dollars for the prosecution of any claim under the provisions of said resolution, upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine not to exceed the sum of $1,000, or imprisonment for a term of not less than one year, or both, as the court or jury may adjudge, and shall be forever thereafter excluded from prosecuting claims of any nature whatever against the Government of the United States.

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That whenever application shall be made by any claimant for bounty under the provisions of the joint resolution aforesaid, by or through any agent or attorney, such agent or attorney shall hereafter be required to file with each claim his oath or affirmation that he has no interest whatever in said bounty beyond the fees for collection of the same, which are hereby fixed and established as follows, namely: for the preparation and prosecution of claims for, and the collection and remittance of, all sums not exceeding $100, ten per cent. upon the amount collected, and for all sums exceeding $100, the sum of ten dollars; and said fees shall include all expenses incident to the collection of said claims, except the expense of the necessary affidavits and notarial or other acknowledgments, which shall be defrayed by the claimant; and any agent or attorney who shall charge, directly or indirectly, in any case, a greater sum for his services in preparing and prosecuting said claims and remitting the amount due, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction, be punished by fine not exceeding $3,000 nor less than $1,000, and shall be forever excluded from prosecuting military or naval claims against the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section [four] three, line four, after the word "depository" to strike out "in or near the district, wherein the claimant may reside."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section four, [five,] line two, after the word "soldier" to strike out "sailor or marine;" in line three after "discharge" to strike out "final statement, descriptive list, or other papers;" and in line nine after "soldier" to strike out "sailor or marine;" so that the section will read:

That it shall not be lawful for any soldier to transfer, assign, barter, or sell his discharge, for the purpose of transferring, assigning, bartering, or selling any interest in any bounty under the provisions of said resolution; and all such transfers, assignments, barters, or sales heretofore made are hereby declared null and void as to any rights intended so to be conveyed by any such soldier.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. It was ordered that the amendments be engrossed and the joint resolution read the third time. The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolution from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 480) to provide for and to regulate the weighing of exports, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (H. R. No. 794) for the relief of Francis Colgen—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. No. 795) to authorize the entry and clearance of vessels at the port of Calais, Maine—to the Committee on Commerce.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 198) authorizing the transmission through the mails free of postage of certain certificates by the adjutant general of New Jersey—to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

POST ROUTE BILL.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 775) to establish certain post roads.

Mr. RAMSEY. I hope the Senate will at once dispose of those few amendments and finish the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. RAMSEY. I have looked through all these amendments. There is no occasion to read them through. They are mere names of places, and are all right.

The amendments were concurred in.

KANSAS AND NEOSHO VALLEY RAILROAD.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 285) granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley railroad, and its extension to Red river.

Mr. POMEROY. I move that the Senate concur in those amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILROAD FROM FORT RILEY TO FORT SMITH.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 224) granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the southern branch of the Union Pacific railway and telegraph from Fort Riley, Kansas, to Fort Smith, Arkansas.

Mr. POMEROY. I move that those amendments lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

PROPOSED RECESS OF CONGRESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution, from the House of Representatives:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, on the day of —, at twelve o'clock meridian, adjourn their respective Houses until Tuesday, the 2d day of October, 1866, and that on that day, unless it be then otherwise ordered by the two Houses, they further adjourn their respective Houses until Saturday, the 1st day of December, 1866.

Mr. CLARK. I move that the resolution lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

STOCKTON AND COPPEROPOLIS RAILROAD.

Mr. CONNESS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 244.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 244) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad from the city of Stockton to the town of Copperopolis, in the State of California.

The Committee on Public Lands reported the bill with amendments.

The first amendment of the committee was in section three, line two, after the words "granted to the" to insert "State of California, for the construction of the;" after "railroad," in line three, to strike out "company;" in line nine, after the word "the," to strike out "amount" and insert "extent;" in the same line, after "ten," to strike out "alternate sections per;" and to add an "s" to "mile;" so as to make the clause read:

That there be, and is hereby, granted to the State of California, for the construction of the said Stockton and Copperopolis railroad, its successors and assigns, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of said railroad, and to secure the safe and speedy transportation of the mails, troops, munitions of war, and public stores over the route of said line of railway, every alternate section of public land designated by odd numbers, to the extent of ten miles on each side of said railroad line as said company may adopt, whenever on the line thereof the United States have full title, not reserved, sold, granted, or otherwise appropriated, and free from preemption or other claims or rights at the time the line of said road is definitely fixed and a plot thereof filed in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was in the same section, line twenty-one, to strike out the word "ten" and insert "twenty;" in the same line to strike out the word "same" and insert "said line of road;" and in line twenty-four, after the word "numbers," to strike out "not more than ten miles beyond the limits of said alternate sections;" so as to make the clause read:

And whenever, prior to said time, any of said sections or parts of sections shall have been granted, sold, reserved, or covered by private land grants, or occupied by homestead settlers, or preempted, or otherwise disposed of, other lands shall be selected by said company in lieu thereof, on the line of said road, within twenty miles of the said line of road, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in alternate sections, and designated by odd numbers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the same section, line twenty-eight, to strike out "agricultural" before "lands;" and in line twenty-nine, after "within," to insert "the said;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That all lands containing gold or silver, or copper, bc, and the same are hereby, excluded from the operations of this act, and in lieu thereof a like quantity of unoccupied and unappropriated lands in odd-numbered sections, within the said twenty miles of the line of said road, may be selected as above provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section four, line twelve, to strike out "unless said lands are of a character that they are covered by the exceptions and reservations of this act; then said company shall have a right to select such lands on the line of said road so constructed;" and in line fifteen, after the word "miles," to strike out "of said road so completed," and insert "thereof;" so as to read:

And patents of lands, as aforesaid, shall be issued to said company, confirming to said company the right and title to said lands, situated opposite to and continuous with said completed section of said road, within twenty miles thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section nine of the bill in the following words:

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That all people of the United States shall have the right to subscribe to the stock of the said railroad until the whole capital is taken up by complying with the terms of subscription.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section twelve of the bill, in the following words:

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That the said company is authorized to accept to its own use any grant, donation, or loan, power, franchise, aid, or assistance which may be granted to or conferred upon said company by the Legislature of any State, county, or municipal corporation, person or persons, and said corporation is authorized to hold and enjoy any such grant, donation, loan, or power, franchise, aid, or assistance, to its own use for the purpose aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following Senate bills without amendment:

A bill (S. No. 149) for the relief of Daniel Winslow;

A bill (S. No. 281) to authorize the Chesapeake Bay and Potomac River Tidewater Canal Company to enter the District of Columbia and extend their canal to the Anacostia river; and

A bill (S. No. 374) for the relief of James P. Johnson.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following Senate bill and joint resolutions, with amendments to each, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 39) to amend the acts relating to officers employed in the examination of imported merchandise in the district of New York;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 31) manifesting the sense of Congress toward the officers and seamen of the vessels, and others, engaged in the rescue of the officers and soldiers of the Army, the passengers, and the officers and crew of the steamship San Francisco from perishing with the wreck of that vessel; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 121) providing for the examination of the accounts of the State of Massachusetts for moneys expended during the war for coast defense.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives has passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 797) granting a pension to Daniel Lucas;

A bill (H. R. No. 798) for the relief of Quincy A. May; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 194) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to pay Charles M. Pott a pension of fifteen dollars per month.

MILWAUKEE AND ROCK RIVER CANAL.

Mr. HOWE. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 102.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (S. R. No. 102) construing and giving effect to the joint resolution entitled "A resolution for the relief of the State of Wisconsin," approved July 1, 1864, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes so to construe the resolution for the relief of the State of Wisconsin, dated July 1, 1864, as to entitle the Milwaukee and Rock River Canal Company to reimbursement, out of the canal land fund therein mentioned, for the amounts which are proved to have been paid out by it for interest in carrying on the work mentioned in the former resolution in the same manner as for other sums by it expended; also for the amount which is proved to have been expended by it in necessary repairs and management of the canal after the date of the resolution, but before the date of the settlement made thereunder; but the company is not to receive more than the amount of the residue of the trust fund arising from the sale of the canal lands charged against the State in the settlement and not heretofore paid over to the company; and the Secretary of the Interior is to complete the settlement by making these further allowances to the company up to the amount of the residue of the canal lands fund, and they are to be paid to the company out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WADE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 404) to regulate the selection of grand and petit jurors in the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. A joint resolution was passed a moment ago without attracting any attention; I did not myself observe it until it was on its passage; and I desire to move a reconsideration of the vote by which it was passed. I refer to the joint resolution to settle certain matters with the State of Wisconsin. I do not recollect the title of it. It is a subject which the Committee on the Judiciary had under consideration for several weeks and investigated very elaborately, and we were divided as nearly as a committee could be divided on such a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator wish the question put on the motion to reconsider at the present time?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I wish the motion to reconsider entered, to bring it before the Senate, that the Senate may understand what the resolution is. I do not wish to delay it; I am willing to dispose of it now; but I think that it is a resolution that ought not to pass. It is a resolution that takes $25,000 out of the Treasury, in my judgment, without the least particle of claim.

Mr. HOWE. I of course shall have no objection to the Senator entering that motion when the motion can be entertained.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is a privileged motion.

Mr. HOWE. I understand there is another subject before the Senate.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I can enter the motion, I presume. It is a privileged motion that I can make at any time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a proper motion, and the Chair can entertain it.

Mr. HOWE. I would inquire if a motion to reconsider can be entered while another question is pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it can. It can be entered at any time, being a privileged motion; but when another subject is pending, it cannot be put without common consent.

Mr. HOWE. Then the effect of a motion to reconsider may be the most fatal possible, because it gives the enemies of a bill all the benefit of tying up the bill, preventing the progress of the bill, and still subjecting the other side to the risk of being able to get the motion taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the motion is not taken up, the bill would stand passed. The entering of the motion does not annul the vote of the Senate passing the bill. Unless the motion is considered the bill stands passed.

Mr. HOWE. If the motion has no other effect I have no objection.

Mr. CLARK. I think that has not been the ruling of the Senate. I think the motion to reconsider detains the bill here until it is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It detains it unquestionably, but the bill stands as passed unless the Senate vote to reconsider it.

Mr. HOWE. Of course I shall submit to the ruling of the Chair, but it really seems to me the motion ought not to be entertained except when the Senate are prepared to consider the motion. It should be made on the conditions that all other motions are.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator will permit me to suggest that that cannot be so, because the time for entering a motion to reconsider is limited to two days. It is, therefore, considered a privileged motion, to be made at any time within the two days. It may not be considered for a month afterwards.

Mr. HOWE. I believe the bill before the Senate is one which was taken up on the motion of the Senator from Ohio. I wish he would allow it to go over.

Mr. WADE. There are but a few minutes of the morning hour left for anything.

Mr. HOWE. I should like to have the motion of the Senator from Illinois considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is another bill pending—the bill called up on the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HOWE. I understand the Senator consents to have that bill laid aside.

Mr. WADE. It is a long bill, and I suppose there is not time to go through with it before the expiration of the morning hour.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask leave to make a report from a committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive it if there be no objection.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. 337) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1867, having met after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House of Representatives recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, and 113, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their seventeenth, one hundred and fourteenth, and one hundred and fiftieth amendments.

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House to the sixth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House to the one hundred and seventh amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the second amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: in line one, after the word "for" insert the following words: "gratuitous for;" and in line four of said amendment, before the word "thousand," strike out the word "five" and insert in lieu the word "three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the fifteenth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: in line eighteen, page 16, of the engrossed bill, strike out the words "last of ten" and insert in lieu thereof the words "ninth of ten;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the sixteenth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: in line three of said amendment, after the word "in," insert the words "money or;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the nineteenth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with the following amendment: in line four, page 17, of the engrossed bill, strike out the words "last of ten," and insert in lieu "ninth of ten;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the twentieth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: in line seventeen, page 17, of the engrossed bill, strike out the following: "last of five," and insert in lieu the words "fourth of five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the twenty-first amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: in line thirteen, page 18, of the engrossed bill, strike out the words "last of ten," and insert in lieu the words "ninth of ten;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the one hundred and eighteenth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: add to the end of said amendment the following proviso: "Provided, That no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be paid until a full examination shall be made by the Secretary of the Interior and the First Comptroller of the Treasury; and they shall ascertain that the money is justly and equitably due under contracts made and executed in entire good faith and for necessary supplies actually delivered to the Indians as aforesaid, at reasonable prices, and for this purpose the Comptroller is hereby authorized to take testimony and state the amount due said contractors upon principles of equity; and no money shall be paid or allowed on account of supplies furnished after the passage of this act."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the ninety-first amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: in line one of said amendment strike out the words "Cheyennes, Arapahoes and;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the one hundred and nineteenth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: in line four of said amendment, after the word "bond," insert the following words: "to the United States." And in line seven, after the word "trade," insert the following words: "or by the United States district judge or district attorney for the district in which the obligor resides."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the eighth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: strike out all of said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following: "for this amount or so much thereof as may become due to the Choctaws and Chickasaws under the third and forty-sixth articles of the treaty of April 28, 1866, for interest at the rate of five per cent. upon the amount paid for certain lands ceded by them to the United States, $15,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN SHERMAN,
J. W. NESMITH,
J. R. DOOLITTLE,

The report was concurred in.

PROTECTION OF THE REVENUE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it is the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of yesterday, being the civil appropriation bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I propose, with the consent of the Senate, by direction of the Committee on Finance, to take up first the amended tariff bill with a view to its passage, and I believe it will not excite any discussion, there being no provisions in it that do not meet with general assent. I hope it may be taken up and got out of the way, without displacing the miscellaneous appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks that the unfinished business of yesterday be laid aside with a view to proceeding to the consideration of House bill No. 780. The Chair hears no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 780) to protect the revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose it would be better to act on the amendments of the committee as we go along in the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That course will be pursued if there be no objection.

The Secretary read the first section of the bill, as follows:

That from and after the 1st day of August, 1866, in lieu of the duties now imposed by law on the articles mentioned and embraced in this section, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, on all goods, wares, and merchandise imported from foreign countries, the duties hereafter provided, namely:

On cigars, cigarettes, and cheroots of all kinds, $2 50 per pound, and, in addition thereto, fifty per cent. ad valorem; and no tare for the box in which any cigars, cheroots, or cigarettes are packed shall be allowed in ascertaining the weight: Provided, That paper cigars and cigarettes, including wrappers, shall be subject to the same duties as are herein imposed upon cigars: And provided further, That on and after the 1st day of August, 1866, no cigars shall be imported unless the same are packed in boxes of not more than five hundred cigars in each box; and no entry of any imported cigars shall be allowed of less quantity than three thousand in a single package; and all cigars on importation shall be placed in public store or bonded warehouse, and shall not be removed therefrom until the same shall have been inspected and a stamp affixed to each box indicating such inspection, with the date thereof. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to provide the requisite stamps, and to make all necessary regulations for carrying the above provisions of law into effect.

On cotton, three cents per pound.

On all compounds or preparations of which distilled spirits is a component part of chief value, there shall be levied a duty of not less than that imposed upon distilled spirits: Provided, That brandy and other spirituous liquors may be imported in casks or other packages of any capacity not less than thirty gallons; and that wine in bottles may be imported in boxes containing not less than one dozen bottles of not more than one quart each; and wine, brandy, or other spirituous liquors imported into the United States, and shipped after the 1st day of October, 1866, in any less quantity than herein provided for, shall be forfeited to the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to strike out in lines eleven, twelve, and thirteen of section one these words: "and no tare for the box in which any cigars, cheroots, or cigarettes are packed shall be allowed in ascertaining the weight."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read section two, as follows:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the proviso in section four of an act entitled "An act amendatory of certain acts imposing duties upon foreign importations," approved March 3, 1863, shall be construed to include any ship, vessel, or steamer to or from any port in the Sandwich Islands or Society Islands.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the word "proviso," in line one of section two, I move to insert the word "second;" so as to read, "that the second proviso in section four," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Sections three and four were next read, as follows:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That so much of an act entitled "An act to authorize protection to be given to citizens of the United States who may discover deposits of guano," approved August 18, 1856, as prohibits the export thereof is hereby suspended in relation to all persons who have complied with the provisions of section two of said act, for five years from and after the 14th day of July, 1867.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That all laws and parts of laws allowing fishing bounties to vessels hereafter licensed to engage in the fisheries be, and the same are hereby, repealed: Provided, That from and after the date of the passage of this act vessels licensed to engage in the fisheries may take on board imported salt in bond, to be used in curing fish, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, and upon proof that said salt has been used in curing fish, the duties on the same shall be remitted.

Section five was read, as follows:

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act all goods, wares, or merchandise arriving at the ports of New York, Boston, and Portland, or any other port of the United States which may be specially designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, and destined for places in the adjacent British Provinces, may be entered at the custom-house, and conveyed in transit through the territory of the United States without the payment of duties, under such rules, regulations, and conditions for the protection of the revenue as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

Mr. SHERMAN. By direction of the committee I move to amend section five by inserting after "British Provinces," in line six, the words "or arriving at the port of Point Isabel, Texas, or any other port of the United States which may be specially designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, and destined for places in the republic of Mexico."

The amendment was agreed to.

The sixth section was read, as follows:

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That imported goods, wares, or merchandise in bond, or duty paid, and products or manufactures of the United States, may, with the consent of the proper authorities of the Provinces aforesaid, be transported from one port or place in the United States to another port or place therein, over the territory of said Provinces, by such routes, and under such rules, regulations, and conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; and the goods, wares, and merchandise so transported shall, upon arrival in the United States from the Provinces aforesaid, be treated in regard to the liability to or exemption from duty or tax as if the transportation had taken place entirely within the limits of the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to amend section six by inserting after the word "Provinces," in lines four, six, and ten, respectively, the words "or republic."

Mr. CONNESS. I should like to have the Senator explain that amendment briefly.

Mr. SHERMAN. We have already inserted in the fifth section a provision in regard to the republic of Mexico, and this is simply to conform to that.

Mr. CONNESS. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The seventh and eighth sections were read, as follows:

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That whenever it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that more moneys have been paid to the collector of customs, or others acting as such, than the law requires, and the parties have failed to comply with the requirements of the fourteenth and fifteenth sections of the act entitled "An act to increase the duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall be satisfied that said non-compliance with the requirements as above stated was owing to circumstances beyond the control of the importer, consignee, or agent making such payments, he may draw his warrant upon the Treasurer in favor of the person or persons entitled to the overpayment, directing the said Treasurer to refund the same out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the second, third, and fourth sections of the act approved March 2, 1833, entitled "An act further to provide for the collection of duties on imports," and of the twelfth section of the act approved March 3, 1863, entitled "An act to prevent and punish frauds upon the revenue, to provide for the more certain and speedy collection of claims in favor of the United States, and for other purposes," shall be taken and deemed as extending to and embracing all cases arising or which may have heretofore arisen, and all suits and prosecutions heretofore brought and now pending, or which may hereafter be brought against any officer of the United States or other person by reason of any acts done or proceedings had by such officer or other person, under authority or color of the act approved March 12, 1863, entitled "An act to provide for the collection of abandoned property, and for the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States," or the act approved July 2, 1864, entitled "An act in addition to the several acts concerning commercial intercourse between loyal and insurrectionary States, and to provide for the collection of captured and abandoned property, and the prevention of frauds in States declared in insurrection:" Provided, That such acts done or proceedings had under the two acts last aforesaid, or under color thereof, shall have been done and had under the authority or by the direction of the executive Government of the United States: And provided further, That when a recovery shall have been or shall hereafter be had in any such suit or prosecution brought or which may hereafter be brought, as aforesaid, the payment of the amount recovered, as provided for in the said twelfth section of the act approved March 3, 1863, aforesaid, shall be made out of the moneys arising and obtained from the proceeds of sales and leases and fees collected and paid over to the Government under the two acts approved March 12, 1863, and July 2, 1864, aforesaid, in relation to captured and abandoned property.

The ninth section was next read, as follows:

Sec. 9. And be further enacted, That in determining the dutiable value of imported merchandise there shall be added to the cost, or to the actual wholesale price or general market value at the time of exportation in the principal markets of the country from whence the same shall have been imported into the United States, the cost of transportation, shipment, and transhipment, with all the expenses included from the place of growth, production, or manufacture, whether by land or water, to the vessel in which shipment is made to the United States; the value of the sack, box, or covering of any kind in which such goods are contained; commission at the usual rates, but in no case less than two and a half per cent.; brokerage, export duty, and all other actual or usual charges for putting up, preparing, and packing for transportation or shipment. And all charges of a general character incurred in the purchase of a general invoice shall be distributed pro rata among all parts of such invoice; and every part thereof charged with duties based on value shall be advanced according to its proportion, and all wines or other articles paying specific duty by grades shall be graded and pay duty according to the actual value so determined: Provided, That all additions made to the entered value of merchandise for charges shall be regarded as part of the actual value of such merchandise, and if such addition shall exceed by ten per cent. the value so declared in the entry, in addition to the duties imposed by law, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of twenty per cent. on such value: Provided, That the duty shall in no case be assessed upon an amount less than the invoice or entered value.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to move to strike out the ninth section of the bill, and as this is an important provision, I hope Senators will pay sufficient attention to know what it is. The ninth section proposes to add to the dutiable value of imported merchandise the cost of transportation, shipment, and transhipment, with all the expenses included, from the place of growth, manufacture, or production, to the vessel in which shipment is made to the United States, and also the value of the sack, box, or covering in which the goods are contained, and commission at the usual rates, but not in any case less than two and a half per cent., &c. The effect of this section is, in a great variety of cases, and especially in the case of heavy goods, to add to the duties on them by adding to the value of the merchandise, and consequently, a percentage on that increased value raises the duties. It was found that in certain heavy articles, especially very coarse wool, this section would operate very severely. It was first proposed to make an exception of the article of wool, and perhaps other articles; but on the whole, as this is a temporary provision only designed to be enforced until the new tariff act will take effect, which will probably be next winter or next spring, we think it better to strike out the whole section.

The principal objection to the section is that it would introduce into the computation of value to be assessed at the custom-house elements of uncertainty. It would be very difficult to ascertain the cost of a package, very difficult to ascertain the cost of transportation from the place of production to the place of shipment and then to the ship. All these are elements of computation which are new and difficult of ascertainment, giving rise to fraud and, perhaps, inequality. Bulky articles of least value would have the largest addition made to them, when probably they ought to have the least. On the whole, as this is a temporary provision, and it would introduce uncertainty, the committee think it better to strike it out. At the next session, in framing the tariff bill, of course the rates of duties can be adjusted to meet this difficulty.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Unless there be some better reason than that which has been given in regard to coarse wool why this should be stricken out, I prefer that it should be retained.

Mr. SHERMAN. The trouble is that it operates on every class of goods, and it introduces elements of uncertainty into every invoice in the custom-house, because, in addition to the present mode of ascertaining the value, they will have to enter into a computation of all these different things, and the importing merchant must be prepared with information which the law did not require him to furnish heretofore. To require it now suddenly, merely for a few months, would seem to be a great hardship. It was proposed, indeed, if this ninth section should be continued, to make an exception of wool and the Senator will see that we should be involved in a difficulty.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope this section will not be stricken out. The objection of the Senator from Ohio that it suddenly changes the rule so that importers cannot be advised of it, would apply to every change of the law. It is no more sudden than any other change, and it certainly provides, what I have always regarded as the proper doctrine of tariffs where you proceed upon valuation, that you proceed upon the home valuation. These costs and charges of transportation are elements which enter into the value of the property when it reaches the point where revenue is to be derived from it, when it reaches the point where it comes in competition with home productions. Therefore, in my judgment, whatever is a component element of the value of the property when it reaches the place of consumption ought to be, as it is in truth and in fact, a legal part of that value for the imposition of duties.

Now, it is well known to those engaged in the manufacture and in the production and sale of wool, for illustration, that South American wools are imported into the markets of the United States, and always have been, based upon the foreign cost, and by frauds and intermixtures of foreign substances, the value per pound is reduced below the amount fixed in the law for the higher duty, whereas if you added the cost and charges and transportation the real value and expense of the product would be nearly or quite doubled when it reaches this market. Then it comes in under the low duty, and the moment it is in the foreign substances are separated and you have a high grade of wool, or a common grade of wool which comes in competition with your own productions and defrauds the revenue at the same time.

Therefore, it does certainly seem to me that it is certainly better to subject the importer to these little inconveniences—and they surely are such—than it is to defraud the revenue and to injure that class of our citizens who are engaged in the production of this article and many other articles which in a similar way enter into competition with those of foreign production. I only speak of wool as one illustration, which is somewhat more familiar to me from being called to consider it, than many others which could be suggested by other gentlemen. I hope the Senate will keep the section in the bill.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I think it is highly proper to strike out this ninth section. Our tariff laws now prescribe that we shall take the foreign value in the markets of the country from which the goods are imported. All valuable goods come in packages that are not very costly. When you take the amount of the value of them, all cheap, heavy goods would be increased very much by the cost of the package, and thus we should increase the tariff upon cheap articles very greatly, while we increased it scarcely any at all upon the valuable goods. Now, we have provided, and our experts have the means of ascertaining, the comparative value of every description of goods in the principal ports of the country from which they are brought, but there is no means of ascertaining the foreign cost of the packages in which they are wrapped. If this section be retained you will place everything in uncertainty until the means can be devised of ascertaining that foreign valuation. We know as a matter of fact that with the cheaper goods, the heavier goods, the packages have to be better and would be more costly, and thus we should greatly enhance the tariff on those articles. I think before a measure of this kind is adopted we should have an experiment as to the weight of these packages, so as to see how it would operate upon the tariff, and how it would increase upon some articles and not increase materially the costly articles. The striking out of this section has the full sanction of my judgment, from my knowledge upon the subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On this question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 26, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Clark, Davis, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Nye, Riddle, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Van Winkle, Willey, and Wilson—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Conness, Cowan, Creswell, Edmunds, Kirkwood, Pomeroy, Raub, Sprague, and Wade—11.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cragin, Dixon, Lane, McDougall, Norton, Poland, Salsbury, Trumbull, Williams, Wright, and Yates—11.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Sections ten, eleven, and twelve were read, as follows:

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That the second proviso in section twenty-one of an act entitled "An act increasing temporarily the duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved July 14, 1862, which provides that any goods remaining in public store or bonded warehouse beyond three years shall be regarded as abandoned to the Government, and sold under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, and the proceeds paid into the Treasury, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, in case of any sale under the said provision, to pay to the owner, consignee, or agent of such goods, the proceeds thereof, after deducting duties, charges, and expenses, in conformity with the provision of the first section of the warehouse act of August 6, 1846.

SEC. 11. And be it further enacted, That during the period of one year from the passage of this act, there may be imported into the United States, free of duty, any machinery designed solely for and adapted to the manufacture of sugar from beets, including all the preliminary processes requisite therefor, but not including any machinery which may be used for any other manufactures.

SEC. 12. And be it further enacted, That upon the reimportation of articles once exported of the growth, product, or manufacture of the United States, upon which no internal tax has been assessed or paid, or upon which such tax has been paid and refunded by allowance or drawback, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty equal to the tax imposed by the internal revenue laws upon such articles.

Mr. SHERMAN. As section thirteen is a very long section, and the Committee on Finance move to strike it all out, I presume it is hardly worth while to read it unless some Senator desires it. I will state that the effect of it is to establish in the Treasury Department a Bureau of Statistics with a pretty large force, and with the direction that certain reports now made to Congress be made to this bureau with a view to the collection of statistics. The Committee on Finance are in favor of the object of this section; but they think it ought not to be adopted in this form at this period of the session. The statistics proposed to be gathered together are chiefly of a commercial character, and when the Bureau of Statistics is organized, it ought to embrace agricultural and manufacturing statistics as well as commercial. On the whole, therefore, we thought it better to postpone action on the subject until the next session of Congress. We have therefore reported in favor of striking it out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the thirteenth section of the bill be stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Committee on Finance proposed to insert at the end of the bill the following additional section:

SEC. 14. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and directed to suspend the collection of the direct tax imposed by an act of Congress passed August 5, 1861, entitled "An act to provide increased revenue from imports, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," until January 1, 1868.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "collection" in the third line, the words "in the States heretofore declared in insurrection."

Mr. CONNESS. I understand the effect of this amendment to be to exempt all the States lately in rebellion from the collection of the direct tax.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is merely to suspend it.

Mr. CONNESS. To suspend it. I used the word "exempt" in place of "suspend."

Mr. SHERMAN. It postpones until the 1st of January, 1868, the collection of this tax, and I will state the reason. All of these States that have had even a temporary organization are prepared to assume the payment of the direct tax. They have submitted proposals to Congress and to the Treasury Department to pay the tax, some on a credit of three years, some more. On account of the peculiar condition of those States it is impossible to receive their bonds at present. Whether the governments that have been organized there were in a condition to issue bonds and many other political questions were connected with it; but they were all prepared to assume their portion of the tax in the same manner as the loyal States did, with or without interest as might be required by law. Under these circumstances, when they were ready to assume the payment of this tax to require it to be collected by direct tax commissioners, to go to every tax-payer and collect it at an enormous expense seemed to be unjust. I believe the Committee on Finance were unanimously of the opinion that the best way to dispose of the question at present was to postpone the collection of this tax until a time when we could treat with the State governments and arrange with them for the amount of this tax. It is not proposed by this amendment to relieve them from any portion of the tax, either principal or interest. The only question was whether, while they were offering as States to settle with us, to give us their bonds, or even if necessary to raise the money, we should, refusing that offer on account of their peculiar condition, go on and collect from individuals in those States this tax. We were of the opinion that it would be neither wise, politic, nor just to do so. The only effect of this amendment is to postpone the collection of this tax until these States will be in such a condition that we can settle with them upon principles of equity and justice.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. This section is taken from the tariff bill that passed the House; and it will be remembered by Senators that in one of the bills reported by the joint committee of fifteen on reconstruction, to accompany the constitutional amendment, a provision was inserted providing for giving to these States some ten years, I believe, within which to pay this tax in installments. It is working a great deal of distress at present, and is operating upon Union men as well as upon rebels. I have a very vivid conception of the injury that it is doing in this way, from its having been attempted to be collected in a portion of my own State by the commissioners of Virginia. Their proceedings were declared illegal there, but from the numbers of letters addressed to myself and my colleague, I know it is producing great distress there, and probably is doing the same throughout the southern States. The amendment I have introduced is on a suggestion of the Treasury Department to confine it to those States, because there are three States, my own included, in which this direct tax has not been settled, and they are able to pay and willing to pay, and they are already within the provisions of another law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to inquire of the honorable Senator from West Virginia whether this act of 1861, the direct-tax act, is not a continuing act, making it the duty of the executive officers of the Government to impose this tax provided for by that law annually; and whether, therefore, it is not necessary, in order to prevent a reassessment on every northern State this year, to pass, as we have passed almost every year heretofore, a provision suspending its execution. For the information of the Senate, I will read the first part of the first section of that act:

That a direct tax, &c., be, and is hereby, annually laid upon the United States, and the same is hereby apportioned, &c.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator probably is not aware that that was only levied for one year and then was repealed, all the States, pretty much, demanding its repeal. It was only levied for one year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My recollection is—I recollect it perfectly well, as the Senator does—that it was only levied for one year. All taxpayers found that out, fortunately; but instead of being repealed, so far as my knowledge goes—and I shall be glad to have the Senator refer to the statute repealing it—I think the fact is, it has only been suspended from year to year.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was suspended once or twice, but finally indefinitely postponed. I could, by looking at the internal revenue acts, hunt it up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suspect my friend from Ohio is mistaken about that, and therefore, for security, I think it would be better to make the special exemption in favor of the particular States named by the Senator from West Virginia, so as to avoid the unpleasant condition we shall be in by leaving this act of 1861, which I think is in force at this day.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senator will allow me, I will read the statute on that subject:

"No direct tax whatever shall be assessed or collected under this or any other act of Congress heretofore passed, until Congress shall enact another law requiring such assessment and collection to be made; but this shall not be construed to repeal or postpone the assessment or collection of the first direct tax levied or which should be levied under the act," &c.

This act was passed on the 30th of June, 1864. That is the last one that was passed. The collection of the tax was first postponed, and then it was declared that no further tax should be collected until a law was passed authorizing it, except that the first tax should be collected in the States where it had not been collected. That is the state of the law at present.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The effect of that, then, would be, as the Senator from Illinois says, to provide for a general suspension until it shall be again put in operation. With that explanation, probably the result which the Senator from Ohio has suggested would be reached, and this amendment would not be necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. HENDRICKS in the chair.) The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. So far as the first year's assessments are concerned, the law still continues in force, and it is necessary to give them time within which to pay.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I alluded to the amendment that I had suggested.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope that amendment will not be adopted. I do not see any reason, and was not satisfied with those given by the Senator from Ohio, why we should now postpone the collection of this direct tax. I have had some conversation with some persons who have been officers under the law for the collection of this tax in the rebellious States. I know it may be suggested that they are interested; that is true. They would be interested as officers; but still they would be better informed on this subject than anybody else, and it is not to be presumed that the interest they would have in holding the office would so warp their judgments that they could not give correct information in regard to the effect of this tax.

I do not think that the people are less able to pay this tax in the rebellious States than in other portions of the country. I do not believe in making this exception in favor of men who have been disloyal to the Government. I understand that loyal men, to a great extent, have paid this tax in the rebellious States, and that those who are disloyal contest the law. Many of them say that the law is invalid; that Congress has no right to assess this tax upon them, and they are not going to pay it.

Now, sir, the truth about it is, there is a great deal of money in the South. I was informed a short time ago, by a very influential banker from New Orleans, who had resided there for a quarter of a century before the war, and was recently engaged in the banking business in that city, that the amount of deposits of money in the city of New Orleans was larger than ever before; and he said to me that there was more money in the South than he had ever known to be there. The cotton that was found in the South at the close of the war, at the extravagant prices which it brought, took to that country more money for that crop than had ever been received before for any previous crop. It is not true that there is no money in the South.

This tax is a tax assessed upon land. It reaches these aristocratic land-holders of the South, the wealthy persons. They are much better able to pay this tax than thousands of our constituents at home; and it will be much more difficult to collect this tax in 1868 than it is now. The tax is partly paid. It has been partially collected in some of these rebellious States. I do not know that it has been entirely collected in any of them; perhaps it has been in Tennessee. I do not know how that is; but it has been partially collected, I presume, in all of them. Now, it seems to me it will be difficult to discriminate. It is going to complicate the matter. Suppose these States, in 1868, ask to pay this tax as the northern States did. Suppose the State of Georgia, if you please, upon whom a tax was assessed, according to representation, of, say a million dollars. I have not the statute before me, and do not remember the precise amount—

Mr. EDMUNDS. Five hundred and eighty-four thousand dollars upon Georgia.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am informed that the precise sum is $584,000. Suppose $100,000 of that has been paid already. The persons who have paid that $100,000 would be assessed in common with the others to raise a fund to pay the balance. It would complicate the matter very much. Again, the machinery for collecting this tax is in operation now.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Only in some of the States, not in all.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I supposed it was in all. I suppose the whole tax would have been collected before this but that the Secretary of the Treasury, under that power which he exercises, a sort of dispensing power to execute laws or not as he thinks proper, has suspended the collection of this tax from time to time under the same authority that he selected persons to collect the revenue who could not take the oath of office. He has gone on and refused to execute, or neglected to execute, the act of Congress. I suggest that there is no sufficient reason for postponing the collection of this tax, and that it will be attended with additional expense to seek to collect it by and by. It is not a very heavy tax at any rate upon these States. I would not be disposed to adopt any legislation which should be harsh toward these States that are disposed to return to their allegiance; but this is not the adoption of new legislation. We paid this tax long ago. Sir, your constituents and mine paid this tax years ago. These States have already had a credit of five years, by reason of their opposition to the Government, and I do not think there is any principle of justice or liberality that should require Congress to postpone it longer.

Mr. JOHNSON. I regret that my friend from Illinois should have deemed it his duty to oppose this proposition. I do not think he is aware of the condition of the South. He cannot know how exceedingly impoverished they are. He cannot know that there is hardly any money there with which even to buy the necessities of life, much less to pay taxes. There may be in the city of New Orleans money in bank; but if so it belongs in a great measure to those who are doing business on account of the North—commission merchants. No doubt there is a large fund, because they have been dealing in cotton to a great extent.

But I rose simply for the purpose of saying, and I have thought my friend from Illinois was willing to adopt almost everything that the committee of fifteen recommended, that one of the measures recommended by that committee, and it received, as well as I recollect, the vote of every member, was to suspend the collection of this tax. The honorable member tells you that your constituents and his constituents have paid it. This is true; but your constituents and his are in a very different situation from the citizens of the States through which armies have marched, carrying desolation in their train. The march of General Sherman—and I find no fault with it, because he deemed it necessary, and perhaps it was necessary, to accomplish the end—the march of General Sherman extended for a width of some forty miles, and left that whole area almost in ruin. The inmates of many a homestead who were happy and prosperous are now not only without money but without homes. It seems to me, therefore, to be not only an act of humanity but an act of strict justice, if we do not wish to complete the desolation of the South, that we shall at least extend to them what they now only ask, some time within which they may be able to reinstate themselves in their ancient prosperity, and meet as of old the demands of the Government.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the fourth section of the bill, as follows:

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That all laws and parts of laws allowing fishing bounties to vessels hereafter licensed to engage in the fisheries be, and the same are hereby, repealed: Provided, That from and after the date of the passage of this act, vessels licensed to engage in the fisheries may take on board imported salt in bond to be used in curing fish, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, and upon proof that said salt has been used in curing fish the duties on the same shall be remitted.

I do not propose to present any argument to the Senate on this question. That I attempted to do on a former occasion, and should not think of craving the indulgence of the Senate at the present time to repeat it. But there are two or three considerations to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate.

In the first place, the subject is not a question of finance which properly falls within the jurisdiction of this committee. I do not think that it ought to have felt itself charged with such a subject. The protection of the revenue does not authorize the consideration of the question in the sense in which the committee has presented it to us, in my judgment. What is this interest with which this committee, if I may be allowed the expression, so unceremoniously deal? Why, sir, it is an interest that was established at the time the Government was established, and has uniformly been sustained and fostered since the Government had existence. It is an interest not only fostered by our Government, but it is an interest that every military, naval, and commercial Government on the globe has found it necessary to foster, cherish, and sustain. There is no Government in modern times that has pretended to maintain a commerce or a navy but has adopted this policy.

Now, sir, although this question has been repeatedly before the Senate, the enemies of this interest never have been able to carry the judgment of the Senate with them, I believe, in a single instance. My recollection is, that whenever it has been referred to an appropriate committee for consideration this interest has always been sustained. When it has been considered as a measure of commerce, as a measure touching the commercial marine of the country, and the Navy of the country, it has always been sustained; and the general judgment of Congress time and again has been in favor of it. Therefore I submit that an interest which has been so largely fostered, until it has come to be the standing policy of the country, ought not to be repealed upon a bill of this sort. It is not that kind of legislation which I think ought to be encouraged upon such a bill. It is for this reason, among others, that it has not received that consideration of the Senate which would justify the Senate in legislating on the subject on a bill of this character, that I make this motion.

Now, Mr. President, I do not intend to disguise the fact, and I do not intend that the fact shall be disguised either, that this movement persisted in for years, always in the South and latterly in another direction, is the result of prejudice against this interest, on the ground that this is a bounty to a local interest. Nothing is further from the fact; nothing ever was further from the fact. It resulted from the broadest idea of national concern. It has been fostered and cherished and sustained uniformly upon the idea that it affected the whole country and was the interest of the whole country. Now, sir, we find a class of representatives from one section of the country going en masse, in a body, against this measure as one of local concern, who—I allude to it in no invidious spirit, of course; I think the argument is legitimate—when other interests of a local character touching their interests are concerned, you will find going in a body for them. If this interest is obnoxious to the charge of being a local interest, what do you say of the appropriations which you annually make to encourage agriculture? Is that more general? Suppose I should concede it to be so, I will ask those gentlemen whose constitutional scruples are affected by this measure, under what provision of the Constitution those appropriations are made? Sir, the appropriation to the Bureau of Agriculture is a tribute to the agricultural interest of the country purely. I do not object to it. When the agricultural interest of the country prospers the whole country prospers; but I say to that class of statesmen or representatives in the Senate, who find no difficulty in appropriating large sums to stimulate an interest which is a powerful and dominant interest in their section of the country, that it does not come with very good grace from them to talk about stimulating a local interest when you are called upon to appropriate at most a few hundred thousand dollars toward an interest which has had the sanction of the policy of the Government from its earliest period down to the present time.

I am not going to repeat what I said on this subject on another occasion. I am not going to make an argument upon it. I rose simply to arrest the attention of the Senate to this subject. It was by mere accident that I found this section in the bill. Upon this question, forbearing to trespass further upon the attention of the Senate, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER. I confess that I am a little surprised to have cod-fish raised here again in this body. I supposed we had settled that question forever a year ago, when the Senator assented to a compromise, and I congratulated him and the country that we had got through with cod-fish. Now the Committee on Finance propose to give cod-fishermen all they ever asked—a remission of the duty on foreign salt. All that they pretended they ever asked was a remission of that duty, and that is contained in this section. I am surprised that exception is taken to this fourth section. It was distinctly understood, as I thought, by all parties a year ago that that question was ended, and ended forever. I hope that this vote will show that it is ended, and ended forever, and that we shall never have another vote in this body for cod-fish. I have voted for nine years to retain the bounty on the cod-fisheries; but now, for the first time, I am going to vote to get rid of it, and get rid of it forever.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not understand what the honorable Senator from Michigan means by a compromise. Who are the parties to a compromise such as he speaks of?

Mr. CHANDLER. It was generally understood that if we would continue the bounty another year, at the end of the year this change should be made.

Mr. MORRILL. I was no party to such an understanding.

Mr. CHANDLER. Perhaps the Senator did not assent, but I understood that he did.

Mr. MORRILL. I am no party to such an understanding; and if I were I should be ashamed of it. If I understand the proposition of the honorable Senator, his statement is that somebody representing an interest which I say is national—the only ground I put it on is that it is in favor of your mercantile marine and your Navy—somebody here felt authorized to say that if they could make a catchpenny out of it, and get the duty off upon salt, that would be just the thing. What would become of the national interest which I am talking about? Sir, I never gave my consent to any such arrangement as that. I have not been advocating this bounty on the ground that it was particularly beneficial to the fishermen nor that it was particularly prejudicial. I have endeavored to put it upon higher grounds. I have endeavored to put it upon the ground of a national necessity, and that if you repeal the fishing bounties you strike a blow at your mercantile marine and at your Navy. That is the ground upon which I put it; and I should be ashamed if I had ever in any hour consented to the idea that if you would give us a little drawback on salt we would agree to abandon the bounty on fish, which was given to encourage and to sustain a national interest. I rose simply to repudiate the idea of any understanding or arrangement of that sort.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can only state that this section came from the House of Representatives in the bill, and I believe it passed the House of Representatives without a division. I must add my testimony to what has been said by the honorable Senator from Michigan. A year ago we had quite a struggle over this subject; and I understood then, by the Senator's colleague, that the interest represented, the local interest, would be very well satisfied if they could have a remission of the duty on salt—a provision which I thought was perfectly just and right, because as the fishermen in Canada and the French fishermen would be able to get their salt without duty, as a matter of course the American fishermen ought to be on the same footing, and ought to have the benefit of the remission of the duty. I think this is a wise settlement of the question, and I hope we shall have an end forever to this controversy.

Mr. FESSENDEN. "By the Senator's colleague," I presume the Senator does not mean me. I was not here at that time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I allude to your predecessor, Mr. Farwell. Perhaps I would be doing him injustice in saying that he assented to any arrangement, but I know that he pressed very strongly as an amendment or qualification to the bill to repeal the fishing bounty, a provision allowing a remission of the duty on salt, and he thought that that would be satisfactory to his constituents. I hope, therefore, that this question will be ended. This provision was put into the bill by the House of Representatives, and, I think, passed there without a division.

Mr. BUCKALEW. On a question of this kind it seems to me the Senate should have furnished to it some statement of the natural result of the proposed change.

Mr. SHERMAN. I supposed that this was a matter so familiar to all Senators that it was not necessary to say anything about it. We have discussed this question of the fishing bounties for several sessions.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Before the Senator proceeds to make an explanation, I will call attention to two points: first, the amount received now, the average amount actually paid under the law authorizing these bounties.

Mr. SHERMAN. About four hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. BUCKALEW. And next, the probable amount which will be withdrawn or diverted from the Treasury by allowing salt to be used without charge by the persons engaged in the fisheries.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 9, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Clark, Fessenden, Foster, Morrill, Nye, Ramsey, Sprague, and Williams—9.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Chandler, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Edmunds, Grimes, Guthrie, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane, McDougall, Morgan, Nesmith, Norton, Poland, Pomeroy, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wiley, and Wilson—29.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cragin, Creswell, Dixon, Harris, Howard, Howe, Riddle, Saulsbury, Wright, and Yates—10.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. It was ordered that the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I desire to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been ordered to a third reading and is not now open to amendment.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I presume there will be no objection to my offering the amendment. I was on the floor before the question was put. I move to reconsider the vote ordering the amendments to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the Senator can accomplish his object by introducing his proposition as a simple resolution of the Senate. I hope, therefore, he will do it in that way, if there is any objection to it now.

Mr. SPRAGUE. The proposition that I have sent to the Chair is simply to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint a commission consisting of two officers of the Department and one other person to investigate into the bonded warehouse system, and to report to Congress the facts in regard to it. It is a subject in which I have a deep interest. I know that the country is suffering from the present administration of that system. This seems to me to be a proper provision to be attached to this bill, as it is essentially one connected with the revenue. I ask the Senate at any rate to listen to the reading of the proposition before they give it the go-by.

Mr. CONNESS. What is the proposition of the Senator?

Mr. SPRAGUE. The proposition is for the appointment of a commission by the Secretary of the Treasury to investigate the bonded warehouse system.

Mr. CONNESS. Is it offered as an amendment?

Mr. SPRAGUE. I offer it as an additional section.

Mr. CONNESS. I should like to hear it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not now before the Senate.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is certainly proper to read the amendment so as to show the object of reconsidering the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. ANTHONY. Undoubtedly; but is it not competent for the Senator who makes that motion to read the amendment which he proposes to offer, so that the Senate may judge whether to reconsider or not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the proposition will be read.

Mr. GRIMES. He has no right to read it.

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly he has.

Mr. GRIMES. If that were so you could debate the whole question on the single question of reconsideration.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is a courtesy that I have never known to be refused before in the Senate.

Mr. GRIMES. If it is put as a question of courtesy, that is one thing; if it is put as a question of parliamentary law, that is another

Mr. ANTHONY. I put it on general parliamentary law.

Mr. GRIMES. The fact is nobody can tell how many commissions we have already had appointed under different laws passed at this session.

Mr. ANTHONY. I submit that a Senator in moving a reconsideration has a right to state the reason why he moves it; that he moves it with a view of offering the following amendment.

Mr. GRIMES. He has stated it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the reading of the proposed amendment? The Chair hears none, and it will be read.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I desire to say that the Senator from Rhode Island was clearly upon the floor and stated his proposed amendment before the Chair announced the vote. The Chair did not observe the Senator; but he certainly made his motion in time. I shall therefore vote for the reconsideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair regrets that he did not observe the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. I feel bound to say that I was sitting here beside the Senator from Rhode Island, and he rose to make his motion before the action of the Senate upon the committee's amendments, but took his seat, until they should be disposed of, and the question was put before he had an opportunity of offering the amendment. I hope, therefore, the Senate will allow him to offer the amendment.

Mr. CONNESS. It will only take a single moment to have the proposed amendment read. I do not know that I shall agree with the Senator from Rhode Island, but I should like to hear his amendment read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall appoint a commission, consisting of the statistician of the Treasury Department, the collector of the port of New York, and one other person, who shall investigate the advantages or disadvantages growing out of the laws creating and regulating bonded warehouses, and to report at the next session of Congress the amount of revenue, if any, that would probably be saved to the Treasury if the duties upon imported goods were paid at the date of entry, and if thereby a more honest administration of the revenue laws and a greater security from fraud thereupon would be secured, and also as to any conditions that may exist in the laws aforesaid or the administration thereof, in contrast with the internal revenue laws that are, where competition exists, more favorable to the foreign than the home manufacture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the vote ordering the amendments to be engrossed and the bill read a third time be reconsidered?

Mr. CONNESS. If that vote were reconsidered I would not like to vote for the amendment in the shape the Senator has presented it, and therefore I do not feel inclined to reconsider it for him. I think the amendment is rather partially drawn up. I could tell by the reading of it that it was written by some person who was utterly opposed to the whole warehousing system. It casts an onus upon the system in almost every line.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The merits of the proposition are not before the Senate.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not propose discussing the merits of the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the vote ordering the amendments to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time be reconsidered?

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I now offer my amendment as an additional section to the bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to amend it by striking out all the designations of individuals and providing simply that the commission shall consist of three persons to be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I accept that modification.

Mr. CONNESS. It is not satisfactory to me even with that modification. I should like to hear it read as it now stands.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I am not in favor of it.

I shall vote against it; but if it passes, it ought to be changed in that way.

The Secretary read the amendment, as modified, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall appoint a commission, consisting of three persons, who shall investigate the advantages or disadvantages growing out of the laws creating and regulating bonded warehouses for imported goods, and to report at the next session of Congress the amount of revenue, if any, that would probably be saved to the Treasury if the duties upon imported goods were paid at the date of entry, and if thereby a more honest administration of the revenue laws and a greater security from fraud thereupon would be secured, and also as to any conditions that may exist in the laws aforesaid, or the administration thereof, in contrast with the internal revenue laws, that are, where competition exists, more favorable to the foreign than to the home manufacture.

Mr. McDUGALL. The Chinese-wall policy of shutting out all ingress to our country from foreign lands with foreign fabrics has been pretty pertinaciously maintained by the Senator from Rhode Island, who has become the champion of that policy. What this proposition strikes at is running that policy in its furthest extreme. The warehousing system of the United States is well understood, and it has been discussed frequently. No commission is required to inform the Senate or House of Representatives as to how it operates. It may make a job for some individuals, but only raises a useless question, and involves an intimation on the record that the system operates as a fraud upon the revenue of the United States. The warehousing system is demanded, and we have it in very excellent shape now. It has been carefully canvassed and discussed, and nothing but a Chinese-wall policy would lead to the introduction of any such proposition as this.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out all after the word "Congress," in the following words:

The amount of revenue, if any, that would probably be saved to the Treasury if the duties upon imported goods were paid at the date of entry, and if thereby a more honest administration of the revenue laws and a greater security from fraud thereupon would be secured, and also as to any conditions that may exist in the laws aforesaid, or the administration thereof, in contrast with the internal revenue laws, that are, where competition exists, more favorable to the foreign than to the home manufacture.

So that the amendment, if amended, will read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall appoint a commission, consisting of three persons, who shall investigate the advantages or disadvantages growing out of the laws creating and regulating bonded warehouses for imported goods, and to report at the next session of Congress.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I trust that that amendment to the amendment will not be agreed to. The object I have is to designate some few of the points upon which it is desirable that this commission shall investigate. The first of the persons who were suggested by myself in drawing this amendment was one who had been in the Department for many years, and who is conversant with all the laws regulating this Department of the Government as well as every other. It was, therefore, with the purpose of facilitating the objects of the commission that I named him, without in the slightest degree embarrassing or in any way prejudicing their views.

The object of appointing the collector of the port of New York was because he is, probably, in a situation to judge better than any other man in the country as to the workings of the system, without desiring to prejudice the opinions which might be made for or against the system. The collector of the port of New York comes directly in contact with the interests of the importer; and if I had a design to prejudice this commission in favor of the home manufacturer by the appointment of persons who would favor that idea, it would certainly not be accomplished by the appointment of the man who is constantly in contact with this class of the trade of our country. I had no such view. The object which I desire is simply to obtain this information. I believe the Senate and the country are not informed as to the workings of this system. I do not care how much discussion has been had upon it in this Chamber or elsewhere, there is nothing in human affairs that will not be illustrated higher and better as time rolls round and as experience brings forth new light on the subject. The only object that I have is to obtain light on this subject.

I repudiate the suggestion of the Senator from California that I desire to build up a Chinese wall between this country and foreign countries. My object is to introduce into this country all that is good in foreign countries and make it our own, that we may illustrate the greatness and glory of our own country. Sir, when I have a feeling to promote any one interest that may be to the disadvantage of this country, or in any way taint its escutcheon, or any desire to promote one interest at the expense of another, may my tongue cease to speak and my hand to obey any emotion of my will. I have no such desire. It seems to me that Senators are remarkably sensitive on this subject. When simple truth is desired to be illustrated, when simple information upon a topic which has been discussed heretofore is sought, I am surprised that there should be hesitation upon such a subject, when upon all other subjects the Senate have exhibited the greatest desire for information.

Mr. POMEROY. I will suggest to the Senator to amend the portion proposed to be stricken out by substituting the word "equitable" for "honest." The language is, a "more honest administration." That is a little reflection on the system; but if the word was "equitable," I think we could vote for the amendment.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I will accept that suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is not in order, there being an amendment to an amendment now pending.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope we shall have a vote.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let us have a vote. Everybody understands the question.

Mr. POMEROY. It is always customary to amend the clause proposed to be stricken out before the question is taken on striking it out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from California is an amendment to an amendment, and the Chair thinks it is not further amendable.

Mr. SHERMAN. I trust the Senator from California will withdraw his amendment and let us take a vote.

Mr. CONNESS. I am willing to do that, but the portion of the amendment which I have moved to strike out is very offensive in its language to me. It alleges frauds in the system. I deny that that system generates frauds, and I do not wish to vote for that. Nevertheless, I am willing to withdraw the amendment and allow the vote to be taken.

Mr. POMEROY. As the Senator from Rhode Island says that he accepts my amendment, it becomes a modification of his amendment.

Mr. GUTHRIE. This proposition involves the question whether we are to have the warehouse system or cash payments, whether our merchants shall pay their duties according to the warehouse system, or whether we are to have cash payments upon the importation. In olden times we gave them credit upon the duties and took the bonds of merchants. When we abolished that system we introduced the warehouse system. There is a conflict between the manufacturers and the merchants as to whether there shall be cash duties or whether the warehouse system shall exist. There will be frauds in the importations upon the Treasury, adopt what system you may; for whenever it is the interest of individuals to evade your laws, your duties being high and the reward great, the evasion will be attempted to be made, and will be more or less successful. I am not willing to ingraft upon this bill the beginning of this war upon the warehouse system. The gentleman was exceedingly modest in indicating who was to be on this commission, so that he would have a partial report. It would be in the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint those who would certainly report in favor of the warehouse system; it would be in his power to appoint those who would certainly report in favor of the cash system and doing away with the warehouse system; but neither report would settle this question if it is the determination of the great manufacturers of this country to war against the warehouse system and the importing merchants.

I will not go further into this question. This is a war against the warehouse system in favor of the cash system. If Senators are ready to give up the warehouse system, they will adopt the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from California, to strike out the latter part of the proposition of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island as amended.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 6, noes 12; no quorum voting.

Mr. SUMNER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 11, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, Morrill, Norton, Pomeroy, Sherman, Sprague, and Wade—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Conness, Creswell, Davis, Fessenden, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, McDougall, Morgan, Nesmith, Nye, Poland, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wiley, Williams, and Wilson—23.

ABSENT—Messrs. Buckalew, Clark, Cowan, Cragin, Dixon, Doolittle, Edmunds, Foster, Ramsey, Riddle, Saulsbury, Stewart, Wright, and Yates—14.

So the amendment was rejected.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the bill (S. No. 179) in relation to the district courts of the United States in the States of California and Louisiana, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 643) to alter the places of holding the circuit courts of the United States for the Rhode Island district;

A bill (H. R. No. 755) amendatory of an act to amend an act entitled "An act relating to habeas corpus, and regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases," approved May 11, 1866; and

A bill (H. R. No. 800) for the relief of Marion M. Buxton.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 692) increasing the pensions of widows and orphans, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 365) granting the right of way to ditch and canal owners over the public lands, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 687) to incorporate the Soldiers' and Sailors' Union, of Washington, District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 692) increasing the pensions of widows and orphans, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 729) to change the port of entry in Puget sound;

A bill (H. R. No. 779) to incorporate the National Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Home;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 178) in reference to the Dismal Swamp Canal Company; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 190) in regard to rations of Union soldiers held as prisoners of war.

ADMISSION OF NEBRASKA.

Mr. WADE. I move to postpone all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 447, for the admission of Nebraska as a State.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask, what is the pending business? I think the civil appropriation bill is still pending as the unfinished business, and I hope my colleague will postpone Nebraska until we get through with this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the bill mentioned by the Senator from Ohio has not yet been reported.

Mr. WADE. I believe it has not been. I will now report it from the Committee on Territories, and ask for its present consideration. I thought it had been reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the bill just reported by him.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object until the miscellaneous appropriation bill is disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, it cannot be considered now.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will join my colleague in his efforts for the admission of Nebraska tomorrow, when we get through with this miscellaneous appropriation bill.

Mr. WADE. I give notice that I shall move to-morrow to take it up the first thing.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Joseph Segar, praying for compensation for property seized by the Union Army in Virginia, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that the petitioner have leave to withdraw his petition and papers; which was agreed to.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 787) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. BUCKALEW from the select committee on ventilation.

Mr. SUMNER. That is a proposition to appropriate $117,000 for the ventilation of this room. If we are to continue in this room I should like to have it ventilated; but I think that so large an outlay of money is out of place for that object. I think, as I said yesterday, we ought to go further and do something better. I am not willing, for one, to pay $117,000 merely to stay in this gilded cage where we are kept. I will pay more in order to change the room entirely. I think that the committee has made a mistake. They will pardon me; I do not intend really any criticism; but I think they have made a mistake in trying to refashion this room. That is the object of this large appropriation, $117,000, merely for the ventilation of this impossible Chamber; for when it is ventilated it is not a proper Chamber for the Senate of the United States. I hope, therefore, that instead of appropriating $117,000 to ventilate this room, we shall appropriate perhaps a larger sum to make a more thorough change. In this matter I am in earnest. I feel that we shall make a mistake if we invest more money in this apartment. The object of the proposition of the Senator is a further investment of money in these walls by which we are encaged. I will invest to take the walls down, but I am unwilling to pay more to keep these walls in their place.

I am not able to present a plan as a substitute for that of the Senator from Pennsylvania. I have never presented this subject to any architect or person who was able to make a report as an architect upon it; but I should like to have the whole question submitted to a proper person or a proper committee with a view to a practical result. As I tried to say last night, there were two objects at which I would aim. One would be to bring the Chamber right out in connection with the open air, and the other would be to diminish the size of the Chamber. I would reduce it by one half. For instance, a Chamber that would be left by running a line from the main door to the chair of the President, I think would be ample for all the business of the Senate. We should be more comfortable in it. Public business would be transacted more advantageously. For instance, what we are now engaged upon to-day would be attended to much better than in this large room.

Since the discussion last night, I have been reminded of a saying by one of the best of the early English writers, old Fuller, which you will find in his proverbs.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Can you give the chapter and verse. [Laughter.]

Mr. SUMNER. I cannot give the chapter and verse. I have got it here. I have written it down. It is as follows, and I think you will see the application of it, and my friend from Maine will not be insensible of it. A house, he says in this proverb, had better be too little for a day than too big for a year; therefore, houses ought to be proportioned to ordinary occasions and not extraordinary. Now, this Chamber of ours is not proportioned to ordinary occasions; it is not proportioned to our every-day business; and what I desire is that it should be brought into those proportions, that it should be brought into harmony with what we are called upon to do every day; and that it should not be kept in proportion to those extraordinary occasions when these galleries are filled.

Now, sir, I have no motion to make, but I do not see how I can vote for this large appropriation which is to involve an increased expenditure on this room, which, it seems to me, we ought to do all we can to get rid of, instead of putting more money into it.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I am not prepared to agree to any proposition to change this Chamber, so far as it relates to its size or its location, but I am decidedly in favor of improving its ventilation. But I desire to inquire of the Senator from Pennsylvania who presents this proposition, how much of this $117,000 he proposes to have expended during the recess of Congress. I suppose a very small proportion; and I should think it much more advisable to make an appropriation equal to the amount to be expended during the time that will elapse between this and our reassembly in December, and then consider what we shall do after Congress shall adjourn next year. It seems to me we ought to make a moderate appropriation now to carry on the changes that he proposes to make during the coming recess.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, the estimates for the different items of outlay were very carefully ascertained and reported at the last session in the report of the joint select committee, and they appear on pages 24 and 25 of that report. As a matter of course, the amount proposed for appropriation will not be expended before the meeting of the next session of Congress; but it is necessary to know what the Senate intend to do. This plan of improvement is an entirety; one part is dependent upon another; and a complete result can only be secured by the adoption of the entire scheme, at least in its main parts. The committee have reported to the Senate a plan in conformity to their investigations, and what is desired is, not that we shall get the opportunity of spending money between this and the next session of Congress, but that we shall have the plan adopted and permit all the preliminary arrangements to be made, and the work to be carried forward to such a point that we can secure its completion during the vacation after the adjournment at the next session. As I said before, the Senate would still have it within their power at the next session to arrest those changes which I stated in connection with the roof and ceiling; but I do not believe that the Senate ever would arrest them if the work were once ordered.

I stated, also, that at the opening of the next session there would be a complete model of the Senate wing ready, showing the changes proposed above the Hall, by which members would be enabled to judge of the question, if indeed there should then be any question, with regard to proceeding in completing the improvements designed. To be sure, you can make appropriations for this, that, and the other items covered by the estimates in the report to which I have alluded; but that would be a very vain and frivolous mode of proceeding, leading to no results, bringing us to no conclusion, and securing no valuable and real improvement. The subject is to be passed upon as a general proposition, and not in detail.

I do not know that the Senator desired the particular estimates to be stated. I have them here for each item covered by this appropriation, amounting in the aggregate to a sum a little exceeding $118,000. We voted last year, without serious question, $160,000 for extending the Congressional Library. A debate took place on the subject. We thought that object was sufficient to warrant the appropriation of so much money. To be sure, it has not been all expended; it is not all expended even at this time. Now, sir, if it was worth while for us to expend $160,000 in extending the Congressional Library, I ask whether it is not worth while to expend the amount proposed in the pending amendment for the purpose of preserving the health and securing the comfort of one of the branches of the great legislative department of this Government in future time.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to ask the Senator whether he has any assurance that the work will be done between now and December next.

Mr. BUCKALEW. That is the very point to which the Senator from New York spoke a moment since in putting his question.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I did not observe it.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Only a certain portion of the work can be accomplished before the next meeting of Congress. I stated yesterday that the committee proposed for the next session simply to hydrate the air that is to be let into this Chamber?

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to inquire whether or not that is not a separate work from the work that is contemplated in the upper part of the Chamber?

Mr. BUCKALEW. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARRIS. Entirely distinct?

Mr. BUCKALEW. But that is not involved in this plan.

Mr. HARRIS. That is all that is proposed to be done this year.

Mr. BUCKALEW. It is no part of the plan of the committee. It is a mere temporary device for the next session. Unquestionably this roof cannot be elevated and side windows inserted all around the upper part of the Hall before the next session of Congress; it is impossible; but the committee have reported an entire plan, and they ask the Senate to adopt it as an entire plan securing results. You cannot take a part of it; you cannot take one fragment of it; you cannot adopt the improvement in one detail and get results. It would be just as absurd to have voted last winter for some part of the additional wing to the Library of Congress, because it was not proposed to expend the money before Congress would be in session again. The Senator will see that there is no force in his observations, unless you could separate and divide one part of this plan of improvement from another.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask whether the plan proposed in the two wings will not involve some radical changes in the center building? Must there not be a proportional elevation given to the center?

Mr. BUCKALEW. The subject of the effect of the elevation upon the appearance of the building from the exterior is one upon which I do not propose to enter. It is insisted upon, and I believe correctly, that the present elevation of the Capitol is defective; that it departs from the order of architecture upon which the Capitol was originally designed; that being the Roman Corinthian order, as it is technically known, and which involves the breaking of sky lines by irregular elevations; whereas the sky line of our building is now horizontal; it is level from one end to the other. The eye does not rest upon the Senate or House wing in viewing the Capitol; nothing is dwelt upon but the dome. It departs altogether in that particular respect from the principle of the original design.

Mr. SHERMAN. What I desire to know is, whether this will render it necessary to change the elevation of the center of the building.

Mr. BUCKALEW. It was contemplated by the architect who had charge of the Capitol extension that there was to be an extensive addition built in connection with the dome, and when he resigned his office, about a year since, he left behind him in his regular annual report a plan for a change in the center part of the building. It would involve some future addition to the structure at the dome; but we are not concerned with that at present. The amount of elevation upon the Senate wing would not be considerable, and it would not interfere at all with the exterior adornment of the building, the porticos, the colonnades, and the balustrading above on the outer walls of the Senate wing. Our addition would be seen behind the exterior lines at a considerable distance. I do not now go into the question of an exterior attic or barrier, which may be added for architectural reasons and general effect, but is not contemplated by this appropriation.

Mr. WILLEY. I think I understood the honorable Senator to state that while it was not in contemplation to do anything more than hydrate the air in the Chamber between this session and the next session of Congress, yet, in order to be able to complete the arrangements in the roof of the Chamber between the end of the next session and the succeeding session, it would be necessary now, at this time, to engage in the commencement of materials and arrangements so as to enable the architect and builder to complete the changes in the roof between the next and succeeding session, and that therefore it was necessary to make the entire appropriation now, in order to secure the materials, &c., with a view to the ultimate completion. I believe I understood the Senator correctly in that respect.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANTHONY. After the very elaborate and interesting speech which the Senator from Pennsylvania made yesterday upon this subject I do not feel as though I can add anything to it. I served on the committee under him, and I commenced the investigation with a very strong feeling in favor of pushing the Senate Chamber out against the exterior wall, which I have been told was the original plan of the building; but I was entirely satisfied, from examining the subject and hearing the discussion by scientific men, architects and chemists, that this Hall never would be properly ventilated by mere lateral ventilation; that the temperature would be different in different parts of the room, and in order to make it comfortable in some parts, it would be necessary to make it very uncomfortable in others, and even if the Senate Chamber was placed against the wall of the building with the windows opening directly into the air it would be necessary to have an artificial ventilation, and the only ventilation that has been successful in a large room is ventilation from above and forced down by machinery. I believe we shall never have a comfortable, or a healthful, or a tolerable Chamber here, until we adopt some system like the one now proposed. This is altogether the best that I have been able to come at. I do not believe we can do any better than to adopt this system. I do not believe we can have on any other plan that has been brought to the knowledge of the committee anything like such conditions as we desire.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I will say a few words more, and then I will leave the subject. This plan which we will have will be substantially that which obtains in the House of Commons at London. After expending over $2,000,000 in experiments in improving the ventilation of the Houses of Parliament, in 1854, the whole subject was turned over to Goldsworthy Gurney, who proceeded to adopt a plan involving two principles: first, the use of windows around the whole upper elevation of the hall; and, secondly, the downward movement of the air through the hall, for the purpose of ventilation. In 1852 there was a parliamentary committee which made an elaborate report. In 1854 another committee sat during one half, perhaps the entire session of Parliament. Their report constitutes a large volume in the Congressional Library. Lord Palmerston was a member of the committee, and must have expended two or three weeks of his valuable time in service upon it, prominent as he was in the Government of that country and in the councils of Parliament. They ventilated the House of Commons by the use of windows, precisely as we propose, in the upper elevation of their hall, when the temperature of the external atmosphere admits of it, and they warm their air at all times, when they do not use the external air directly, and bring it into the hall above and remove it at the floor. Although they had expended the enormous amount which I have mentioned in experiments before, on all sorts of plans, such as I have heard discussed for two or three sessions about the Capitol, they adopted this plan of 1854, and from that day down to this the parliamentary papers are a blank on the subject of ventilation; so perfect and so entirely successful was this system of windows in the upper elevation of the hall, and downward movement of the air.

Besides that, the legislative chambers at Paris and the public buildings in that city are ventilated on precisely these principles. A recent elaborate work of General Morin was sent for to Paris during the last year, and has been thoroughly examined. It is alluded to in our report. We have, in short, the highest scientific opinion in favor of the leading principles of our plan of improvement, and we have also the cases of the House of Commons and other public structures in Great Britain and the public buildings in Paris. It is idle for us to seek for information in this country, to call men who have a smattering of information on topics of this kind before us and reduce their evidence to writing. If we had twenty volumes of such testimony we could not have the guarantees for success for this plan which we have from the facts which I have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. From the Committee on Indian Affairs I am instructed to offer the following amendment, to be inserted on page 26, after line six hundred and twelve of section one:

Appropriations required for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Seminole nation of Indians, under treaty of March 21, 1866, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867:

For this amount, to be paid under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to enable the Seminoles to occupy, restore, and improve their farms, as per third article treaty of March 21, 1866, $30,000.

For the purchase of agricultural implements, seeds, corn, and other stock, as per third article treaty of March 21, 1866, $20,000.

For the erection of a mill as per third article treaty of March 21, 1866, $15,000.

Interest on $50,000 from the date of the ratification of the treaty, at the rate of five per cent. per annum, to be paid annually, for the support of schools, as per third article treaty of March 21, 1866, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867.

Interest on $20,000 from the date of the ratification of the treaty, at the rate of five per cent. per annum, to be paid annually for the support of the Seminole government, as per third article treaty of March 21, 1866, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867.

For this amount to be expended for subsisting the Seminole Indians as per third article treaty of March 21, 1866, $40,362.

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the losses that may be awarded under the provisions of article four of treaty of March 21, 1866, as per third article of said treaty, $50,000.

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the expenses of a board of commissioners, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, to investigate the losses of the loyal Seminole Indians, as per fourth article treaty of March 21, 1866, $720.

For the erection of agency buildings, as per sixth article of treaty of March 21, 1866, $10,000.

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to cause a census of each tribe to be taken, as per first clause seventh article treaty of March 21, 1866, $2,500.

For transportation of such articles as may be purchased under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the Seminole Indians, under treaty of March 21, 1866, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, or so much thereof as may be necessary, $12,000.

These are the estimates to carry out the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh articles of the treaty with the Seminoles made since the Indian appropriation bill was passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I am also instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to offer the following amendment to carry into effect the treaty with the Creeks:

Appropriations required for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the Creek nation of Indians under treaty of June 14, 1866, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867:

For this amount to be paid per capita in money, unless otherwise directed by the President, upon the ratification of the treaty, to enable the Indians to occupy, restore, and improve their farms, to pay the damage sustained by the mission school, and to pay the delegates of the council as per third article treaty of June 14, 1866, $200,000.

Interest on $775,168, from the date of the ratification of treaty, at the rate of five per cent. per annum, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, as per third article treaty of June 14, 1866, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867.

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to cause the line dividing the Creek country as provided for in the terms of the sale of Creek land to the United States in article third, as per eighth article treaty of June 14, 1866, $4,000.

For the erection of agency buildings, as per ninth article treaty of June 14, 1866, $10,000.

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to cause a census of the Creeks to be taken as per first clause tenth article treaty of June 14, 1866, $2,500.

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the expenses incurred in negotiating treaty of June 14, 1866, as per fourteenth article of said treaty, $10,000.

For transportation of such articles as may be purchased for the Creek nation of Indians, under treaty of June 14, 1866, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, or so much thereof as may be necessary, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RIDDLE. I offer the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the compensation of each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress shall be $5,000 per year, and mileage as now provided by law; and this provision shall be construed to operate from the beginning of the Thirty-Ninth Congress.

I do not intend—I am not well enough if I desired to do so—to occupy the time of the Senate in discussing this proposition; but Senators have shown a disposition of late to be generous to others, and I think it now becomes them to be just to themselves. We have been detained here eight months during this session, and there is no Senator on this floor who can say that his salary for the year will pay his expenses during the session. We are increasing salaries everywhere. We are giving clerks more than we get ourselves. We are exhausting our energies, we are ruining our health, and we are really not getting enough to pay our house rent and marketing. I ask the calm consideration of the Senate upon this proposition. It is certainly not an extravagant one.

Every Senator will admit that we are paid less than any employes of the Government, and why this provision should not be passed I cannot imagine. I leave it to older Senators to say what they will do with the subject.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment as a substitute for it. It is to strike out all after the word "that," in the first line of the proposed amendment, and insert:

The compensation of each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress shall be $5,000 per annum, to be computed from the first day of the present session of Congress; and in addition thereto, mileage at the rate of twenty cents per mile, to be estimated by the nearest route usually traveled in going to and returning from each regular session; but nothing herein contained shall affect mileage accounts already accrued under existing laws: Provided, That hereafter mileage accounts of Senators shall be certified by the President of the Senate, and those of Representatives and Delegates by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. JOHNSON. The objection to the amendment to the amendment, if it is subject to objection, is to the clause which relates to mileage. Twenty cents would pay a Senator himself, but we have got into the practice—and a good one it is upon every account—of bringing our families here. It does not refer to me, because it costs me nothing; but to give twenty cents to a gentleman bringing his family with him, is not to pay his expenses at all. It was the opinion of Mr. Calhoun, and I think I have seen evidence of its justice more than once, that one of the bonds of the Union was the mileage. The distant States would be more likely, or just as likely, to be kept from leaving the Union because of this mileage provision as by any other cause of a similar character. Now, I suppose we will all admit that it is much better that Senators should have their families with them than that they should leave them at home and be here by themselves. Upon every account it is better; but they cannot do that, bring them here, or take them away, for anything like twenty cents a mile.

Mr. HENDERSON. I modify my amendment to the amendment by striking out the words "session of," at the suggestion of some Senators, and leave the compensation to be computed from "the first day of the present Congress" instead of the first session of the present Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment will be so modified.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, if this proposition be adopted, the compensation and pay of members of Congress, to be compensated from the beginning of the present Congress, will be $5,000 a year and twenty cents mileage. Senators are aware that the mileage now is forty cents. The proposition as originally presented by the Senator from Delaware is to pay $5,000 and forty cents mileage. I will not vote for that proposition. I will not vote any longer for the extravagant and extraordinary mileage that we are paying. We are paying too much mileage. We can strike off a part of that mileage, and yet give to members of Congress a fair compensation. We can save some sixty thousand dollars in mileage, putting the compensation at $5,000 per annum, and yet pay every cent that ought to be paid in the way of compensation to members of Congress.

The difference now between the pay of members of Congress is too great. For instance, we pay to one of the California members $16,964 80 per Congress; that is, $8,482 per year. We pay to another one of the members $17,124 80. We pay to one of the Oregon members $17,936, and to another of them $17,936, the same sum. We are paying to each one of those members $11,936 in the way of mileage alone, their compensation being only $6,000; the mileage being double as much as their regular pay. I hope those Senators will pardon me for referring to this subject, because it is a thing we must refer to in talking about the question of compensation. We are compelled to do it. In the same proportion is this thing unjust in regard to other members who live not so far as the Oregon and California members, but still who live at a great distance from the capital.

The original mileage was adopted before railroads were known in this country, and the idea upon which it was adopted was that it was to be a part of the compensation of members. No idea was entertained that it was to be a part of the compensation for traveling expenses, but it was to be compensation for services rendered. In other words, those members could not get home in order to transact any business, and therefore they ought to be paid a larger compensation. Now, sir, a member from Minnesota or Wisconsin can go home just as easily as a member from Pennsylvania. I say as easily; I speak comparatively. Perhaps my friend from Rhode Island [Mr. SPRAGUE] will lose a day in going home, and a Senator going to St. Paul will lose two and a half days. Now, what is the difference? The Senator from Rhode Island gets comparatively nothing in the shape of mileage. He gets his $3,000 a year, the amount that we pay to almost any clerk here about the Capitol, and he gets nothing more; while a gentleman who comes from Minnesota gets some three or four thousand dollars in the shape of mileage. Is that right? Is there that difference? Why, sir, he can go home in the course of two and a half or three days. He can attend to business just as well as the Senator from Rhode Island can.

Here is my friend from New York, [Mr. HARRIS,] living at Albany, New York; what compensation does he draw in the shape of mileage? Here is the Senator from Maine, [Mr. FESSENDEN,] what mileage does he get? He gets some three or four hundred dollars in the shape of mileage every year. Can he go home to transact any business any more than the Senator from Minnesota sitting farthest from me, [Mr. RAMSEY?] Has he been able to go home and transact any business during this session? The Senator from Minnesota gets some two or three thousand dollars in the shape of mileage, and my friend from Maine gets scarcely more than enough to pay his way here.

Mr. RAMSEY. I desire to correct the Senator from Missouri. There is no Senator from Minnesota who receives two or three thousand dollars mileage.

Mr. HENDERSON. You ought to get it.

Mr. RAMSEY. We do not get it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will read what the Senator receives; I mean for the two sessions. I am not referring to the Senator for the purpose of calling in question his mileage, but only for the purpose of the argument and illustration. The Senator from Maine to whom I referred receives for mileage $984, which is about correct, for the two sessions, for a Congress. My friend from Minnesota need not have become excited on the subject, for I see that he draws $3,808 in the shape of mileage every Congress; that is $1,904 each session. I stated the amount lower than it really is; but I only referred to it for the purpose of illustration. I say that the Senator from Maine can no more attend to business in the State of Maine and attend to his duties here than the Senator from Minnesota. It is perfectly unjust to have this distinction in compensation.

The Senator from Maryland asks me what his mileage is. I have been inquiring into the subject of mileage, not for the purpose of commenting upon the mileage of any particular Senator, but for the mere purpose of showing the inadequacy of the compensation of some Senators. The Senator from Maryland receives $77 20 per Congress; that is, $38 60 for each session of Congress; and he receives $3,000 per year for his services in this body. Is that any compensation?

I know that a great deal of objection will be made to any increase of the compensation of members. We are all perfectly aware that the present compensation is about the compensation that was adopted some fifty years ago. It is true it was eight dollars per day with the very same mileage that we now have, but it amounted to about the same thing when Congress was in session as long as it has been this year at least. We are paying to the Superintendent of the Coast Survey $6,000 per annum. We pay to our Assistant Treasurer at St. Louis $4,000 a year. We pay the Assistant Treasurer at New Orleans about the same amount. We increased the other day the compensation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to $6,000. Although Mr. Rollins is a very excellent officer, and discharges very important and responsible duties, I submit to Senators whether Mr. Rollins's services are worth to the Government any more than Senators regard theirs worth to the Government. I think not. We pay to the assessors of the internal revenue at all the important points in this country from four to five thousand dollars. We pay to the collectors of internal revenue $5,000; it amounts to that in almost every place. The collector of customs at Philadelphia receives $6,000; at New Orleans $6,000; and even the surveyor of customs at New York receives $4,900. A proposition has been introduced here for paying, I believe, $5,000 to the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and so in regard to the Assistant Secretaries in all the other Departments. The people ought to understand one thing: that in the increase of salaries a feeling of delicacy on the part of members of Congress has prohibited them heretofore from making any increase whatever in their own cases. They have been compelled to increase in other cases, but they have not increased in their own.

Now, Mr. President, let us see what effect this proposition will have. The Senator from Maryland objects that if this plan be adopted the Senators from the Pacific coast will not have a sufficient compensation. Why, sir, their compensation will be from thirteen to fifteen thousand dollars a Congress. If the amendment that I have offered shall be adopted, they will receive from six to seven thousand dollars for each session of Congress; and other members will have on an average about fifty-five hundred dollars a year. The only question is whether that amount of mileage, the reduction from forty to twenty cents per mile, and the increase of the compensation, will not make the average compensation of Senators and Representatives better than it now is. I think that something of this sort ought to be adopted. I am perfectly satisfied of it. I am unwilling to vote an increase to $5,000 per annum, leaving the mileage as it now stands. I think that that mileage is too much. We ought to adopt some rate of compensation which will pay each member, no matter how near he lives to the capital, a fair compensation. The larger body of the members live near to the capital. We ought to adopt a rate of compensation that will pay them, because it is perfectly notorious to the country, and the country understands perfectly well, that members who live within two or three hundred miles of the capital cannot attend to other business unless they happen to be, like my friend from Maryland, [Mr. JOHNSON,] able to attend to business in the Supreme Court, having already a large practice there. Many Senators are so situated that they cannot attend to business here. Some of them are not lawyers, and others of them have no practice in that court; and there is no other business, therefore, that a gentleman can attend to here. It is utterly impossible. Hence it is that some compensation ought to be adopted that will be fair, equitable, and just.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not care myself about this question at all. I only desire to say one word. The Senator from Missouri does not know anything about living; he is a bachelor. He never lived an hour in his life; and he is the very last man who should come here to talk to Senators about their expenses. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDERSON. I never said a word about expenses. I did not mention the subject of expenses that I know of.

Mr. POMEROY. What is proper compensation depends to a considerable extent on a person's expenses. I suppose it is generally understood that a Senator coming here should get compensation enough to meet his expenses. That is the reason why I find that many Senators about me cannot afford the luxury of a family; they tell me, in Washington, because their compensation will not justify it. That is the only way I can account for the leanness of my friend from Missouri. [Laughter.] For my own part I care nothing about the question of compensation one way or the other be it more or less; but I once thought I would keep an account of my expense in Washington, and I found that the actual expenses, without regard to luxuries such as wines, cigars, and tobacco—things for which I never spent a cent in my life—were for one year and one month, in my case, $11,640. A person who intends to have anything like his expenses paid ought not to calculate upon any reduction either of salary or mileage; but I do not suppose Senators care whether their expenses are paid or not. On that account I do not care whether the Senator's amendment prevails or not. I only say we should not undertake to declare that a person must govern his expenses here in Washington in these times by any reference to his compensation, because the compensation is not the first step toward the payment of the expenses of a man who has a family, living as he ought to do.

Mr. CONNESS. Upon this question of compensation and mileage, so far as it is proposed by the Senator from Missouri to make a change affecting my own and others situated like me from the Pacific coast, I have little to say. When it shall come to voting I shall not even cast a vote upon it. I will leave the office to the Senator from Missouri of individualizing the cases of Senators and proving that his own compensation should be increased, being too low, because that of others was too high. I will only say to that Senator, that for myself, and I am rather a moderate person in my expenses and mode of life, I have not yet paid my expenses since I came to the Senate, notwithstanding this immense mileage that the Pacific Congressmen are said to receive or do receive.

I will not undertake to inflict upon the Senate nor to meet the logic of the Senator by describing what my expenses are, and will not leave the Senate to be at a loss to determine which is the most expensive mode of living in Washington—whether to be without a wife or to have obtained one; to be newly married. [Laughter.] I presume that each of them has its incidents, and I leave to the Senators whom it concerns so much to conceal or keep to themselves those incidents. For my own part, it is not a sphere that I would penetrate at all.

I will simply terminate what I intended to say by adding that I do not care what disposition is made of this question. I did not come to Congress for salary. I am not going to make any contest to keep up salary or compensation, nor to raise it beyond what it is, either in the way of mileage or yearly allowance. It is a subject that I cannot speak upon in that connection, and cannot vote upon.

Mr. HOWARD. I presume the Senator from Missouri has made some estimate as to the effect which his present proposition will have upon the whole amount paid out of the Treasury for the compensation and mileage of members of Congress. I wish to inquire of him whether, if his scheme be adopted, it would increase or diminish the total amount which the Government pays for that kind of service. I have not had an opportunity of making an estimate myself, but I presume he has, as he seems to have prepared himself very carefully.

Mr. HENDERSON. I can answer the Senator. I have made a calculation. My proposition will increase the expenses of the Senate, that is the amount paid by the Senate, a little over $100,000. We now pay $423,539.20 according to the report which was sent in to us for the last Congress; that was the amount paid for the Senate during the two sessions of the Thirty-Eighth Congress. If my amendment be adopted—I have not made a calculation upon twenty cents, but I have upon ten cents mileage—it will increase it about $120,000; the total will be about $545,000, or in that neighborhood. At ten cents it would be about $510,000, which would make an increase of about $80,000. I can state to the Senator that I have made another estimate, and it is when you take in the members from the southern States, when we do receive them; if the mileage were ten cents a mile—I have not made a calculation at twenty cents, but it could be easily made—we shall have reduced the expenses of the Senate by my proposition. The effect of my amendment would be to make a small increase in the amount paid to the members of the House of Representatives, at present; but in a few years the large number of Representatives coming from the extreme western States will make the present compensation at forty cents a mile and $3,000 a year amount to much more than the proposition I now make, so that we shall absolutely have reduced the compensation by the adoption of this plan in the course of a few years.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I regret that the mileage question is disturbed, or attempted to be disturbed. I know that in some cases it seems that the mileage is very large; but the mileage question disturbs not merely that, but raises a question very difficult to settle. It seems to me that it bears a little on another question that ought not to be lost sight of. I dare say that the disturbance of the mileage question to a certain extent disturbs the location of the capital of the United States. The fact that when persons come from the Pacific coast, or come from the far distant Territories, to Congress their mileage is such as to compensate them for actually making the travel, makes them satisfied to come this great distance to attend the sessions of the Congress of the United States; and I think it not wise to disturb that question. I can conceive, too, that the real truth is that in the case of those who come from a far distant coast and bring their families here their mileage does not very largely go beyond their expenses. I can well conceive that a single gentleman, a bachelor or a widower, if he is a member of the Senate, can come here at ten cents a mile; but can a Senator bring a wife and four or five members of his family for any such sum as that? Not at all. I think the mileage paid to Senators does not, on the whole, more than pay their actual expenses of traveling backward and forward with their families.

The other question of what compensation they should receive for devoting their time here, I think should be considered by itself, and I do not think that $5,000 a year is any too much. During the war, and when the Government was straining every nerve to save its credit and to concentrate all its strength in the prosecution of the war, I was entirely unwilling that this question of compensation should be disturbed at all. I wanted it to remain, willing to bear the sacrifice which every man certainly must have borne living here upon his compensation, especially if he had a family to support. Certainly for myself my salary and mileage and all I have received has not by any means defrayed the actual expenses of myself and family, and I live as economically as certainly the majority of men.

But, Mr. President, since the war is over and the question is up I am not afraid to say what I honestly think. I think that a man who serves as a Senator of the United States, devoting his time so much to the public service, certainly ought to receive as a compensation for his services $5,000 a year.

Mr. LANE. I shall vote for the proposition of the Senator from Delaware to increase the compensation to $5,000 a year, believing that the members of the Senate are not sufficiently paid for their labors and the necessary expenses incident to their office. I shall vote against the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to interfere now with the question of mileage. This question of mileage was arranged some fifty or fifty-five years ago with a view to compensation for traveling expenses. It has always been more, perhaps, than the actual traveling expenses. The means of transportation now are more extensive and cheaper, but the expenses of tavern bills and all that would perhaps compensate for this diminished expense of transportation. I vote for it, believing that we are not paid sufficiently for our services. An ordinary superintendent of a railroad in my State gets from six to ten thousand dollars a year. I do not feel that our services are sufficiently compensated. I should prefer myself to make this increased compensation commence with the beginning of the next Congress, to avoid the appearance of selfishness, although I think no one acquainted with me will suppose that my money instincts are sufficiently strong to induce me to vote for it for this Congress and not for the next. I vote for it as a permanent system, believing that we are not sufficiently paid. I know that there is no draft resorted to to bring members into the Senate; I know that they can resign; I know that you could get men to serve here for perhaps less than we are now serving for; but suppose you should look out to get $3,000 Senators from our State, how would the public interests suffer. Could you get two such Senators for any such compensation except that we feel we are serving the public and making sacrifices all the time; but how long can you rely upon this state of things? I shall vote to pay the present mileage and $5,000 a year, and believe that I have not been too highly paid, and I do it with the more freedom because I have perhaps now as little interest in the question as any other member of the Senate. I think if gentlemen are willing to come here and serve at all, you should be willing to pay them at least $5,000 a year, and the people will so regard it. They do not require that their public servants should come here and serve for nothing. I am, then, for increasing the annual compensation to $5,000 a year and reducing the pay of no man on account of mileage. I would give to members from Minnesota, and from the Pacific coast, and from everywhere else, their present mileage, and I would give $5,000 a year compensation.

The present system of mileage has been in operation for a great many years. It has been supposed to be just and equal; and, perhaps, taking into view all the considerations connected with the subject, it is equal as we shall get it. I shall vote then for the amendment of the Senator from Delaware fixing the compensation at $5,000 a year and the present mileage. I believe that neither you, sir, [Mr. HENDRICKS in the chair] nor myself have one single constituent, who knows our services and sacrifices, who will believe we are paid a cent too much for our services; and if they desire a different state of representation, let them get a cheaper article in services and sacrifices than their present members.

I shall vote the increase. I should do it more cheerfully to apply prospectively for those who are to come after me; but believing that I have discharged my duty and that you have discharged your duty during the present Congress, I shall vote for it as it is, to pay us in the past, assured that no man who knows me will misconstrue my motive. I will vote for it to apply to the present Congress; I will vote for it to apply to the next Congress. It is a matter of justice.

There are two systems. Either pay your members sufficiently or do not pay them at all, as they do in the British Parliament, and there their system of legislation costs them ten times what ours does, in contracts and in the provision for junior members of distinguished families. I shall vote with great cheerfulness for the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, and I do it with the greater cheerfulness because I think it will be the first time in the last four years that we have voted together. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEWART. With regard to this question of mileage, I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the alleged inequality will to a great extent be rectified by the building of a Pacific railroad in a few years. The usual course of travel now from the Pacific is by way of the Isthmus, which is about seven thousand miles, or nearly that. The utmost mileage that can be allowed in the course of six or eight years will be for about three thousand miles, so that the practical inequality in regard to mileage will be removed by the construction of that road and its becoming the usual line of travel.

I do not propose to argue a question that I am particularly interested in or my colleagues from the Pacific coast. I simply want to state that I believe as a matter of policy one of two theories should be adopted: either there should be such pay as an economical man with a family might live on, or there should be none at all, so that it should be understood that nobody but the rich could come here. A reduction of the mileage to the Pacific to any less sum than we now receive with the present expenses, will exclude those who have no means upon which they can draw, or have not considerably large means on which to draw in order to live. The incidental expenses of going to the Pacific are quite considerable; I do not care to enumerate them; I propose to let gentlemen try it and see what it is. I simply say that, in my opinion, those who have families must necessarily be excluded from Congress or entirely excluded from their families, and if they have families to support there they cannot come here on the salary now paid, and the poor are necessarily excluded. If you intend to exclude the poor, the best way is to abolish this whole sum, or otherwise give such compensation as will enable a man to live upon it at the lowest basis of calculation.

I think it is not worth while to adopt the amendment of the Senator from Missouri. It was formerly the case that members could live on their pay, but now money is only worth half what it was at the time the compensation was fixed; everything costs more than double what it did then. We are not receiving half the compensation in reality that was formerly paid.

Mr. DAVIS. I was very much pleased with the remarks of my honorable friend from Indiana, and I indorse the whole of them with one slight exception. He says, and I have no doubt truly, that he would prefer to vote for this amendment if it was entirely prospective. I prefer it in the terms in which it has been presented. It will embrace me if the amendment as proposed by the honorable Senator from Delaware passes. A proposition to modify it, to begin it with the next Congress, might exclude me forever, [laughter,] and, therefore, I am for taking it in the form in which it has been offered by the honorable Senator from Delaware.

I was very much struck with a remark made by the honorable Senator from Wisconsin. He says that if the mileage be modified as is proposed by the proposition of the Senator from Missouri, it may lead to an agitation of the question of the removal of the capital. I think it would, and I think that the agitation of that question from session to session would lose much more to the country than the additional mileage will amount to. I am in favor of the proposition as made by my friend from Delaware, and I do not care what may be its operation upon the minds of my constituency. I am willing to risk that and to vote for the proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HENDRICKS in the chair.) The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. I move the following amendment to come in at the close of the seventy-second line of the first section on page 4:

For reconstructing and repairing the levees on the Mississippi river, in the States of Louisiana, Mississippi, and Arkansas, $1,500,000, to wit: $305,000 in the State of Louisiana, $655,000 in the State of Mississippi, and $550,000 in the State of Arkansas, as nearly as may be with a proper regard to the efficiency of the repair; said money to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, who shall, at the next session of Congress, make an accurate and detailed report to each House thereof of the amount of money expended under this appropriation, the amount of work done, how and in what manner, where and by whom, the particular levees repaired or reconstructed, the rates paid for work and material, the condition of the levees, the areas protected by such repairs or reconstruction, and what sums, if any, remain unexpended.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope that amendment is not to be adopted. I do not wish to take up time or discuss this matter further than to call attention to it. It appropriates $1,500,000, I believe, for the purpose of constructing levees in Arkansas, Mississippi, and Louisiana. I have several objections to this. In the first place I should like to know where the constitutional authority is to do it. By what authority do we appropriate money to build fences around men's farms in the southern States? That is all there is to it. It is building a levee to keep the water out of the plantations belonging to these aristocratic rebels during the war.

Mr. CONNESS. To keep the water within the Mississippi.

Mr. TRUMBULL. To keep the water within the Mississippi if you please to state it that way! You might just as well appropriate $1,500,000 to set hedges around the farms of the State of Illinois, not to keep the cattle out from the farms, but to keep the cattle in the road.

Mr. CONNESS. It is to preserve navigation.

Mr. TRUMBULL. To preserve navigation! Why, sir, I believe there is some such suggestion as that in the report made by the Senator from New Hampshire, that by building levees up in Arkansas improvements are to be made to the mouths of the Mississippi river five or six hundred miles below. It seems to me there is no constitutional authority whatever for such an appropriation; and if there were constitutional authority for it, I think there is no propriety in making the appropriation. This is not for the poor men of the South; it is not for the destitute people; but this is an appropriation that is being made of a million and a half of money to the wealthy men of the South; it is to the large land-holders of the South; it is not of one dollar's advantage to the great mass of the people of the southern country. It is an appropriation to the rich men who are able to buy out the very persons who will appropriate the money. And are your constituents and mine, sir, small farmers in Illinois and Indiana and in the West, to be taxed for the purpose of building fences around the cotton plantations and sugar plantations of the wealthy down upon the Arkansas and Mississippi rivers who have been waging war against us? The benefit of this appropriation is for them.

But, as I said, I do not wish to take up time. I wish to state the two propositions on which I rely. In the first place, in my judgment, the constitutional authority for this appropriation is extremely questionable, and in the second place it is an appropriation the benefit of which is to be for the wealthy and not for the suffering. If it is an improvement necessary to be made, let the owners of these plantations who hold them by the thousands of acres sell half their lands and make them, or let the parties who have mortgages upon these plantations, the rich and the wealthy who are to have the benefit of this, sell off a portion of the land and appropriate the proceeds to the improvement of the rest.

As a measure to conciliate the South I have no sort of faith in it. The conciliation is to that class of men who brought on this war; it is to the aristocrats of the South, to the slaveholders of the South; they were the persons who owned these large plantations that are to be protected by these levees. I trust the amendment will not pass without the serious consideration of the Senate. I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I agree with the last remark of the Senator from Illinois. I hope that this measure will not pass without the serious consideration of the Senate; but I do also hope that it will pass with the serious consideration of the Senate, because it is a matter to which I suppose the Senate will give its consideration, and will act upon its serious consideration.

For the last four years the levees on the Mississippi river have been, one way and another, chiefly by neglect and by flood and by the operation of the war, broken down to a very great extent. Early in December last, considering the extent to which these levees had been broken down, the Secretary of War ordered General Humphreys to make a survey of the river, to the intent that he might do something toward building up the levees. General Humphreys went to make that survey, but when he got through the army had been removed to a great extent, through which the Secretary of War had intended to make some repairs; but he made a report to Congress, which has been brought here this session, stating that it would cost to build up those levees and put them in ordinary repair about four million dollars. Any one, I think, will see, when I state that sum, that it must be beyond the reach of those people within any ordinary period to reconstruct and repair the levees. They may do it in time; they may do a part this year, and a part next year, and a part the year after, and by and by bring them to a state of repair which shall enable them to cultivate their land. But in the mean time that people is suffering; the plantations are lying waste, and the national Government is absolutely losing more in the waste and destruction of property and in the want of general prosperity than it would cost to make the appropriation.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I ask the Senator if that argument applies to the raising of corn in my State. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he does not think that if $1,500,000 were laid out in making fences in the prairie country we should raise enough more corn to benefit the country in the same way that he proposes here.

Mr. CLARK. Perhaps it might be so; and I would say to the Senator from Illinois that if his people were in the condition of the southern people, if they had been impoverished by a calamity or by their own wrong, as these people have been impoverished, so that they could not rise from the calamity that was upon them, I would, if I could find authority for it, make an appropriation that should enable his people to recover their prosperity.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The people who own these plantations are better off to-day than the mass of the people in my State.

Mr. CLARK. I do not know how that may be, but such is not my information. I know that people who were rich before the war and before the flood swept through their country are now impoverished; they are this present summer unable to cultivate their land because it is continually overflowed. When the memorials on this subject were referred to the select committee from whom this amendment comes, and they came to the consideration of what had best be done, I asked General Humphreys and I asked also General Canby to come to me and give me some information in regard to it. They both came. They both came, and they both assured me that in their judgment it was entirely beyond the power of the people living in that country to recover themselves for years; that unless something was done by the General Government they must suffer. I saw at once that the national Government would not be willing to do what would be required to put these levees at once in repair and reconstruct them; that is to say, I did not believe the national Government would be willing to expend four or five million dollars at once; but it did seem to me—and I think the same was the view of the committee—that we might appropriate something which should make a beginning; that we might hold out the hand of encouragement to that people down there, and say to them, "We will not see you swept away by flood and by the operations of war, and not be willing to show to you that the Government will cherish the whole country as a part of its own." I thought, and the committee thought, we might expend about a million and a half of money. I asked General Humphreys if with a million and a half of money we could construct permanent levees, so that they would be of use to the country.

It was said by gentlemen from that region that $1,500,000 would hardly do; you must make these repairs to that extent that they will not be swept away by the flood when it comes on in the recurring season; you might keep the water out, and to do it you must do it at once. When I called General Humphreys to me he assured me that he could, with $1,500,000, do a vast deal of good. I asked him to state to me in what way he would do it, and he sent to me afterward a report, which I will read in part to the Senate:

WASHINGTON, June 26, 1866.

DEAR SIR: At your request I submit the following memorandum concerning the repair of the levees of the States of Mississippi and Louisiana. The Arkansas levees, just above the Louisiana boundary line, form part of the protection of the Tensas bottom, and must be repaired if that bottom is to be protected.

Having $1,500,000 to expend I should recommend for the State of Mississippi the repair:

1. In Tunica county, of the six breaks named in my report to the Secretary of War, 460,000 cubic yards, at 35 cents, $161,000.

It will be seen, Mr. President, that this report of General Humphreys is based upon actual estimate for the different levees from place to place. It is not any general estimate to get a large sum out of the Government.

1. In Tunica county, of the six breaks named in my report to the Secretary of War, 460,000 cubic yards, at 35 cents.....	$161,000
2. In Coahoma county, the Yazoo Pass breaks, 130,000 cubic yards, at 60 cents.....	78,000
The seven other breaks in this county, named in my report, 140,000 cubic yards, at 40 cents.....	56,000
And the break in the Lewis Swamp levee, 400,000 cubic yards, at 40 cents.....	160,000
3. In Bolivar county the Pontchartrain break, by the Swan Lake route, 125,000 cubic yards, at 40 cents.....	50,000
The Bolivar Bend breaks (greatly enlarged during the present high water and since my report to the Secretary of War was made) 100,000 cubic yards at 40 cents.....	40,000
The Eastern break, 70,000 cubic yards, at 40 cents.....	28,000
4. In Washington county the Miller's Bend break, (as this break was only partially closed before the present high water, it has returned to its original dimensions,) 100,000 cubic yards, at 40 cents.....	40,000
5. In Issaquena county the Christmas break, 100,000 cubic yards, at 40 cents.....	40,000
Total for the State of Mississippi.....	$653,000

The effective repair of these breaks will protect temporarily some three hundred thousand acres cultivated cotton lands, producing a bale to the acre.

Senators will see that if we appropriate this money the crop in one year, with the tax we have laid upon it, would repay it all. Then he goes on to estimate the breaks in other places:

For the Tensas bottom—

I will not detain the Senate to run through these various levees, because they will perhaps not be more intelligible than the mere name that would be given with the estimate. It was the opinion of General Humphreys that something should be done in order to enable this country to recover itself, and that with a million and a half of money we might be able to do much good in that regard.

I also received a letter from General Canby, who most of the Senators know as a very prudent and a very cautious man. It is dated June 30, 1866:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 30, 1866.

SIR: I have the honor, in reply to your verbal inquiries of the 27th instant, to state:

1. That an efficient system of levees on the lower Mississippi is essential to prevent a considerable part of the State of Mississippi and a very large part of the State of Louisiana from becoming an absolute waste.

He says this expenditure on the reconstruction and repair of these levees is absolutely necessary to prevent this country from becoming an absolute waste.

In both of these States the lands subject to overflow are in the most productive sugar and cotton districts.

2. That the work can be most efficiently and economically done by the General Government, and should be placed, until completed, beyond the control of the State or other local authorities or individual interference. The cost of restoration, or rather of reconstruction, can only be estimated after a careful survey of the line on both banks of the river and on a part of the course of some of its tributaries and affluents. It will certainly exceed $3,000,000 and will probably reach $5,000,000.

I ask the attention of Senators to this statement that I am now about to read of General Canby, because he has been down in that country, he has given the subject his attention, and is a man of good judgment:

3. Neither of the States of Mississippi or Louisiana are at present, or will be for several years, in a financial condition that will enable them to undertake and carry out this work without the aid of the General Government.

4. If the work of reconstruction cannot be undertaken by the Government, the repair of the most important parts—having reference to the amount of work to be done and the extent and productiveness of the country to be protected—will be of immense value to the States interested by warding off the danger of inundation until they are in a condition to undertake the work for themselves.

5. An estimate of the sum required, if the work is limited to such repairs as are of immediate and pressing necessity, must be in great measure conjectural. In the spring of 1865 it was estimated that the repairs of the Mississippi levees within the limits of the State of Louisiana could have been made for the sum of $200,000. This estimate was based upon the reports of the parish provost marshals, of the engineers employed by the United States and by the State, and included in its elements the employment of troops, the impressment of labor from the plantations to be benefited, and the use of the material that had been accumulated in the Army depots. At a later period a new estimate was made embracing the levees in the State of Mississippi, excluding the use of the impressed labor or Army material, but including, to a reduced extent, the employment of troops. The sum required as then estimated was $500,000. This estimate was based in part upon the same data as the first, but mainly upon the estimates of Major General Humphreys. In the estimates to be made now, contract service or hired labor must be wholly relied on, and an allowance must be made for the damage done the levees by breaks or washing during the recent floods. These two elements will, in my opinion, increase the amount of the above estimate at least fifty per cent., making $1,200,000 as the sum required for such repairs to the levees as are immediately necessary to prevent inundations.

Very respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

ED. R. S. CANBY,
Major General Volunteers.

Hon. DANIEL CLARK,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

After the first letter of General Humphreys I received another from him, in which he says he had learned that the levees in some places had been very much washed and the cuts very much deepened since he made his former report, and that he hardly thought $1,500,000, or what the committee have reported, would be sufficient; but the committee did not see fit to increase their recommendation of the amount to be appropriated by the General Government, and they still adhere to $1,500,000.

Now, Mr. President, if we suppose that General Humphreys is correct, and that the building of these levees at the Yazoo pass would protect three hundred thousand acres of land which would yield a bale of cotton to the acre, allowing a bale to weigh about four hundred pounds, the tax that would be laid upon that cotton in one year would be double the amount you propose to appropriate. About the same amount of land would be protected by the building and reconstruction of the levees in the State of Louisiana, or about three hundred thousand acres, and that would give you as much more. And it is stated further, that if there could be a thorough construction of levees up and down the banks of the Mississippi, about seven million more acres of land would be brought under cultivation in time which would give you a bale to the acre, adding to your present crop of cotton about seven million bales, or an amount larger than we have ever had at any time.

If, then, you look at this matter in an economical point of view, if you look to see what is to be paid out from the Treasury and then look to see what is to come in return into the Treasury, it is for the benefit and advantage of the Government to make this outlay.

But there is another point beyond that which was alluded to in the report of the committee, which has been alluded to by the Senator from Illinois, and to which he does not give much consideration; and that is, that at a time when that country is impoverished, at a time when it is cast down, at a time when we are excluding their representatives and not admitting them to this floor, I desire to hold out the helping hand of the Government to that people that they shall realize that they are still living under a Government which cares for them. I do not know how we can do anything better. I want that people to feel that they are a part of the Union, that they are to be still a part of the Union, that they are to have the benefits of the Government, and I am willing to be a little in advance. Before we collect the taxes, I am willing to take the money of the Treasury and pay for the repair of the levees on the Mississippi in this way, in a way of encouragement to that people.

I do not propose to enlarge on this matter, Mr. President, because it was before the Senate some time ago, and the report made by the committee has been before the Senate, and I propose to leave it to the votes of the Senators.

I have not much difficulty in finding a ground upon which we can go in making this appropriation; and that is the improvement of the river, which is perfectly a constitutional matter. If Senators will examine the engineers, they will all say to you that in order to carry out the rubbish and matter that is floated down the river it is necessary to confine the river within its banks, and if you suffer the levees to be broken down and suffer the water to go into the swamps in Arkansas or up in the higher parts of the river and then come back to the current bringing more rubbish and more dirt into the river, you form a bar at the mouth of the river which effectually obstructs its navigation. I inquired particularly in regard to this matter of General Humphreys, and he told me that he had examined it with great care, and there was no doubt of that result; so that if you will protect your river and have it open to commerce and navigation for time to come you must necessarily build these levees in order to protect the river, if you lay entirely out of the account the plantations and the land on either side. I do not propose to trouble the Senate further, but am willing to rely on the yeas and nays upon the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have been endeavoring to ascertain the wishes of Senators in regard to a recess, and I find that it is the general desire to have a recess. With the understanding that we shall sit this bill out to-night I move that the Senate now take a recess until seven o'clock.

Several SENATORS. Say half past seven.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; I think till seven o'clock is long enough.

Mr. CRESWELL. I move to amend the motion by naming half past seven o'clock.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we had better acquiesce in seven o'clock; I believe that is the sentiment of a majority.

The amendment was agreed to; and the Senate took a recess until half past seven o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at seven and a half o'clock p. m.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 643) to alter the place of holding the circuit courts of the United States for the Rhode Island district, and the bill (H. R. No. 675) amendatory of an act to amend an act entitled "An act relating to habeas corpus and regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases," approved May 11, 1866, were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. No. 800) for the relief of Marion M. Buxton, the bill (H. R. No. 797) granting a pension to Daniel Lucas, the bill (H. R. No. 798) for the relief of Quincy A. May, and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 194) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to pay Charles M. Pott a pension of fifteen dollars a month, were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

IMPORTED MERCHANDISE AT NEW YORK.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 39) to amend the acts relating to officers employed in the examination of imported merchandise in the district of New York.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to; and by unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Messrs. CHANDLER, MORGAN, and RIDDLE were appointed.

RAILROAD FROM FORT RILEY TO FORT SMITH.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 224) granting lands to the State of Arkansas to aid in the construction of a southern branch of the Union Pacific railway and telegraph from Fort Riley, Kansas, to Fort Smith, Arkansas.

Mr. POMEROY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

Mr. TRUMBULL. What are they?

The Secretary read the first amendment, which was in section one, line twelve, to strike out "ten" and insert "five alternate."

Mr. GRIMES. What is the effect of that?

Mr. POMEROY. The effect of that is just nothing at all. The original bill granted ten alternate sections per mile, and the amendment grants five on each side, which is just the same thing.

The Secretary read the other amendments, namely:

In section one, line thirteen, after the word "road" insert "and not exceeding in all ten sections per mile."

In section two strike out from "sold," in line five, to and including the word, "aforesaid," at the end of line seven.

In section three, line four, strike out "be in readiness to."

In section three, line five, after "Government" insert "of the United States, free from all cost or charges therefor to the Government."

In section three, strike out after "thereof," in line six, down to and including "roads," in line ten.

In section three, line ten, strike out "and reserved as aforesaid."

In section three, line sixteen, after "land" insert "herein granted."

In section ten, line three, after "acquire" insert "title to land for railroad purposes."

In section ten, line five, strike out the words "railroad purposes."

In section eleven, line four, strike out the words "and subsidized."

The amendments were concurred in.

CALIFORNIA AND LOUISIANA DISTRICT COURTS.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 179) in relation to the district courts of the United States in the States of California and Louisiana. The House amendment was to add the following additional section:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the salary of the United States district judge for the district of Louisiana shall hereafter be $4,500 per annum.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate non-concur in that amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. Why?

Mr. HARRIS. I think we had better settle that question of judicial salaries all at once and not by installments.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask my friend from New York if there is a bill to settle that.

Mr. HARRIS. There is a bill now pending in the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the effect of this vote upon the other provisions of this bill?

Mr. HARRIS. This is the only amendment.

Mr. CLARK. It does not disturb anything else.

Mr. HARRIS. If we non-concur the House may recede.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

RESCUE OF THE SAN FRANCISCO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. No. 81) manifesting the sense of Congress toward the officers and seamen of the vessels, and others, engaged in the rescue of the officers and soldiers of the Army, the passengers, and the officers and crew of the steamship San Francisco from perishing with that vessel.

The amendment of the House was to strike out the second section of the joint resolution, and in lieu of it to insert these sections:

SEC. 2. And be it further resolved, That the sum of $7,500 each is hereby appropriated, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, to the above-named captains respectively as a reward of their humanity and heroism in the rescue of the survivors of said wreck, and in case either of the said captains may have died, then the amount hereby appropriated shall be paid to the widow of such deceased captain respectively; if no widow survive, then to the respective child or children of said deceased captain; and in the event of there being no child or children of said deceased captain surviving, then the amount hereby appropriated shall be paid first to the father, or if the father be not living, then to the mother of said deceased captain, respectively.

SEC. 3. And be it further resolved, That there shall be paid to each mate of the three above-named vessels the sum of $500, and to each man and boy the sum of $100, and in case of the death of the respective mate or mates and men or boys, the said respective sums shall be paid in the same way and under the same conditions as the payment is to be made in case of the death of the respective captains.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment. The original bill appropriated $50,000 to be distributed by the President. The appropriation is reduced by the House, and the mode of its distribution is expressly provided for.

The amendment was concurred in.

CLAIMS OF MASSACHUSETTS.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. No. 121) providing for the examination of the accounts of the State of Massachusetts for moneys expended during the war for coast defense. The amendment was to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert the following:

That the Secretary of War be authorized and required to settle with the proper authorities of the State of Massachusetts for expenses incurred by that State for coast defenses during the war, and that he report the amount found to be justly due said State on such account to Congress in December next.

Mr. GRIMES. I move that the Senate non-concur in that amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following Senate bills and joint resolutions without amendment:

A bill (S. No. 358) granting a pension to Mrs. Nancy A. Stocks;

A bill (S. No. 866) granting a pension to Abraham Lansing;

A bill (S. No. 367) to extend the time of letters-patent issued to Thaddeus Hyatt;

A bill (S. No. 376) granting a pension to Drusey A. Layman;

A bill (S. No. 390) granting a pension to John Pyle;

A bill (S. No. 398) for the relief of W. B. Kelley;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 82) to provide for codifying the laws relating to customs;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 84) authorizing the payment of certain claims against the late Territory of Nevada;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 111) for the relief of Sergeant Milton McKinnon;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 125) granting the right of way through military reserves to the Union Pacific Railroad Company and its branches;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 126) to authorize the use of certain plates of the United States exploring expedition by the Navy Department;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 132) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and settle the accounts of Caleb T. Fay and William Y. Patch, late assessor and collector of internal revenue at San Francisco; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 139) for the benefit of the Illinois Soldiers' College and Military Academy.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the bill (S. No. 354) for the relief of William Crosswell, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bill and joint resolution:

A bill (H. R. No. 728) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue certificates of registry or enrollment and license to certain vessels; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 176) amendatory of a joint resolution entitled "A resolution respecting bounties to colored soldiers, and the pensions, bounties, and allowances to their heirs," approved June 15, 1866.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 719) to punish certain crimes in relation to the public securities and currency, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 761) authorizing the reimbursement to the Territory of Nebraska of certain expenses incurred in repelling Indian hostilities; and

A bill (H. R. No. 791) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, and for other purposes.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 791) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

COURTS IN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not see in his seat the Senator from Ohio, who has charge of the appropriation bill, and I move to take up House bill No. 438, which is a small matter and can be disposed of in a moment.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 438) in relation to the courts in Washington Territory was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This bill was at first reported upon adversely by the Committee on the Judiciary; but since that report was made the attention of the committee has been called to it again, and I am instructed by the committee to move that the first section be stricken out, and to recommend that the bill as thus amended be passed. I move to strike out the first section.

The words proposed to be stricken out were read, as follows:

That the supreme court of the Territory of Washington shall be, and is hereby, authorized to fix the times for holding the supreme and district courts thereof at such places as may be designated by the laws of said Territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. There is only one other section in the bill, and I ask that it be read.

The Secretary read the section, as follows:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the judges of the district court shall appoint a clerk for each court in the district, who shall reside and keep his office at the place of holding said court, and exercise the powers now provided by law for the clerk of the supreme court of the Territory of Washington, and be subject to all provisions of law not inconsistent with this act applicable to the clerk of said supreme court.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I perceive that the bill as it now stands ought to be amended. I move to strike out the words "the judges of the district court shall appoint a clerk for each court in the district," and in lieu thereof to insert "each judge of the district court shall appoint a clerk for each court in his district."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time; the bill was read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. TRUMBULL, its title was amended to read: "A bill in relation to the appointments of clerks of courts in Washington Territory."

PAY OF ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 101) for the relief of certain officers of the Army, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the resolution (H. R. No. 101) for the relief of certain officers of the Army, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House of Representatives recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, and 5, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its third amendment.

ALEXANDER RAMSEY,

EDGAR COWAN,

W. SPRAGUE,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN A. BINGHAM,

GILMAN MARSTON,

NELSON TAYLOR,

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senate now to go on with the civil appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (H. R. No. 737) making appropriations for sundry expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, is regularly before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole; and the pending question is the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. CLARK.]

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will take up no further time than to read a little statement that has been sent to me since this question arose. The Senate will recollect that the question under consideration is an appropriation of $1,600,000 for the construction of levees on the Arkansas and Mississippi rivers to protect the low lands bordering upon those streams. Since the question has arisen this note has been sent to me, which I will read:

"The big crovasses were cut by the rebels themselves and would not bother had they not cut them. They cut them, as they asserted, to drown out the Yankees."

I suppose that is true.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the honorable member tell us whom that note is from?

Mr. TRUMBULL. No, sir; I do not propose to tell that. I do not suppose the fact would be any different by stating the name of the party.

Mr. JOHNSON. But whether the party knew the fact would depend very much on the character of the writer.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have understood from other sources that to be the fact. I have no doubt that our Army also was instrumental in destroying some of the levees.

Mr. JOHNSON. Ours cut a great many.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The rebels themselves destroyed the levees also to some extent. It was done, I suppose, by both armies, and I suppose that the parties to be benefited by this appropriation were as instrumental as any men in the nation in bringing on this war and in causing all this trouble, and that they are as well able to bear the losses they have suffered by the war as any other portion of the community.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the Senate have already shown a disposition to load down this bill a good deal, but I feel it my duty to call their attention to the importance of keeping it free at least from propositions likely to create objection in the House of Representatives. This appropriation, so far as I know, is not based upon any estimate or any recommendation by any officer of the Government. I have listened to the Senator from New Hampshire, and I have not heard that any officer has made a recommendation advising the appropriation of this sum of money, or that any estimates for any specific work have been made. Gentlemen interested in this enterprise have called on me, as they have no doubt on most Senators. I have no doubt that the object they contemplated is a very good one, the construction of levees along the Mississippi river, without which the best land on the Mississippi cannot be used for the growth of cotton. But it is a question whether we ought, at this period of the session, to engage in a work of this kind, when it is admitted by them, claimed by them indeed, that the work will cost some six or seven million dollars; that the expenditure of a million and a half would be only an imperfect work; that there is no general system or plan upon which the work can be done; that this will be but a partial relief, and the effect will be that we shall reclaim but a small portion of the land. We cannot cooperate now with the State authorities or with the local authorities. I understand that a local tax has heretofore been applied in the State of Mississippi to the construction of levees. No tax of that kind can now be assessed in the present condition of affairs there. There can be no cooperation between the local authorities and the authorities of the General Government, and therefore the work is not to be done unless we appropriate sufficient money for the purpose. I submit, therefore, whether it would not be better to let the subject stand upon its own merits, and let a bill properly prepared and guarded be proposed, appropriating a sufficient sum, and directing the mode and manner of expenditure.

If we continue to load down this bill, it will manifestly lead to its defeat. I feel that I neglected my duty in not calling for the yeas and nays on an important proposition which was adopted before the recess, and I shall take occasion to remedy that, so far as I can, by calling for the yeas and nays on that measure before the bill passes. It seems to me that we ought not now to jeopard our appropriation bills by introducing extraneous matter. This is an appropriation of $1,600,000, a very large sum for a local purpose, a local improvement. If it had been put through like the ordinary river and harbor bill, or other appropriations for works of improvement, as a separate measure, on its own merits, I probably should have said nothing about it, but would have trusted to the report of the committee; but when it is proposed to be put on this appropriation bill, it is transferred to the Committee on Finance, and we are expected to take this appropriation upon ourselves, and take care of it, and "put it through," in cant phrase. It seems to me that, under the circumstances, these appropriations, extraneous in their character, and particularly this, local in its character, ought to stand upon their own merits. I call for the yeas and nays upon the adoption of this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have already been ordered.

Mr. GUTHRIE. There was no reluctance to tax cotton and sugar. I gave notice then that I should vote for this measure, and I intend to stand by it. The system in all these States of keeping up the levees is totally deranged. Formerly they were kept up by a tax of a dollar a head on all the blacks on these plantations, and then there was a State tax of ten cents an acre, and then there was the aid that was given by the neighborhood in keeping up the levees. Now, there is no levee from Vicksburg to Natchez on the Mississippi side. At the last election before secession, when a Legislature was chosen, this very cotton region was conservative and elected representatives who were loyal to the Government and in favor of the Union. They were afterward carried out, by what kind of process we cannot tell; but at the time that they elected a Legislature and elected the convention which finally carried them out this very cotton region sent a majority in favor of sustaining the Union. It is now impossible to tax the resources of the particular region as they were formerly taxed for keeping up these levees. Those resources are gone. I feel no hesitation about our power to maintain these levees, and I think we have not made an appropriation this session so wise and so beneficial and so calculated to make a quick return to the Government as this appropriation of $1,500,000 for this purpose.

The Senator from Ohio says it will not do all that is needed. Well, sir, if we do a part this year, and they bestir themselves, as the owners of these farms will do, to eke it out, and if we make another appropriation next year, we shall only be, in the line of our duty, and we shall only the sooner have a cotton crop that will enable these people to pay their debts and to resume their trade and commerce with the provision States and with the manufacturing States, and until they can raise cotton and have a surplus we shall never have that trade restored. The gentlemen who are so much in favor of commerce ought to sustain this measure.

I shall not detain the Senate by arguing the question. These people have no servants now to work their farms; they have no steam-power to do it, they have no provisions, they have no means of hiring hands. All this must be done on credit. They cannot employ the freedmen beneficially unless they are enabled to cultivate their farms, and this appropriation, bringing that country into quick cultivation, is a great deal more beneficial to the freedmen than is feeding them through the bureau.

Mr. HENDRICKS. When this proposition was first presented by the special committee it was not very clear to my mind that we could make such an appropriation of the public money; but, sir, I believe that to some extent my judgment has been influenced by what I regard as a public necessity, and the further consideration that sixty-three years ago this country was acquired during the Administration of Thomas Jefferson, without any very clear authority to be found in the Constitution, and the most ardent supporters of that Administration were not able to see where the power lay to acquire the Louisiana country.

Now, sir, by a series of terrible misfortunes that country is almost lost, and it is very clear to us by the evidence, independent of that which the able committee has presented to the Senate, that the people of that locality are not able to recover that country themselves; and the question is, shall the Congress of the United States in 1866 make a small appropriation to recover a large and very important portion of the country which was purchased in 1803? If I do err on this question at all, it shall be in favor of what I regard as one of the most important measures before Congress, and I will say to the Senator from Illinois that this is not fencing the farms alone of the people of the South; it is helping to fence the farms of the men in Indiana and in Illinois. As soon as the waters of these great rivers are shut off from the lands, and the people upon the rich borders have restored them again to a condition of productiveness, we shall find and our constituents will find in that remarkably rich country their old and very profitable market, and every farmer in Indiana and Illinois that raises a bushel of corn is interested in having a market along the shores of the Mississippi river.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from Indiana will allow me to inquire where he finds the constitutional authority to improve the lands of individuals on the lower Mississippi for the purpose of making a market for the corn that his constituents and mine raise.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I was not discussing the question whether Congress can fence farms. That is not exactly the question. The question is whether Congress can aid to reclaim a country which the Government bought in 1803, without the express letter of the Constitution authorizing it. This is to reclaim a whole section of the country and to restrain the Mississippi river within its natural limits. That river is under the control of the Government for almost every purpose. It is a great channel of commerce; it is the nation's river; it does not belong to Louisiana; it does not belong to Mississippi; it is the river of all the States; and when it has broken beyond its bounds, why may we not restrain it by some little aid which the Government of the United States may give to the people along the border?

But I was saying, when the Senator interrupted me, that there is no portion of the country more interested in this particular measure than the region of country that he and I represent. Let us have again that country restored to a condition of productiveness that our people—the men of Indiana and of Illinois—may find there the market that they did before these dreadful crevasses destroyed that country.

As I said, if I do err upon the question of the Constitution, I err in following the example that was set to us in the purchase of that country, and I will err on the side of a very important measure, as I understand it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The only constitutional authority which the Senator from Indiana seems to find for this appropriation is in the fact that we acquired the Louisiana country without any express authority in the Constitution. Now, I suppose if the Government had had authority in the Constitution to purchase Louisiana, then, according to that argument, there would have been no constitutional authority to make this appropriation! But inasmuch as we bought the country without constitutional authority, therefore we have constitutional authority to appropriate money, now that it belongs to individuals, for the purpose of improving their farms; and the Senator calls that improving the Mississippi river. He says that we are all interested in the Mississippi river. True we are, but these levees are not constructed for the purpose of improving the Mississippi river; they are constructed for the purpose of protecting the alluvial lands upon the Mississippi bottom. That is the object.

I know it is said incidentally that will be the effect; and I believe the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CLARK] in his imagination conceived that it was possible that the building of these levees some five hundred or a thousand miles from the mouth of the Mississippi might confine the waters so as to assist in sweeping out the bar at the mouth—

Mr. CLARK. I cannot permit the Senator to state that it was my imagination. It is the report of the engineer, General Humphreys.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The report of the engineer supposing that levees upon the Arkansas river, for I believe this appropriation is partly to build levees upon the Arkansas—

Mr. CLARK. Not at all; not the least.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Well, in the State of Arkansas.

Mr. CLARK. Part of the State of Arkansas, on the Mississippi river.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The engineer seems to suppose that the building of levees up in the State of Arkansas would help to improve the navigation of the mouth of the Mississippi some thousand miles distant! It is possible.

Mr. CLARK. Yes, Mr. President, very possible, quite likely, exactly so, because the Mississippi requires a great volume of water to run in a current to carry forward the mud, &c., that comes down under the water, to prevent its being deposited at the mouth of the river and entirely obstructing navigation. If the river is once suffered to escape out into the swamps, the current is diminished in the channel of the river and it is not carried out into the Gulf.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I presume that we all know that a rapid current would have a tendency to carry off the deposits better than a slow one, but I do not suppose that a rapid current coming down the mountain sides four thousand miles from the Gulf of Mexico would have much to do with the flow of water at its mouth; nor do I suppose that the rapidity of the current a thousand miles up in Arkansas would have anything to do with the rapidity of the current at the mouth of the Mississippi river.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him one moment? I believe the Senator was able to find the authority in the Constitution somewhere for the appropriation of $7,000,000 to feed a portion of the people of that country and to build them school-houses and asylums in the States upon the ground that they were in a destitute condition. Now, I ask him if it is not quite as clearly within the Constitution to take the control of and restrain the great river of the West, and thereby restore a large farming country that these colored people and the refugees may find a place upon which to expend their labor profitably to them and profitably to the country.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senator from Indiana can satisfy himself that this is an appropriation of money for the purpose of fencing in the Mississippi river, he may find authority to vote this appropriation; but that is not the object of this appropriation; it was not thought of for the improvement of the Mississippi river. The object of it is to protect the lands from the waters of the river, and not to improve the navigation of the stream. It is not placed upon that ground; and although it is a favorite argument of the Senator to suppose, as he has on several occasions, that because money was appropriated to take care of a whole race of people who as a consequence of the war were thrown upon the Government, therefore you could find authority in the Constitution for any appropriation whatever. I must say to the Senator from Indiana that I think there is no analogy between the cases. I take it that in the prosecution of the war and in the putting down of the rebellion the Constitution gave express authority for the armies to take possession of this country and take possession of its inhabitants, to put them in prison, to treat them as prisoners of war, and to feed them. Because the Government had authority to put down the rebellion by force of arms, to capture the enemies of the country and the inhabitants of the rebellious regions, if necessary to put down the rebellion, and imprison and feed them, it by no means follows that when the war is over the Government of the United States, not for the purpose of putting down a rebellion or suppressing an insurrection, but for the purpose of enhancing the value of private farms, has a right to appropriate money. That is all there is to this; it is an appropriation to help private individuals to make money from their plantations, and the Senator from New Hampshire says that the nation will be benefited by this, because if you will build these fences around the plantations of these former rebels you will enable them to plant a great deal more cotton; you tax the cotton and you will derive a larger revenue to the Government!

Why, sir, I look upon all such arguments as very far fetched. They would apply just as well in any other portion of the country as in Louisiana, Arkansas, and Mississippi. You might just as well appropriate money to build houses and fence farms in any other portion of the country and say if that was done the inhabitants of that locality would be enabled to raise larger crops, and as we tax the wealth of the country, the incomes of farmers, their incomes would be larger, and the Government would thereby derive a larger revenue. I do not think this Government will ever get rich by appropriating money to enable farmers to cultivate larger crops and then collecting a tax from the farmers. I look upon all such arguments as far fetched. But, sir, I do not wish to take time upon this matter; the yeas and nays are called for, and I am willing the Senate should decide it.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I am a good deal astonished at the argument of the Senator from Illinois. He found no difficulty in voting for the ship-canal around the falls of Niagara, because it would enable vessels to reach the north end of Illinois and would benefit that State. There is as little in the Constitution to justify that work as there is to justify the redeeming the alluvial lands of the Mississippi where we have derived such immense amounts of cotton and sugar in the support of the commerce and trade of the United States. Indeed, it seems to me that all the venom and all the malignity that have been engendered in this war have found their resting-place within the bosom of that gentleman, and he cannot speak without abusing these people, now citizens of the United States, and once in rebellion. He can see nothing good there in any legislation except to tax that people without representation.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, if I understand this case, the United States found certain embankments on the shores of the Mississippi river and they cut holes in those embankments and let the waters run through; and the question is, has the United States the power to fill up the crevasses which they made?

Mr. SUMNER. The rebels made them.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Our Government cut more holes than this $1,500,000 will stop up.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President, I understand, and if the Senator from Wisconsin had read the history of the country, he must know, that the rebels cut holes in those levees.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I do not doubt that.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then why charge that the United States did it?

Mr. JOHNSON. Because they did it.

Mr. CLARK. Our troops did do it. The engineers and officers all say they did it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. They may have done it, too; but how came they to do it; let me ask the Senator from New Hampshire. They did it to put down the rebels, who did it themselves, did they not? They did it justly; they did it properly; and because these men fighting the Government themselves cut the levees and made it necessary for the United States to cut them, now you propose to rebuild them and tax your constituents to do it; and the Senator from Kentucky can see nothing but malignity in a refusal to do it.

Mr. GUTHRIE. Not exactly, Mr. President. All the malignity I think is engendered and resting in the gentleman's bosom.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator thinks that the malignity is with me. When an appropriation goes into the pockets of the men who fought the country, it is malice to oppose it! When an appropriation is asked for the Niagara ship-canal, to promote the commerce of the country and the general welfare of the nation among all its people, the Senator from Kentucky can oppose it. I never opposed a proper appropriation for the improvement of the Mississippi river. This is not an appropriation for the improvement of that river. It may incidentally confine the waters to a narrower channel; but that is not the object of this appropriation, and the Senator knows it. Its object is to protect the farms of men who slew our brothers and our children, who brought war upon the country and desolation upon the land. Not one acre of this ground belongs to this Government; not one acre of this land scarcely, I think I may say, probably not a single plantation, belongs to a man true to the flag of his country. Who owns this land that you propose to appropriate this money for? Who owned it when this rebellion was inaugurated? Who fired upon the vessels going down the Mississippi river except the owners of these plantations? And it is malignant not to tax the people of this country now to protect these farmers! The object of this appropriation, and the Senator from Kentucky knows it as well as I, is not to improve the Mississippi river; and there is not in the history of this Government—and he cannot find it there by my vote or the vote of any Congress—a precedent for such an appropriation as this; and he, claiming to be guided by the Constitution, claiming to vote for nothing that the Constitution will not warrant, finds no difficulty in voting money out of the Treasury for the purpose of reclaiming, as he calls it, the lands belonging to private individuals.

Sir, so far as the Constitution of the country is concerned and the authority to pass this bill is concerned, it is a matter wholly immaterial whether the owners of these lands were loyal or disloyal. I deny the authority as much in the one case as in the other. I would not vote a dollar from the national Treasury to protect the farms in Illinois from the overflows of the Mississippi river. I have seen in that State hundreds and thousands and hundreds of thousands of acres of as rich land as the sun shines upon inundated by the floods of the Mississippi river time and again, and I never thought of coming into Congress and asking for an appropriation from the Federal Government to protect the settlers upon those bottom lands. Sir, with the same propriety I might ask it. I do not put it upon the ground that the men who own these lands were once disloyal or are disloyal now. I stated that as one circumstance; but that does not affect the constitutional power. If they were as loyal as my own constituents I would not vote a dollar for such a purpose; and the distinction between an appropriation to improve the Mississippi river, a great highway of commerce, or to improve the passage from the lakes to the ocean, another great highway of commerce, and an appropriation for such a purpose as that now under consideration is very manifest.

Now, sir, it is not because this appropriation is made to affect people in the southern States that I object to it. I think I have as kindly feelings toward the people of the southern States as the Senator from Kentucky himself. I am for doing justice to that people. I am for treating them liberally. I am for treating them kindly. I am as desirous as he or any other member of the Senate at the earliest practicable moment, when it can be done with safety to the whole country, to welcome all the people into the Union, into the constitutional relations with the Union, and to receive their representatives here. I have manifested no such disposition as warrants the Senator in assuming that I am actuated by malignant feelings or that there is a concentration in myself of all the malignity of the country as against the people of the southern States. I have advocated upon this floor doing justice to all the loyal men of that country. I have been in favor of paying loyal men for the supplies that our armies took. I have advocated such a bill here; and on no occasion, if the Senator will search my action in this body, will he find that I ever placed my opposition to a measure upon the ground that it was to benefit one section of the country or another. I place it upon the ground that it must benefit loyal men. I will do nothing to benefit and aid the disloyal. But, sir, I care not, if it be a proper measure, what particular section of the country is to be benefited by it, and I will vote to improve the Mississippi river, if it needs it, as quickly in Louisiana as in Illinois.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I shall vote for this proposition, although I believe the sum proposed is utterly inadequate to accomplish the purpose intended. I believe it will cost several million dollars to do the needed work on the Mississippi river; and I should be willing, as we have imposed a large tax upon cotton, that in the States of Arkansas, Mississippi, and Louisiana, a certain amount received from that taxation should go to improve that river and to secure the lands bordering upon it.

The Government of the United States immediately after the close of the war thought it so important to do something on this river that General Humphreys was sent down the river, and the armed forces of the United States were employed for some time in this work. For myself, I propose simply to act in regard to this river, that portion of it in the late rebel States, as I would were that portion of it in any other section of the country. It is not for us here to act in any other light than to comprehend the entire country, and deal with every section of the country alike. I go as far as any man in requiring all needed guarantees in the Government of this country before the readmission of the representatives of the rebel States into these Chambers, but while I do that, I believe it to be our duty in all our legislation so to legislate as to improve and develop that section of the country as well as all other sections of the country. It has suffered greatly by this rebellion—the fault was theirs, and the punishment is theirs; but the war is over; the rebellion is crushed; the Government has complete control over every part of the country. I would not permit their late action in any way to influence our legislation here. I believe the good of the country requires that this measure should pass, and I shall vote for it cheerfully.

Mr. HENDERSON. As a member of the select committee that recommended this appropriation, I desire to state very briefly the reasons for it. I shall vote for this appropriation very cheerfully, not with a view of aiding and assisting the rebels or those men who fired on the steamers in 1861, because I apprehend that I was as much opposed to those men as the honorable Senator from Illinois or any other person. I believe that the power to make this appropriation is ample. I do not doubt it. I did not doubt the power to make an appropriation to keep from starvation the whites and the blacks of the southern States, and I voted for the bill appropriating money for that purpose. I regret very much that when an appropriation is asked for a purpose which is proper within itself we find many gentlemen suggesting that our Government is too limited to make it. I regret very much that oftentimes when we desire power to do that which is absolutely necessary for the protection of the Government itself, as has occurred repeatedly within the last five or six years, gentlemen can find no authority whatever to even save the life of the Government. There is nothing of that sort here; the life of the Government is not in danger whether this appropriation be made or be not made; and I appreciate the force of the argument made against it, that as a general thing it is an exceedingly bad policy to make such appropriations, and I do not think I would ever make another one like it. But what are the circumstances now? Perhaps similar circumstances will never exist again.

The Senator from Illinois mistakes when he supposes that this appropriation is exclusively for the benefit of disloyal men. I apprehend that he will find that a majority of the men who will cultivate cotton the next year in the protected region will not be disloyal but loyal men, and a majority of the men who will cultivate sugar in the protected region will be loyal and not disloyal men. But, sir, I apprehend that that makes but little difference; I apprehend that that does not affect the question of power; and I doubt whether it affects the question of expediency.

What have we done during this session of Congress? I stood here protesting against it, but how many votes did I get? The honorable Senator from Illinois did not give me his. I protested that it was bad policy to levy a tax of three cents a pound on raw cotton; but it carried. Now, will the Senator from Illinois, or any other Senator, tell me whether there is a tax levied upon the agricultural productions of any other section of the Union? Is any other agricultural production taxed but cotton? That is the only one. Why was that tax levied? I leave to honorable Senators to determine for themselves. We have the report of at least one Union officer, who has carefully investigated this matter, who tells us that without this protection there will be a failure to grow six hundred thousand bales of cotton next year. We know that no cotton has been grown this year in the region attempted to be protected by this appropriation, and there can be none next year unless this protection is given. How is it to be done? Unless we do it, it will not be done at all. Now, how much taxes should we collect from six hundred thousand bales of cotton? A tax of three cents a pound is $13 50 a bale. Thirteen dollars and a half a bale upon six hundred thousand bales of cotton would give us a revenue next year of $8,100,000 from the article of cotton, which cannot be grown unless this appropriation is made.

The honorable Senator may say, "They are rebels anyhow, and we will make them pay taxes whether they are represented here or not." Senators know that I am in no hurry about their being represented, but when I undertake in the absence of the representatives of those men to impose a tax of $8,000,000 upon them, I think I can very consistently make an appropriation of $1,500,000 here asked. But is that all? Let me ask the honorable Senator if he proposes to levy any tax upon the sugar-cane grown upon the soil of Illinois? None whatever. We know that the sugar manufactured from the Chinese cane is free of taxes, every species of it. There is no tax levied except upon the sugar-cane grown exclusively in the southern States. How much shall we realize from that? Those officers who have examined this country say that the entire sugar section of Louisiana cannot now be cultivated. Senators know that every acre of it has been submerged this summer, to the utter destruction of the sugar crop. We shall not grow one dollar's worth of sugar in the submerged region of Louisiana this year.

Now, turn to the census of 1860 and see how much sugar was grown in that country. I find that there were two hundred and forty-one thousand hogsheads of sugar in 1860 grown in this protected region west of the Mississippi river in the State of Louisiana. Not one hogshead of that has been grown this year on account of the overflow of the river. That production of sugar would give us a tax of $2,410,000 at one cent a pound, which is the tax we levy by our internal revenue act; and remember there is no tax on any other sugar-cane except that grown in the South. If we can realize two hundred and forty-one thousand hogsheads of sugar next year, we get a tax under our excise bill of $2,410,000.

But that is not all. I found upon examination of the census that three hundred and seventeen thousand barrels of molasses was raised in this submerged country in Louisiana in 1860.

Mr. SHERMAN. But these levees are on the east side of the river.

Mr. HENDERSON. No, sir; they are intended to protect the sugar country on the west side as well as the cotton country on the east side.

Mr. CLARK. Certainly it provides for both.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understood from the Senator from New Hampshire that it was to protect the Yazoo land.

Mr. HENDERSON. It does protect the Yazoo land; but that is not a sugar-growing country. The Senator knows that the Yazoo land is the best cotton-growing country of the southern States; and I referred to the Yazoo country when I spoke of the country that produced six hundred thousand bales of cotton. That portion which we propose to protect south of the mouth of the Arkansas river is on the west side, and is exclusively a sugar-growing country.

I was going on to state that there were three hundred and seventeen thousand barrels of molasses grown there in 1860. I put those barrels at forty gallons each, making twelve million six hundred and eighty thousand gallons of molasses, which, at a tax of three cents a gallon, would yield $380,400. Thus the aggregate of taxes which we may collect next year in consequence of this small appropriation is $10,890,400. I have merely made a fair calculation from the census figures of 1860. Senators can see whether we shall make money by it or not so far as the taxes are concerned.

The Senator from Illinois need not make so much disturbance about "rebels." I am as much opposed to rebels as that Senator or any other Senator; but I am heartily tired of this eternal calling out "rebels! rebels!" whenever an appropriation that is at all distasteful to gentlemen is asked. I am not in favor of rebels. I will go as far as that Senator or any other Senator to protect every man in the southern States in his equal rights against rebels. I am for equality before the law, and for establishing eternal justice in that country. I will go as far as any man to protect the white and black; but what does the Senator mean by this talk against "rebels?" Does he not know that there are perhaps seven hundred and fifty thousand negroes entirely dependent upon this very country which we propose to reclaim, for their support? If you will only throw up levees and enable the farmers of that country, rebel or not rebel, Union men or not Union men, to cultivate the land, to grow cotton, sugar, and molasses, next year you will not only collect nearly eleven millions of taxes, but you will give employment to seven hundred and fifty thousand of these suffering negroes that we are now feeding from the Treasury daily with rations.

If I have the power to pay money from the Treasury in order to feed these negroes, in the name of Heaven have I not the power to vote a small appropriation to enable them to work and make their own living; and if I can appropriate $11,000,000 to feed the negroes in the southern States, why can I not appropriate a million and a half in order to give them land to work and toil and make their own living upon? I voted for the bureau bill, and I did not doubt my constitutional power to vote for it, and I do not doubt my constitutional power to make this appropriation to save these men from starvation and misery and death.

Mr. President, I have said enough. I hope the appropriation will be made.

Mr. HOWARD. I intend to vote for this amendment. I think it is a necessary appropriation and that the country will in the end be more than compensated for the amount which we are about to appropriate. I shall not vote for the measure simply because if enacted it will have the effect to drain the farms and plantations of proprietors along the banks of the river. If that were the sole object of the amendment, and it had no other effect, I do not see how under the Constitution I could vote an appropriation of money for that purpose. I shall vote for the appropriation for the same reason that has induced me and will continue to induce me to vote for the construction of a ship-canal around the falls of Niagara; the same reason which has induced me and others to make appropriations to improve harbors upon the lakes and on the seacoast, and to vote for every other measure the object of which is to protect commerce in the United States.

I vote for it, in other words, under the commercial power. The Mississippi river is one of the great channels of commerce through the United States. It bears upon its bosom the wealth of the North and the South, the East and West. It has been regarded and treated by the Supreme Court of the United States as being subject to the admiralty law far up from its mouth into the interior of the country—a principle which was long and most strenuously resisted by the bar as well as the bench.

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator will permit me, I will call the attention to two appropriations that have been made to the Mississippi river, one in 1850 on an appropriation bill, on the omnibus bill, "for the topographical and hydrographical survey of the delta of the Mississippi, with such investigations as may lead to determine the most practicable plan for securing it from inundation."

Mr. HOWARD. That is a very strong precedent.

Mr. CLARK. And then in 1852, $50,000 more for the same purpose.

Mr. HOWARD. It is a great channel of commerce. Have we not a right to protect it as such? Have we not a right to dredge it out for the purpose of facilitating trade and navigation upon its bosom? I think no gentleman will deny it; and if we have a right to dredge it have we not, upon the same principle, a right to establish embankments upon it for the purpose of keeping the waters within their proper channels? These levees, I understand, were erected there mainly for that purpose originally.

The Senator from Illinois says the object of this amendment is to protect the lands. The amendment does not so declare. If I have read it correctly, it says not one word about protecting the lands. The whole purpose of the appropriation is to repair the levees which have been erected there for the purpose I have mentioned, and they are just as necessary for the purpose of commerce and navigation as would be the dredging of the same stream, the removal of snags and sawyers from its channel, or doing any other act the object of which was to promote commerce and give it additional facilities upon that great Father of Waters.

I vote for this measure, not because I wish particularly to do a favor to planters and other proprietors on the banks of that river who have been or still are disloyal. I do not think I shall be accused of any very hot haste in extending favors to that class of persons; but still, even in regard to them, I shall always be disposed to do them justice, exact justice. I think, en passant, that justice has not yet been done to many of them. Her march is very slow, but I trust in God that she will yet overtake them.

I vote for this as a great national improvement. It may incidentally inure to the benefit of proprietors upon the banks of the river. If it does, I should be entirely content with it. But the great object is to afford facilities for commerce and navigation upon that stream, an object in which not only the States mentioned in the amendment are particularly interested, but in which Illinois, Ohio, Wisconsin, Iowa, Michigan, all the States of the Union, have an interest as part and parcel of this great nation; and I will not limit or confine my views to the small benefit which it may possibly confer upon the few persons who are immediately interested as planters and owners of farms upon this great river. I vote for it as a national object, as a national undertaking worthy of Congress, and I hope to see the amendment passed.

Mr. TRUMBULL. According to the Senator from Michigan this appropriation is necessary to improve the great Mississippi river. I wonder if it is on the great Mississippi river that the Senator from Missouri is going to raise the cotton from which he is going to get eleven millions in taxes. How do these arguments hang together? The Senator from Michigan supports the measure in order to improve the navigation of the river. If you have a right to dredge it out, he says you have a right to embank it and to protect it; it is a great matter like canalizing around the falls of Niagara; and he supports it on commercial grounds. The Senator from Missouri supports it because he is going to raise products from which he will in taxes derive $11,000,000 next year. I suppose that the cotton and sugar that shall grow there on the waters of the Mississippi river would produce a vast crop if a revenue to be derived from which is to amount to $11,000,000. The Senator from Missouri has detained the Senate some time with the figures. Now, there has been disclosed to us by the Senator from Missouri one of the finest operations that I think has ever been discovered in any country. There is nothing like it in the gold regions of Nevada and California, or in the oil country. No investment that I ever heard of would be equal to the investment of a $1,500,000, according to the high authority of the Senator from Missouri, in building an embankment on the Mississippi river. He says that the additional product that will be raised in that country next year, in a single year, would be so great that the Government, which does not take a tenth of the value, will receive eleven millions. I believe the tax on cotton is only three cents a pound, which is not more than one tenth of its value, and the tax on sugar is a cent a pound, about one tenth. Then if we get eleven millions in taxes, the product itself would be worth $110,000,000; and an investment of only a million and a half is necessary to realize that. Did my friend from Nevada ever know of any investments like that in his country? Quit your gold mining, come over here, and enter into this arrangement. If the Senator from Missouri has full faith in his figures that one hundred and ten millions will be realized from an investment of a million and a half, why should the Government touch the thing? why not leave it to private capitalists? If I had any money I should be very glad to invest in an enterprise of this kind if my faith was equal to that of the Senator from Missouri. I have heard of no enterprise in oildom or in the gold regions to equal this. One hundred and ten millions in a single year from an investment of only $1,500,000!

Mr. CLARK. Let us come to a vote.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think we had better come to a vote at once. If there is going to be such a profit as that to the nation, let the Senate vote it.

Mr. DAVIS. The honorable Senator from Illinois takes a view of a single point of this subject, as he is prone too often to do in relation to other subjects. Now, he presents the profit upon an investment of $1,500,000 to the Government, and he loses sight entirely of the other large classes of investment in this matter. How much is the land worth? From fifty to one hundred dollars an acre. How much is the labor worth? One hand, from one hundred and fifty to two hundred dollars a year. How much is there invested in agricultural implements, how much in stock, how much in provisions? Fiftyfold as much as the Government is asked to appropriate for the purpose of reconstructing these levees; and all this large investment outside of this meager amount of appropriation from the Government is on the individual credit and funds of the planter.

But, Mr. President, I rose to present one point of this case that has not yet been presented in the argument. It was once my fortune to reside upon the banks of the Mississippi as a cotton planter for a short time, and I know the matter by experience and observation. These levees sometimes are sixty feet in width at the base and they are ten or fifteen feet in height. They extend for miles and miles along the margin of the river, and at some stages of the river it is a common sight to see the steamboats moving along upon the river three or four feet higher than the cotton fields that are blooming and expanding their white folds on either bank. Why is this? The water is fenced into its natural channel by these numerous and gigantic levees, and in that way the navigation of the river is improved, the flow of the water is confined to a narrow and restricted channel, and the effect of this confinement is that the bosom of the water flows sometimes several feet above the surface of the cotton fields on either side the torrent in full cultivation.

Now, Mr. President, what is the Mississippi? It is one of our great natural channels of commerce. I have heard it called, not inaptly, the Mediterranean of the United States. The commerce that flows upon its bosom is boundless in its quantity and in its value. Along this great natural channel of commerce is it not legitimate and constitutional for the General Government of the United States to appropriate money to improve the navigation of this Mediterranean of the United States?

This magnificent river disembogues itself into the Gulf by six or seven different channels. These channels fill up with sand. No man can comprehend the character of that stream who has not looked upon it day after day, and seen the mighty forces that are operating upon it in the movement continually of sand, the filling of channels, the formation of embankments upon one side and the inundation of lands upon the other. I ask the honorable Senator from Illinois if it is not a perfectly legitimate exercise of power for Congress to appropriate money for improving the navigation of this mighty stream. What has been done by Congress for the Delaware? A vast sum of money was appropriated to build a magnificent breakwater. Why? To improve the navigation of that stream and to construct an artificial harbor for the protection of commerce.

The honorable Senator from Michigan struck the right key when he said that Congress has the power to make this appropriation under the provision of the Constitution which invests in Congress the authority to regulate commerce among the several States. When these levees have the effect at many points and for miles and hundreds of miles upon that magnificent river to circumscribe the waters within its channel, so that they shall float several feet above vast cotton fields and sugar plantations, and in that way improve the navigation of the stream by increasing the depth of the water, what appropriation can be more legitimate, and wiser, and more constitutional, than for the purpose of repairing these vast levees that confine this stream within its natural channel?

The honorable Senator from Illinois says that there is no power in Congress to make this appropriation. Let me put a case. I have voted again and again for protective-tariff bills. One of the main incidental objects of such bills was to increase the profits of our manufacturers. If any gentleman were asked, has Congress the power to appropriate money to increase the profits of manufacturers, he would answer in the negative; but Congress has power to raise taxes by levying imposts upon foreign goods imported into the country, and as incidental to this power to levy taxes upon foreign importations, we discriminate so as to afford protection to certain manufactured articles. I was always taught that policy by the great father of the American system, and as one of the humblest of his pupils I have often voted in obedience to that lesson. The honorable Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. SPRAGUE] or his father and other northern manufacturers have again and again by my votes had the profits of their business increased incidentally in imposing taxes discriminating upon articles, with a view to protect domestic manufacturers when we had no power whatever to give any such direct protection.

The honorable Senator from Illinois will concede that as a great national channel of commerce we have a right to vote money to improve the passes at the mouth of the Mississippi river. As they fill up with sand, we have ordered dredging machines and other apparatus to be made to dredge out and to deepen those channels, and to open up the commerce from the Gulf to New Orleans, the emporium of the Southwest. We have a right to appropriate money to build these levees originally for the purpose of confining the water to the natural channel of the river, and to deepen that water, and to enable our commerce to float more commodiously upon it to that great southwestern emporium. When we have the power to do this directly for the purpose of improving the navigation upon the stream, if incidentally and collaterally to that we see vast fields where formerly grew cotton and sugar submerged, and in consequence of being submerged not fit to be cultivated, have we not a right at the time we prepare these levees for the purpose of improving the navigation of the stream, to look incidentally to the protection from overflow of the cotton and sugar fields? Certainly we have; and in that point of view the appropriation is legitimate, and it results constitutionally and properly from the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the several States.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, I shall vote for this appropriation upon the ground that it is made to repair war damages. Our troops and forces went into the country in question and cut the banks and produced extensive damage. We have reliable estimates that it will require some four or five million dollars for the purpose of repairing these levees which have been injured. Now, it seems to me that a contribution by the Government of the United States of a million and a half will be a very reasonable contribution to this general object, in view of the fact that our Government in conducting its military operations is partly responsible for the result which has happened. But I desire to be distinctly understood that I do not by this vote assent to the proposition that in future times improvements of this character on the Mississippi river shall be charged upon the national Treasury. I consider this as a measure temporary in its nature, growing out of or following upon the war; and that in making this appropriation we do nothing more than contribute a reasonable sum from the Treasury repairing the injury which we caused in carrying on our public purposes and objects in the late war. Upon this distinct ground, at least, I desire to place my vote.

Mr. CLARK. I hope Senators now will let us come to a vote upon the matter if agreeable to them.

Mr. BROWN. Before the vote is taken I desire to say that I should vote against this measure if I were at liberty to do so, but I am paired with the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. KIRKWOOD.]

Mr. GRIMES. On this subject I am paired with the Senator from Maine now absent, [Mr. MORRILL.] I am against the appropriation, and he is for it.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 28, nays 7; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Clark, Cowan, Creswell, Davis, Doolittle, Edmunds, Foster, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Lane, McDougall, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Poland, Ramsey, Riddle, Stewart, Van Winkle, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Morgan, Pomeroy, Sherman, Sumner, Trumbull, and Wade—7.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Dixon, Fessenden, Grimes, Howe, Kirkwood, Morrill, Saulsbury, Sprague, and Wright—13.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I move to amend the bill by adding several additional sections which I send to the Chair.

The amendment was read as follows:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That to each and every soldier who served in the armies of the United States in the late war of the rebellion, without distinction of color or race, and who has been or who may hereafter be honorably discharged therefrom, there shall be paid, except as hereinafter specified, a bounty of eight and one third dollars per month for each and every month of service rendered: Provided, That troops known as home guards, or other volunteer troops, organized for local service, which are now excluded from bounties by the rulings of the War Department or under the terms of their enlistment, shall not participate in the bounties provided by this act or any part thereof; but this exclusion shall not apply to those volunteers legalized as mustered into the three-year service of the United States under an act making an appropriation for completing the defenses of Washington, and for other purposes, approved February 13, 1862.

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That in calculating the amount of bounty due and to be paid to each soldier under the provisions of this act, deductions shall be made for any and all payments of bounty made or agreed to be made by the United States, so that in no case will any soldier receive a greater sum in bounty than eight and one third dollars for each or any month of service; and no bounty whatever shall be paid to or on account of any soldier, sailor, or marine who served as a substitute in the Army, Navy, or Marine corps, or who has deserted from the service, or who was a captured prisoner of war at the time of enlistment, or who has been discharged at his own request unless for transfer to the Navy, or for the purpose of accepting promotion or appointment in the Army or Navy, or after two years' service, or who has been discharged at the request of parents, guardians, or other persons, or on the ground of minority: Provided, That any soldier discharged from the service on account of wounds received in battle, on picket, or skirmish, or in the line of duty elsewhere than in actual conflict, and the widow or heirs of any soldier who may have died while in the service of the United States, shall be entitled to the same bounty as though such soldier had served out his full term of enlistment.

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That any soldier who has bartered, sold, assigned, transferred, loaned, exchanged, or given away his final discharge papers, or any interest in the bounty provided by this or any other act of Congress, shall not be entitled to receive any bounty whatever under this act; and when application is made by any soldier for said bounty, he shall be required, under the pains and penalties of perjury, to make oath or affirmation of his identity, and that he has not so bartered, sold, assigned, transferred, exchanged, loaned, or given away either his discharge papers or any interest in any bounty as aforsaid; and no claim for such bounty shall be entertained by the Paymaster General or other accounting or disbursing officer except upon receipt of the claimant's discharge papers, accompanied by the statement under oath as by this section provided.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That in the payment of the bounty herein provided for, it shall be the duty of the Paymaster General, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, to cause to be examined the accounts of each and every soldier who makes application therefor, accompanied with his discharge and the affidavit required by the preceding section; to ascertain and determine the amount, if any, due him under the provisions of this act; to indorse the same upon his discharge and to return the discharge to the claimant with a warrant or certificate for the amount due. Such warrant or certificate shall, in each case, be drawn upon an authorized depository or disbursing officer of the public funds, and shall be made payable to the order of the claimant: Provided, That the said warrant or certificate shall not be negotiated nor paid by the depository or disbursing officer upon whom it is drawn, nor by any other depository or disbursing officer, unless there be affixed to it proof of the identity of the payee, and of the genuineness of his indorsement, established by the oath or affirmation of not less than two reputable witnesses resident in the same county or district with said payee, and attested by the clerk of a court of record, under the seal of the court; and the said warrant or certificate, with such proof and attestation affixed thereto, shall thereafter be negotiable and payable by indorsement, in the manner of ordinary checks and drafts, and shall in no case be negotiable or payable without such proof and attestation; and the clerk of the court, before attesting said warrant or certificate, shall require the payee to exhibit his discharge, which he will compare with the warrant or certificate, and satisfy himself that it agrees in all respects therewith.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That under no circumstances whatever shall the purchase, sale, transfer, or assignment of any bounty herein provided for, or of any interest therein, be recognized or entertained by any accounting or disbursing officer of the Government in the settlement or payment of such bounty; but whenever application shall be made by any claimant, through any attorney or agent, the post office address of the claimant shall be furnished, giving the name of the county and State in which it is situated, and the amount of commission or fee which the attorney or agent is to receive for his service in the settlement of the said claim, and the Paymaster General, or proper accounting officer of the Treasury, upon ascertaining the amount due, shall cause to be transmitted to such claimant the full amount thereof, less the fee to be paid to the attorney or agent, which fee shall be paid to the said attorney or agent in person, or transmitted to such address as the attorney may direct.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That in case bounty claims are presented by or through an agent or attorney, such agent or attorney shall be required to file with each claim his oath or affirmation that he has no interest whatever in said bounty beyond the fees for collection of the same, and that he has not charged nor agreed for and will not accept more than the sums hereby fixed and established, as follows, namely, for the preparation and prosecution of claims for all sums not exceeding $50 the sum of $5; for all sums exceeding $50 and less than $100, the sum of $7 50; and for all sums exceeding $100 the sum of $10; and said fees shall include all expenses incident to the collection of such claims, except the expense of the necessary affidavits and notarial or other acknowledgments, which shall be defrayed by the claimant; and any agent or attorney who shall charge, directly or indirectly, in any case, a greater sum for his services in preparing and prosecuting said claims shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction, be punished by fine not exceeding $3,000 nor less than $1,000, and shall be forever excluded from prosecuting military or naval claims against the Government.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That in the reception, examination, settlement, and payment of claims for said bounty due the widows or heirs of deceased soldiers, the accounting officers of the Treasury shall be governed by the same restrictions as herein prescribed for the Paymaster General: Provided, That when such claims are presented by or through an agent or attorney duly empowered to act for the claimant, the warrant for the amount due may be transmitted to such agent or attorney, but shall not be recognized or paid by the United States unless it be indorsed, witnessed, and attested by the persons and in the manner prescribed by the fourth section of this act; nor shall any claim for said bounty be entertained by the accounting officers of the Treasury unless presented in the manner and within one year from the passage of this act.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That to each and every sailor and marine, and to the widow or heirs of any sailor and marine, who has served in the Navy and Marine corps in the late war of rebellion, there shall be paid the same amount of bounty as herein provided, and the examination, settlement, and payment of claims therefor shall be vested in the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, under rules and regulations subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, and payment thereof shall be made in the same manner and under the same restrictions as hereby prescribed for the payment of said bounty to soldiers; and all sums in bounty or prize money heretofore paid or agreed to be paid to any sailor or marine for service rendered or prizes captured during the war, or any part thereof, shall in like manner be deducted from the amount of bounty to be paid under this act, so that no sailor or marine in the final settlement of his accounts will have received in bounty and prize money a greater sum than eight and one third dollars for each or any month of service: Provided, That claims of sailors and marines now living for said bounty shall be presented to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury within two years, and the claims of their widows or heirs within one year, from and after the passage of this act, or such claims will not thereafter be received or entertained.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That in settling the claims of the widow and heirs of deceased soldiers, sailors, and marines, under the provisions of this act, the accounting officers of the Treasury shall cause payment to be made to the following persons and in the order following, and to no other persons, to wit: first, to the widow of such deceased soldier, sailor, or marine, if there be one; second, if there be no widow, then to the children of such deceased soldier, sailor, or marine, share and share alike; third, if there be no widow, child, or children, then to the father or mother of such deceased soldier, sailor, or marine: Provided, That no bounty shall be paid to the heirs of any claimant not resident in the United States.

Mr. GRIMES. Before my colleague left the Chamber, from which he was necessarily called away, he left with me an amendment which he desired me to offer to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. It is to insert in the second section, fifth line, after the words "United States," the words, "or by any State, county, city, town, or other municipal organization, or by any voluntary association, or by any person;" so as to read:

In calculating the amount of bounty due and to be paid to each soldier under the provisions of this act, deductions shall be made for any and all payments of bounty made or agreed to be made by the United States, or by any State, county, city, town, or other municipal organization, or by any voluntary association, or by any person, so that in no case will any soldier receive a greater sum in bounty than eight and one third dollars for each and any month of service.

Mr. WILSON. I desire simply to state the change that amendment will make in the amendment which I offered. It will be recollected that some weeks ago the House of Representatives passed a bill professing to provide for the equalization of bounties, but taking into account the bounties paid by the local authorities. It is not necessary for me to say that that bill, as passed by the House of Representatives, is not a bill for the equalization of bounties. In fact there is no equalization in it. It is a mere arbitrary assumption. Under the provisions of the House bill, which the Senator from Iowa now proposes to incorporate into this amendment, a large portion of the volunteers of the country would receive nothing whatever. In some of the States early in the war, either by the State, county, city, town, or other authorities, local bounties were paid, while in other sections of the country no bounties of that character were paid. The result would be that in those localities where the people raised the money and paid bounties to the early volunteers of the war, the volunteers will receive nothing, and that portion of the country will be taxed to pay bounties to volunteers in sections where the people did not raise money.

The Military Committee of the Senate early reported a bill providing for an absolute equalization of bounties so far as the national Government is concerned. I can state in a few words the idea on which it was based. The largest amount of bounties ever paid by the Federal Government during the war was at the rate of $100 a year. We enlisted men for three years and agreed to pay them $100 bounty. This continued up to the 17th of October, 1863. About a million and a half men volunteered into the service of the United States for three years on the agreement that they were to receive a bounty of $100 from the Federal Government. On the 17th of October, 1863, in the pressure for men, the War Department offered a bounty of $400 to veteran soldiers who had served two years and who would reenlist, and $300 to other persons who would enlist in the service for three years.

The veterans were enlisted for three years, and at the end of two years if they would reenlist they were to receive $400 bounty, and that, with the $100 bounty offered them when they enlisted the first time, made a sum of $500, for which they were to serve five years, which was at the rate of $100 a year. We continued after the 17th of October, 1863, until near the close of the war to pay at the rate of about a hundred dollars a year bounty for persons who would volunteer into the service. A few months before the close of the war we passed an act allowing men $100 bounty who would enlist for one year, $200 bounty to those who would enlist for two years, and $300 to those who would enlist for three years. In fact we enlisted nearly all the men for the last sixteen or seventeen months of the war at the rate of $100 a year, or eight and one third dollars per month bounty. Assuming, then, that our highest bounty was eight and one third dollars a month, the committee reported in favor of paying that rate of bounty to all the men who served in our armies, whether they were three months' men, one hundred days' men, nine months' men, or three years' men—to allow all of them eight and one third dollars per month, and to deduct from this amount whatever they may have received or are entitled to receive from the General Government as bounty.

So far as the Federal Government is concerned, this is a perfect equalization of bounties. It is true it requires a large sum to pay the amount, something between one hundred and fifty and one hundred and seventy-five or perhaps one hundred and eighty million dollars. It is a large sum, but it is based upon a principle of absolute equalization among all the men who have served the country in the field, not taking the local bounties into account which must certainly be a very unequal, and at the same time a very difficult thing to do, because when the Federal Government paid bounties of $300 to volunteers and $400 to veterans, the local authorities at the same time were paying $200, $300, $400, in some cases $500 to the same men. Men came into the old veteran regiments the members of which had enlisted early in the war for $100 bounty, with from five hundred to twelve hundred dollars bounty, and served side by side with the men who bore the heat and burden of the day, who served three years and received only a bounty of $100.

Under these circumstances it cannot be surprising to anybody that there should be a feeling deep down in the hearts of those men who enlisted during the first two years and a half of the war and bore the brunt of the contest and received only a bounty of $100, when they saw men coming in at a later hour with their pockets filled and receiving at the same time from the Government a bounty of $300, three times as much as they themselves were to have. I suppose they felt very much as we read in Holy Writ that the men felt who having agreed to serve for a penny, when they had borne the heat and burden of the day, saw men come in at the eleventh hour and receive the same amount. They grumbled about it; they were not satisfied with it; and I suppose our soldiers felt in the same way; and I presume the men mentioned in Holy Writ would have felt much worse on that day if the men who came in at the eleventh hour, instead of receiving one penny, had received three pennies—three times as much as they had.

Sir, I am in favor of the proposition which I have offered, because it rests upon the basis of perfect equalization. It includes all kinds and classes of our troops and gives them all a bounty of eight and one third dollars per month, or at the rate of $100 a year, so far as the Federal Government is concerned. I believe its passage would satisfy the feeling, especially, of the million and a half men, or those who are left of them, who entered the war early, from patriotic motives, and who received only $100 bounty for three years' service. I must confess that I have no great sympathy for any claims made by the one hundred days' men or the three months' men or the nine months' men, but I have included them all. Those classes will take no very great sum and I prefer to include them so as to make a perfect equalization; but I do sympathize with the men who served throughout the war. I believe the country owes this much to those men, and I believe the country will never be poorer for paying it to them. More than a million men entered the service during the last year and a half of the war, enlisting for a long time and receiving enormous bounties, and then, when the war closed, they were discharged having served out only one third or one half of the time for which they entered, while the old weather-beaten regiments, organized in the first two and a half years of the war, received but a $100 bounty and were shivered and shattered and torn. Many of the men who came in at the last hour received the favors of the local authorities, and of the Federal Government too. It is true all this was imposed upon us by the needs of the country, but now we have got through the rebellion and we ought to do justice.

I do not believe the country is very poor. We have got a large amount of property in this country, and we can stand this expenditure. It will take the Paymaster General four years' time; working all his force, to pay these bounties, so that my amendment will take perhaps forty or forty-five millions a year out of the Treasury for four years to come. The work cannot be done any faster than that with the present force. I do not believe it will affect the credit of this Government, or that it will be deemed an act of folly or of injustice. On the contrary, I believe that the tendency will be to make the men who fought the battles of the country and saved the country feel that the country has dealt generously by them. No soldiers were ever so largely paid, so well fed, or clothed, as our Army. They were men born among the mass of our people; they were a part of our people—not soldiers, but men who voluntarily entered the service of the country, exposed life and health and all they had for the cause of the country. They served faithfully. They saved the country, and if it takes $175,000,000 to equalize the bounties among them, I do not believe the heart or the conscience of this nation will grudge the sum, and I do not believe in the long run of years the nation will be the poorer for it. We have acted upon the policy of keeping a small standing Army, relying upon the people to crowd the ranks of our military forces in time of war. We have held it to be the duty of every man liable to military service to give his time, his health, his blood, his life, if need be, for the service of the country in time of war. That has been the theory upon which the Government has acted. We have relied upon the people, and the people responded to our appeal as no people in history ever responded before; and if we do justice now, deal fairly by our neighbors, brothers, and friends scattered by the hundreds and thousands over this country, whenever the country shall again be engaged in war, foreign or civil—and God forbid that we should ever be, in our day and generation, at any rate, involved in either—these men will again respond to the call of the country, in the consciousness that the nation will deal justly, fairly, and equally by them.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, at the beginning of the session, very early in the session, I had the honor to present several petitions and memorials from the returned soldiers of the State of Indiana, praying for an equalization of bounties. These petitions were very numerous signed, and they were also presented, I believe, from every State and Territory of the United States. In addition to that the Legislature of our State have taken the matter into consideration, and have memorialized Congress to equalize the bounties of the soldiers. Some weeks ago a bill passed the House of Representatives nominally for the equalization of the bounties of the soldiers. I shall endeavor to show very briefly that that bill as it passed the House is not a bill which in any sense can equalize the bounties of the soldiers. The main provision of that bill, differing from the Senate bill, was precisely the difference embraced in the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Iowa. You will perceive that our bill, the Senate bill, proposes an exact equalization of the bounties so far as they have been given by the Government of the United States. The bill of the House proposes to equalize bounties given by the General Government, deducting local, State, county, and municipal bounties; and this is the radical difference between the two bills.

Now, in order to legislate knowingly upon the subject, I have prepared a very brief synopsis of the bounty laws we have passed since the beginning of the rebellion. By the act of July 21, 1861, volunteers were to have $100 bounty for two years' service. By the act of July 29, 1861, regulars were placed upon the same footing as the volunteers were as to bounties. By the act of March 28, 1862, bounty was given to men employed in the department of Missouri; that was a special enlistment and mustering into service of the Missouri troops. The act of July 11, 1862, placed regular soldiers enlisted since July, 1861, on the same footing as volunteers respecting bounty, &c. By the act of July 17, 1862, nine months' troops were allowed twenty-five dollars bounty, twelve months troops fifty dollars bounty, one half to be paid in advance. By the act of March 8, 1863, nine months' troops who enlisted for one year were entitled to the fifty dollars bounty, for two years $100. By the act of February 24, 1864, the loyal master of a slave drafted was to have the bounty of $100, a provision carried out by an amendment to this very bill to allow the loyal master a bounty for slaves enlisted. By the act of June 15, 1864, colored soldiers enlisted who were free before April 1, 1861, were to receive $100 bounty. Under the call of October 17, 1863, they were entitled to the bounty of $800 for three years enlistment where they were free prior to 1861. These provisions have been carried out by an amendment to this bill. By the act of June 20, 1864, regulars who reenlisted were to have the bounty authorized by the joint resolution of June 13, 1864, after March, 1861. The resolution of January 13, 1864, continues reenlistment bounties to March, 1864, one year $100, two years $200, and three years $300.

You will perceive, then, Mr. President, that the highest bounties given to any soldiers were $400 bounty to the three years' men who reenlisted for three years. This provision goes upon the ground that eight and one third dollars per month will make the highest bounty given to any soldier when you carry it to the whole time of his enlistment, six months, nine months, one year, two years, or three years. Then the proposition is to equalize the bounties of all the soldiers. Under these several acts you will find that the bounties given by the General Government were unequal, owing to the emergency of the occasion at the particular times when the laws were passed. When we passed the first enlistment act it was thought that $100 bounty was sufficient, and under that bounty your armies were speedily filed, and as the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts has said, the troops enlisted in 1861 and 1862, under the $100 bounty, were the troops who bore the brunt of this whole war.

But we are met here with the argument that the Government of the United States has honestly paid to every enlisted man all that it promised. That is true. But under the emergency of the occasion the United States have at one time promised more than they have promised at another; and the services being equally meritorious and equally efficient, it does seem to me that the bounties should be equalized. I can conceive no objection to that. I grant you that in law there is no obligation that could be enforced, but I think in morals there is an obligation that should be enforced, that these bounties should all be equalized.

We are told that it will require a large amount of money. That is doubtless true. It will require from one hundred and fifty to one hundred and seventy million dollars, according to the estimate of your Paymaster General, if you pass the Senate bill; it will require perhaps a little less than half that amount if you pass the House bill; but I shall proceed to show you now that it is wholly impracticable to pass the provision as it passed the House.

We propose here to equalize the bounties paid by the Government of the United States. That we can readily do, for every cent of bounty paid is determined upon the pay-rolls by the date of enlistment of every soldier in the Army, compared with the laws in existence at the time of his enlistment. The rolls at the War Department are complete and the Paymaster General can pay the additional bounty as readily as he can pay the month's pay to each soldier. Then there is no trouble to administer this law as we propose to pass it in the Senate. But suppose you adopt a different rule and say you will equalize the bounties, deducting the amount of local, township, State, and municipal bounty, as provided for in the House bill; it is wholly impracticable to ascertain the amount paid. Every county perhaps in my State and in almost all the States raised by taxation or voluntary subscription a fund to pay as a bounty to soldiers to prevent a draft; a different amount was paid in almost every township, and in many instances different amounts were paid to soldiers from the same township. Then I say it is impracticable. You can never find out what the States, townships, counties, and cities paid, for there is no register of it. No register was kept; it was not returned to the Provost Marshal General's office; there is no paper in that department showing the amount of these local bounties, and in the very nature of the case no such paper could be returned.

I have endeavored to show the Senate the utter impracticability of equalizing bounties by taking into the account local, township, and State bounties, because there are no papers returned showing the amounts paid; but even if it were practicable it would be exceedingly unjust, and in my opinion exceedingly impolitic. What would be the operation? Suppose we pass a law nominally equalizing the bounties of these soldiers and deducting therefrom the local bounties, the operation would be just this: take for example the county in which I reside; there by taxation we raised $375,000 as a bounty fund; that was paid to the soldiers of our county for going in and filling up the ranks. Pass now a bill to equalize the bounties and deduct that, and no soldier from that county will receive one cent benefit from your action, and they will be taxed to make up for those communities who refused to contribute anything to fill the ranks of your armies. I can see no justice in this.

But my main objection to it is that it is wholly impracticable and can never be carried out. Take the State of Indiana. We owe to-day over seventeen million dollars bounty fund raised by taxation upon our people to fill the ranks of the armies and to prevent drafts. Pass the House bill and our people, who have already contributed, who have already been taxed to pay the debt, will be taxed to pay communities where they raised no bounties, either by taxation or by subscription, while no citizen of Indiana will get a cent. I would about as soon pass no bill equalizing bounties as to pass that bill which can never be carried out, deducting local and township and county bounties.

Mr. President, I admit, as I have before said, that there is no legal obligation. We have paid to these soldiers all that we promised to them; but after having promised the veteran soldier who served three years $100 bounty, the very next year we promised and paid $300 and $400. These men fought side by side in the ranks, and their blood mingled in the same common torrent, upon the same glorious battle-fields, the one having a bounty of $100 or nothing, the other having a bounty of $400 given by the Government, and perhaps five or six hundred dollars given by local corporations and townships. I can see no possible justice in this, and I believe the public sentiment of the whole country demands this legislation. The instincts of the people are right and honest and proper, and upon all questions of morals the voice of the people, uncorrupted, is the voice of God, echoing the sense of eternal justice which lives in every human heart. The whole country demands it. There is no opposition to it. The only possible opposition is that the condition of the Treasury is such that it cannot stand this drain. I believe no such thing. Who is to pay this national debt? The whole people. The returned soldiers are a part of the people interested in the payment of the debt. By doing justice, by dealing liberally with them, you have a much better prospect of final payment than you have by dissatisfying those who have fought the battles of the country.

Mr. President, I shall not enlarge on this subject, nor would it be prudent, perhaps, at this stage of the session, but I do feel that upon this occasion I speak for those who have no right to speak here for themselves; but they have spoken for us elsewhere at the mouth of cannon and by the victors' shout upon a hundred battle-fields; and that we sit here to-night is owing to the exertions, the bravery, and prowess of the very men whose cause I feel plead to-night. We should do justice to these men; we should satisfy them not only that the Government is inclined to be just but to be liberal and fair, for we must rely in all future wars upon the volunteer forces of the country, we must rely upon the soldiery drawn from the ranks of common life, every man of whom feels that he is a part of the Government, responsible for the conduct of the Government, and every man of whom feels that this is his Government.

I then shall vote most cheerfully for this amendment. An objection has been urged that this is not the proper place for it, that it should not have been moved as an amendment upon this bill. What is this bill you are considering? An appropriation bill. What is the amendment? A provision to appropriate further to discharge this debt of gratitude and honor and justice that we owe to the common soldier. It is strictly germane to the bill, and there can be no point, no time, no occasion when it is not proper and in order to do justice to these brave soldiers of ours.

But why is it moved here as an amendment upon this bill? Simply because four days ago, when gentlemen sought to consider this bill, we asked that the bounty bill might be taken up in advance, knowing that the appropriation bill would pass any way at any stage of the session. We asked then that a vote should be taken upon the bounty bill. We were then told, "Do not antagonize it with the appropriation bill; wait." We did wait until we are now within less than three days of the adjournment of this Congress, and I, for one, am unwilling to adjourn without doing justice to the soldier, and this is the only opportunity we shall have. If it is not put upon this bill it is the last you will hear of it this session. There is no other opportunity of getting it up, and it is germane to the subject, precisely right and proper. This is an appropriation bill to pay your civil employes, to pay for the repair of the Mississippi levees, to pay a hundred other miscellaneous objects. It is in order to do all these things, but exceedingly improper to move an amendment to pay your soldiers and equalize their bounties! I hope that the Senate, without hesitation, will pass this amendment, and I regret to have been compelled to have said one word in its defense.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, since I have had the honor of a seat in this body, no task has been imposed upon me so unpleasant as to oppose an appropriation for the class of soldiers who are to be benefited by this bill; but a sense of public duty compels me to do so. In this I know that I do not agree with the general sentiment of the people of my State, and with the general popular sentiment throughout the country; but I do it from a sense of responsibility which allows me no doubt or hesitation.

The honorable Senator from Indiana, with his impulsive and generous manner, appeals to us to equalize the bounties to soldiers, and to give them some reward for their sacrifices in the cause of their country. Mr. President, we cannot suitably reward the services of our soldiers by money. If we were to pour into their pockets all the money, and give them all the property of our people; if we were to destroy our credit, and roll up mountains of debt, and break down the future prosperity of our country, we could not, in money, compensate for the privations and suffering of our soldiers in this war. It is impossible for us to compensate them for the services they have rendered; nor do they seek it. I do not believe that the mass of the soldiers who are to be the recipients of this bounty have demanded it of us. I know that in some cases I have received letters from discharged soldiers, who oppose the appropriation of this sum of money; and I have no doubt all Senators have received similar letters. Any attempt to equalize bounties, or to pay the soldiers for their services and sacrifices is utterly futile. All the money of this country, all the credit of this country, could not accomplish this result; and every attempt to equalize bounties will only make the inequality more manifest.

Why, sir, there have been soldiers who have served for one month, and yet who received four or five hundred dollars as bounty. They entered the service as the war was closing. Could you equalize bounties upon their cases? Some men have received as substitutes $1,000, and probably have been discharged for inability in three months. Would you equalize on that basis? Many soldiers who served during three years of the war and rendered the most valuable service, far more valuable than any rendered by any other class of our soldiers, reenlisted and received a bounty of three hundred or four hundred dollars as reenlisted veterans. They get nothing under your bill. They may have lost their limbs or been disabled for life during their second enlistment, and urged to do so by the call of patriotism, but they get nothing by your bill. The soldier who enlisted first and refused to reenlist again when the country was in the deepest distress, gets the bounty by your bill, while those gallant veterans who reenlisted and received the bounty you then offered them get nothing at all. That class of men, and there are 158,507 of them—the best soldiers of the Republic—who, after having served three years, took the bounty that was offered, and with their ample experience and their skill and discipline, went again into the service and fought the war through, get nothing by this bill. The bounties proposed by this bill are only to be granted to those who, having served their first enlistment went out of the service, or the nine months' men, or the three months' men, and those who have heretofore been excluded from your bounty. I say, therefore, that any attempt by any general legislation to equalize bounties is utterly futile.

But, sir, I would be willing to make the attempt did I not see other difficulties in the way. Before we make this attempt we must remember that if we appropriate this money we must borrow money to pay these bounties. There is now no authority of law for any increase of the public debt. The only law you have passed at this session in relation to the public debt expressly provides that the public debt shall not be increased. No authority is given to increase the public debt. You must propose a measure which, in my judgment, will require at least $300,000,000. Upon what basis the Senator from Massachusetts says it will require only $170,000,000 I cannot compute. I have the papers and documents before me. It is too late to go into the analysis of this computation, but I say it will require not less than $300,000,000. Where is this money to come from? The Senator says it will take four years to pay it. Will you dole out this pittance, as you call it, to these soldiers? Why, sir, when the four years expire you will have a demand made from these soldiers to equalize the interest upon these bounties. But, sir, the very provisions of this bill require the payment to be made within one year, and they will be made promptly. The evidence is easily accessible, and the payment will be promptly made, and you have got to meet this sum. If you intend to appropriate it, why not provide for its payment? Are you now prepared to vote an increase of the public debt to an amount sufficient to meet this bill?

If the Senate adopt this amendment it will become my duty then to propose a measure to raise the means to pay this money. It is utterly idle for us to hold out the promise of bounty to the soldiers without having the money to pay it. It is a delusion; it is a fraud upon them. We must not, and we cannot, do it. Now, we have, during this whole session, gone upon the basis that we would return gradually again to a peace basis; that we would reduce our expenses to the measure of our income; and, in order to relieve the industry of our people, composed in a great measure of returned soldiers, we have thrown off from their shoulders a vast burden of taxation. We have taken off at least $100,000,000 of taxes. We propose to do more year by year. We are now reducing daily our receipts. The numerous taxes imposed by us during the war have yielded us a revenue of over $500,000,000, but next year they will be far less. Are you prepared to stop now the process of throwing off the burden of taxation? Are you prepared to lay on a new tax in order to raise this sum of money, or are you prepared to go to sea again, financially, and borrow money and increase your debt with money at a discount of thirty-three per cent. in gold? These are the questions that must be considered, as well as the patriotic furor by which it is sought to carry this bill at the heel of the session as an appendix to the appropriation bill.

Mr. President, I have here remonstrances from officers of the Government against this bill. I have here a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury stating that he is unable to pay these bounties. I have here a letter, full of instruction, from Mr. Wells, the chairman of the revenue commission, stating his views on the matter of the inadequacy of our tax laws to raise an amount sufficient to pay this sum. I have here an official letter from General Fry, the Provost Marshal General, showing that the number of persons enlisted into the service of the United States during the war was 2,461,062, of whom 780,721 have received no bounty, and all of whom would be entitled to bounty under the provisions of this bill. Why, sir, the actual bounty paid out by us during the war was $300,223,500, and of this 1,156,868 men received but the bounty of $100. Their bounty is increased at the rate of eight dollars and some cents a month, or $100 a year. No man can sit down and look over these figures and estimate the amount required by this bill at less than $300,000,000. In the amount of bounty that we paid out heretofore, we paid nothing to 750,000 of our soldiers; we only paid bounty to the men who served for two and three years. I say, then, to sit down and compute the amount required by this bill at less than $300,000,000 is simply idle and illusory; and we must be prepared to raise the money when we propose to pay it. As I said, I have all these documents before me, but it is too late to read them. I have the statement of General Fry, who computes the amount required by this bill at from $300,000,000 to $600,000,000; and here let me say that the Paymaster General, the Provost Marshal General, and so far as I know, the Secretary of War, and every officer of the Government connected with the service, is opposed to this scheme.

Under these circumstances it is my duty to oppose this appropriation. But there is another ground of objection. Without going into the general merits of the amendment, I submit to Senators this plain proposition: here is a bill which one of your committees is required to report, for what? For the civil service of the Government during the next fiscal year, not to cover past debts; not to cover old matters, but for the civil service of the Government during the next fiscal year. This bill provides for your light-houses; it provides for the surveys of the public lands; it provides for the care and custody of your public buildings. It is called the civil or miscellaneous appropriation bill. Its passage is absolutely necessary to carry on certain functions of the Government. Now, what is proposed? The Senator from Massachusetts comes here with a bill that the Committee on Finance have never considered and have had no opportunity to consider, and proposes to load this bill upon our shoulders so that we shall be compelled to take care of it, and to represent the Senate in regard to a bill providing for at least $300,000,000 at this stage of the session. I ask, is that fair or legitimate legislation? Until recently things of that kind were not done.

The Committee on Finance is opposed to this bill, I believe, unanimously, not that we love the soldiers less than other Senators. I think I have as warm a heart and as kind a feeling for the soldiers who saved our country in this war as my honorable friend from Indiana, who always appeals to us so strongly in their behalf. But we have other duties and other difficulties to take care of. We have to look at another aspect of the affair; and in the present condition of our finances I say it is not wise to assume this burden; yet it is proposed to put this bill upon the back of the civil appropriation bill at this stage of the session and force a controversy with the House upon it. The House passed a bill long ago on this subject that will not take more than one third the sum proposed by the Senate bill. It is framed upon a correct principle; and why? It authorizes a reduction for local bounties. Why should not that be done? You want to equalize to the soldiers the bounty paid. Does it make any difference to him whether he has received that bounty from his State, his county, his principal, his town, his city, or the nation? None whatever. You cannot equalize this among communities or cities. It is a bill for equalizing bounties among soldiers. If a soldier received $1,000 in the city of Boston and entered into the service with that bounty in his pocket, did it not answer his purpose just as well as if he had received it from the hands of the Government? My own impression always has been during the war that the United States should not have granted any bounties except the $100 bounty, which is a substitute for the land grant heretofore given, but allowed the local authorities to make up the bounty.

Another thing is to be considered. In different portions of our common country there is a great difference in the value of money. Thus in the West, $100 to a man in the State of Indiana is worth as much as $200 to a man in the State of Massachusetts. Why? Because the price of food, the price of raiment, the price of the necessities of life is much less in an agricultural community.

Mr. LANE. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to interrupt him for one moment?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. LANE. I understand the Senator, then, to be in favor of the bounty bill which passed the House, which is the amendment of the Senator from Iowa. If we can compromise on that I shall be willing, if I can get nothing more, to take that.

Mr. SHERMAN. I stated distinctly when I rose that I was opposed to the system of the equalization of bounties at the present session and in the present condition of our finances; but I am now talking about the amendment. I say, if the Senator really wishes to equalize bounties, he should base his bill upon the proposition made by the House of Representatives, because if local communities did pay to the soldier money, it was just as good to him as if it had been paid by the national Government. When we started out in this war we started out with the proposition that the United States should pay no bounties. The $100 was given rather as the substitute for the quarter section of land usually voted to our soldiers.

Mr. President, I find that my throat is so much affected that really I ought not to proceed; but there are two or three other considerations in this matter that I probably ought to mention. This is not a debt. It is admitted on all hands that we do not owe our soldiers anything. It is said that no soldiers ever served so well or deserved so well of their country. That is true; but no soldiers were ever paid so well; no soldiers ever received so much money per month; no soldiers ever received such gratuities and bounties and aids, both local and national; no soldiers were ever so honored by any people in the world as our soldiers have been; no soldiers ever had the road to promotion open to them as ours have had; and now many a gallant fellow who entered the ranks as a common soldier bears upon his shoulder the star of a brigadier and even the double star of a major general. No soldiers were ever so kindly treated. They are a part of our community. They are our fathers and brothers and kindred. Now it seems to me to treat them as you would mercenary soldiers who entered the service merely to gain money is absurd. It is not the proper view to present of this case. They entered into it in many instances without regard to the money they were to receive. In the early period of the war I saw hundreds of the finest young men of Ohio enter the service—men who were entirely independent, above want, who need not have given a stroke of labor during their whole lives—at eleven dollars a month, and they served gallantly and well. The idea of trying to equalize them or putting them upon the basis of receiving money gratuities I am sure would wound their pride. There are thousands of such soldiers throughout the country who do not ask your bounty.

I believe that more than ten, perhaps twenty percent. of the money appropriated by this bill will go into the hands of agents and attorneys; it will never reach these soldiers; while the fact of this increase of the public debt will, in my judgment, tend to lower the price and value of our securities, to derange the currency of the country, and by increasing the public debt increase the cost of all the necessities of life. The evils which will flow from it will be very great indeed.

I therefore, in any aspect, am opposed to this attempt to equalize the bounties; but if it must be done, if the Senate have made up their minds to do it, it is much wiser to take the House proposition requiring the equalization of the bounties upon the basis of a deduction of the local bounties. If it is to be done, in my judgment it ought to be done by a bill fully discussed on its own merits and not hitched on to an appropriation bill. Suppose this matter does go over until next winter, will any harm result? The Senator from Massachusetts says these men cannot get their money for four years. Then what harm will be done by a postponement? We will have time to consider it; the Committee on Military Affairs will have time to reexamine this question and to mature a proper bill; we will have new information on the subject. We can have an estimate made by the Paymaster General and by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury as to the amount that will be necessary. We may then be able to see our way through financially. Our revenues may be larger than we anticipate; our expenses may not be so great. No harm can be done by laying this proposition over until next winter, while now, just at this critical moment, when there is so much uncertainty, not only in our financial affairs, but abroad, the passage of this measure, by showing an utter disregard of all these pecuniary considerations, may seriously embarrass our public credit.

I say that no harm can be done by putting this measure over. The people of this country will never forget the services of their soldiers. They are showing everywhere, all over the country, the highest appreciation of their services. Soldiers are now filling your offices; they are receiving your honors; and they will always be regarded with favor and with affection. Your miserable bounty bill, while it may embarrass the Government and derange our finances, will scarcely be anything to them. Suppose you give to one of these gallant heroes $100 or $200, what will he care for it? If he is an able-bodied man, he has resumed the ordinary occupations of his life, everywhere favored and befriended; if he is dead and has left behind him a widow and children, they are provided for by increased pensions; so that in no view that I can take of this subject is it indispensable to pass this bill at this time. If he is disabled, wounded, he is on your pension-list. If the pension is not large enough my friend from Indiana is the almoner of our mercy and of our bounty in that regard, and any bill that he introduces in regard to pensions will pass, and his heart is overflowing with kindness toward these men.

I ask, therefore, is there any necessity or pressure for this measure? None whatever. To force us at this period of the session, at this hour of the night to vote upon a bill of this kind, without any opportunity to study its details, it seems to me unwise legislation. If, however, the Senate are disposed to do it, I must, in pursuance of the instructions I have received and of my public duty, make some provision, either that these bounties shall only be paid out of the current revenue as it accrues and exceeds our expenditure, or else we must meet the question fairly and authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to borrow money to pay these bounties. We all know that it is perfectly idle, in addition to the enormous appropriations that we are passing this session, which will absorb the current revenue, to throw upon him this large mass of unliquidated and unadjusted debt. We must provide the ways and means of paying it if we propose to contract this liability.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The extreme injustice of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa as applied certainly to the State of Vermont, and I do not know but to other States—they can answer for themselves—compels me to enter my dissent to that in particular. It is fair to say, also, that I dissent from the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts; but that is far better for my State than the amendment of the Senator from Iowa. The State of Vermont from the beginning, from the first soldier of hers that entered the field—and I believe she has never been accused of being behindhand in sending them there—provided by State tax for every soldier an extra compensation of seven dollars per month; so that every soldier of her twenty thousand, or whatever her share might have been—and it was filled—received from month to month, as he was in the field performing service, seven dollars per month from the State in addition to his United States pay. He received at a time when it was fit and proper that the faith and justice of the State should be exercised toward him because it was at a time when, more than any other, himself and his family whom he had left behind needed it. We entered upon that scheme as an act of justice, so that the dear ones who were left behind should be provided for then. The result of it is that it only leaves a compensation under this amendment to all of our soldiers of one dollar and a third per month and no more. Now, if you take from that the United States bounty that has been paid, of $100 in the first place, and then of $200, $300, or $400 in later times, according to the particular circumstances under which each man enlisted, the result is that, except in the accidental cases of death sometimes when the man did not serve out his term and therefore his seven dollars per month stopped, there is not a soldier of the State of Vermont who will receive a penny of bounty in pursuance of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa. Out of the $200,000,000 or $300,000,000 that you propose to give to the soldiers of the nation, the Vermont soldiers will receive not one dollar. That is the "equalization" which they are to have under the provision so kindly offered by the Senator from Iowa, and supported by the Senator from Ohio, on the ground, I suppose, that the burden upon the Treasury will be less.

Now, reverse the picture. That is the equalization of the bounties for us. Where is the equalization of the burdens upon the States on the other hand? The State of Vermont pays one half of one per cent. and a little over of all the internal taxes of the country. It is a small sum, to be sure, fractionally; but the result is, under this measure as provided for by the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, if it will take, for illustration, $200,000,000 to accomplish the object, it will be the duty of the State of Vermont to contribute from the labor of her people $1,000,000 toward it. Therefore, while you profess to equalize the bounties to soldiers in Iowa and the other States, where they did not provide for them in the time of need, you call upon the State of Vermont to pay over a million dollars to those States without receiving a penny of compensation or bounty in return. Certainly, if that equalizes bounties, it unequalizes, if there be such a term, the burden of taxation which our Constitution and laws require to be imposed equally upon the States.

For one, sir, I object decidedly to this late species of gratitude which, in order to show your generosity toward the soldiers of one section of the country, takes from the pockets of the soldiers of another section (because they are at home and hard at work, all who have not their graves in the South) the money to make that good. If the State of Iowa or the State of Indiana or any other State feels that she has not done justice to her soldiers as the time went by, it is not too late for her to show it. They have the power of taxation in those States, I suppose. They know the wants of their local soldiery. They are quite competent and able to provide for them. Why call upon us who, as the time went by, made proper and efficient provision, so that we were not only just but generous to our soldiers, and they are satisfied with it.

I do not wish to occupy the time of the Senate; but, sir, it appears to me that in these considerations we have rather underrated the material of which these soldiers are composed. As has been said by the Senator from Ohio, they are not mercenaries, they are not hirelings, they are not persons whose favor, political or otherwise, is to be bought and sold by the paltry bid of a few bounties just now. They are the citizens, they are the responsible men of the nation; they are the owners of property, small, to be sure, individually, but property which is sacred to and cared for by them. They feel the responsibilities and the troubles that are imposed upon us now in the way of keeping clear and pure our public faith as highly as any Senator in this Chamber does. I do not believe that they will feel complimented by any extraordinary effort at this time, under a profession of equalizing bounties, to unequalize and disturb the burdens imposed upon the different States and to imperil in a large degree the public faith and the public credit.

Thus much I have said in relation to the pending amendment as it applies to my State. When the amendment in chief comes to be considered I may have something to say upon the details of it.

Mr. GRIMES. I desire simply to say that I did not offer this amendment in the interest of Iowa soldiers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I only spoke of Iowa as an illustration.

Mr. GRIMES. I am very happy to be able to say that I am a citizen of a State that was not compelled to pay seven dollars a month additional to each one of its soldiers to induce them to go into the Army. The entire amount of public indebtedness created by my State—and let me remark that when the last draft was proposed there was a surplus of three years' men from the State of Iowa of twelve thousand and eighty—the entire public indebtedness created by my State to send seventy-nine thousand men to the field was only $500,000. I had no allusion to the State of Vermont. The remarks of the Senator as to the ability of the State of Iowa to protect her own soldiers, or any disposition on the part of that State to legislate specially for her interests and against the interests of Vermont, were hardly called for.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg the Senator from Iowa not to suppose that I had any personal reference to that particular State. I did not know but what Iowa paid her soldiers twenty dollars a month; she is rich enough to do it; but what I intended was to show the inequality of the proposition, not to apply to that particular State any scheme whatever.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. President, pending the war, I felt it to be my duty to favor the policy of filling up the Army by the inducement of large bounties rather than the enactment of conscription laws. Having done that, I now feel it to be my duty to equalize the bounties as nearly as may be possible. Upon the particular amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa I have just this to say: I cannot vote for it, for I think it is not a proposition to equalize bounties. He proposes to set off against one class of the soldiers the bounties that were given to them by the local authorities. I suggest to him that the soldiers who enlisted during the last two years of the war and who received $300 and $400 bounty from the General Government, received also quite as large local bounties as those who enlisted in the first and second years of the war, and who received but $100 bounty. Indeed, to the extent of my observation, I am satisfied that the local bounties received by the soldiers during the last year or two years of the war were larger than the local bounties received during the earlier part of the war. Is it right, then, to set off, in the adjustment of the bounties and in equalizing them, the local bounties which were less the first and second years of the war than they were during the latter part of it? In other words, the soldiers who received large bounties from the Government received large bounties also from the local authorities; and I think the proposition is not one tending to equalize them.

Mr. WADE. Mr. President, this is, in my judgment, a great question. The amount that it will take to equalize these bounties is very large. I have reflected upon the subject ever since it has been first mentioned. It will, undoubtedly, burden the Government somewhat to equalize these bounties; and yet I cannot persuade myself, notwithstanding all the difficulties that may accrue to the country in consequence of their payment, that they ought not to be paid. There is no Government in the world yet that has done entire justice to its soldiery, in my judgment.

Now, sir, when this war broke out, all of us adjourned and went home for the purpose, as much as anything else, of persuading our people to turn out into the field and to meet all the perils and privations of war. I was one of those that went home for that purpose. I did all I could to persuade the able-bodied men to believe that it was their duty to turn out and defend their country. As a general thing, it was not the rich, the wealthy, and the powerful that turned out. The hardships of campaigning and the perils and privations of war have no charms for those whose circumstances enable them to live at home at ease. All these burdens as a general thing fell upon those who were least able to bear them; and although it may cost considerable to pay them off generously, nevertheless they deserve it. It ought to be the peculiar province of a republican Government to see that its soldiers are paid, and paid generously and well. Who is there that has property, and lives at ease to-day, that does not feel that he owes that property and that ease to the toils, the privations, and the perils of these men who, taking their lives in their hands, went forth to meet this accursed foe of ours? Ought we not willingly to part with a portion of our means in their favor? Men do not like to part with their possessions; but if they ever were compelled to do so for any purpose that was laudable, just, right, and politic for a republican Government to do, it would be to do justice and to deal generously and bounteously with our soldiers.

I find that gentlemen here have no hesitation in rewarding with great honors and pecuniary emoluments the officers of your Army who have gone forth and done themselves honor; for honors will accumulate upon the heads of those who command your armies in the field; yea, sir, bequests will be heaped upon their heads. We find no difficulty in obtaining any amount of votes here to heap honors and emoluments upon them. That is all right; I am not here to complain of it. The man who is capable of leading your armies to victory ought to come out of it with honor, and will always be dealt with generously and bounteously. But, sir, the privations of your officer are as nothing compared to the privations and hardships of the soldier; and what a pitance does the soldier get compared to the pay you give to the officer. His merits are as great; his compensation cannot be as great; but nevertheless what it can be by taking from the property of those whose property has been defended by the soldier, it ought to share and share generously of that bounty which he has protected and saved from destruction. From all the thought I can give this subject, it seems to me, whether it comes as a great burden upon this Government or whether it does not, there is property enough when properly shared with the soldier to deal generously with him, and I cannot persuade myself that we ought not to do it. There is wealth enough in the country to do it. It will take somewhat from the property of those who have it in abundance to contribute toward this fund; but never was there a fund more meritorious than this; never was a bounty proposed to men more due to them than this. Sir, it is no gratuity. They have saved the country from ruin and destruction. But for their exertions, their perils, and their blood, you would have nothing to bestow. Let us then look the thing in the face as they looked the enemy in the face, and we shall find no difficulty and the Government will find no difficulty in doing justice to its soldiery. I am their advocate here, and I am ready to give the vote, although it may burden property, to pay off the just dues of these men.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNESS. We had better have the yeas and nays on that question.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 21, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Clark, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Grimes, Guthrie, Henderson, Johnson, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Riddle, Sherman, Sprague, Van Winkle, Willey, and Williams—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Cresswell, Edmunds, Foster, Harris, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Poland, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, Wilson, and Yates—18.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cragin, Dixon, Fessenden, Kirkwood, McDougall, Norton, Saulsbury, Stewart, and Wright—9.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to add to the eighth section of the amendment:

Surgeons' and paymasters' stewards shall be included within the provisions of this section, and shall be entitled to the same bounty as seamen.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. The impropriety of offering such a bill as this in this shape as an amendment is apparent from the fact that we have not copies of it before us. Now, I discover by an examination of the first section of it, that in all probability its terms would not apply to a single volunteer that enlisted in my State during the war. The class of volunteers who enlisted there into the service of the United States and fought the Indians for more than a year are specially excluded by the language of the first section. When they performed that service, they supplied the place of the regular troops of the United States, or allowed the regular troops of the United States to go into the field, or to go to the East; and yet, sir, we have not a copy of the bill before us by which we can propose amendments.

Mr. LANE. It has been printed.

Mr. CONNESS. This is not the manner or way in which to present such a measure, in my judgment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to offer an amendment. I will state, before doing so, that I have had one prepared for the bill itself as an independent bill, which I will read:

That nothing contained in this act relating to bounties to soldiers, sailors, and marines shall authorize any increase of the national debt of the United States; but all expenditures of money rendered necessary by the provisions in this act for their benefit shall be drawn from the receipts of the internal revenue, and only as they exceed the current expenditures of the Government and the appropriations for the public debt.

Either that amendment or this one will have to be adopted in order to provide this immense sum:

And be it further enacted, That to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the sums herein appropriated for the payment of bounties to soldiers, he is hereby authorized to borrow upon the credit of the United States a sum sufficient for that purpose; and he is authorized to issue therefor any description of bonds authorized by the act approved April 12, 1866, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide ways and means to support the Government,' approved March 3, 1865."

I do not know that it is necessary for me to offer either of these amendments now. I can offer them at some other time, and I will withhold them until the final vote is taken on the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Military Committee, who proposes this amendment, why it is, if he proposes to equalize on the basis of eight dollars and one third per month, that he prohibits anybody from receiving any bounty under it who did not at least serve two years.

Mr. CONNESS. In that connection I will also submit a question to be answered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let him answer this first.

Mr. CONNESS. He may answer both at the same time, and thus save time. What is the reason for this proviso in the first section?

That troops known as home guards, or other volunteer troops organized for local service, which are now excluded from bounties by the rulings of the War Department, or under the terms of their enlistment, shall not participate in the bounties provided by this act or any part thereof.

I should like to know why the Senator desires to make the rulings of the War Department, which may be very unjust indeed, law by declaring them a law in this act. Under one of these rulings the troops that I have already spoken of have been excluded.

Mr. NYE. I should like to inquire at the same time of the chairman what he understands by the term "organized for local service."

Mr. WILSON. I will answer the Senators. During the war there were small bodies of men raised for local purposes, and in some cases they were called "home guards." I believe we had one or two companies raised in Massachusetts of that kind, who were sent into the harbors and scattered up and down the country. There were small collections of men of that kind. I think this proviso will exclude but a very few men.

Mr. CONNESS. Then the exclusion had better not be made if it excludes but a few men.

Mr. WILSON. I think it will exclude but very few, indeed.

Mr. CONNESS. Then I will submit an amendment to the amendment in that regard.

Mr. WILSON. We have by legislation authorized the payment of bounty to the men who were raised in Missouri as home guards and who went into the service of the United States, and we have also authorized it to be paid to the three Indian regiments that were raised. I do not think this proviso will cover a great number.

Mr. CONNESS. Then I submit an amendment to the amendment to strike out the proviso to the first section.

Mr. NYE. If the Senator from California will allow me, I wish to make one more inquiry of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. I should like to know whether the troops raised in the Territory of Nevada—we raised between one thousand and eleven hundred—who were ordered to Fort Bridger, in Utah, come within this provision.

Mr. WILSON. They do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California proposes to amend the amendment by striking out the proviso to the first section, which will be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Provided, That troops known as home guards, or other volunteer troops organized for local service, which are now excluded from bounties by the rulings of the War Department or under the terms of their enlistment, shall not participate in the bounties provided by this act or any part thereof; but this exclusion shall not apply to those voluntarily legalized as mustered into the three years' service of the United States under an act making an appropriation for completing the defenses of Washington, and for other purposes, approved February 13, 1862.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state to the Senator from California that if that proviso is stricken out the vote will extend the bounty to all the Ohio men, all the Indiana men, all the Morgan men, of Kentucky, and I do not know how many hundreds of thousands more.

Mr. CONNESS. Did they not do good service?

Mr. SHERMAN. I know; but they ought not to get bounties. If that proviso is stricken out, it will take millions upon millions.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator and myself are looking at this from different stand-points now. The Senator naturally enough desires to save money to the Treasury. I do not wonder at that. This professes to be an equalization of bounties. Now, if troops went into that service, and they took all the risks of war, and all the dangers of war, and a very disagreeable service, I know of no reason why they are not entitled to the bounty. The Senator will observe that under this proviso a great many are excluded. I move to strike it out because I do not know how to separate them. It is brought in here at this time without time to examine it closely. The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has informed us that this will exclude but a comparatively few men; because, it will be noticed, in the latter part of the clause it is provided that this exclusion shall not apply to those volunteers legalized under a certain act, so that its application is not as wide as it might seem to be.

Mr. SUMNER. If the Senator will give way I will move an adjournment. ["Oh, no."]

Mr. CONNESS. I do not think the Senate will agree with the Senator if he moves an adjournment.

Mr. SUMNER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope we shall get through with this bill.

Mr. SUMNER. We cannot.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am opposed to adjourning. I want to get through with the bill.

The motion was not agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 14; noes 17.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts ought not to be adopted until it has more consideration; and the suggestion I make is an argument against attempting to place a piece of legislation involving so much as this does upon an appropriation bill as an amendment. Now, sir, I am not prepared to say that I will or will not vote for a bill equalizing the bounties as an independent proposition, but I think it is clearly improper to attach to this appropriation bill a proposition of this magnitude, one that needs careful consideration in every respect; and a feature of the bill presents itself here which shows that it has not been properly matured and considered. In the State which I have the honor to represent there were, during the war, three regiments of volunteers raised. They were engaged in the service of the United States; they were engaged in campaigns against the Indians of the frontier; they were subjected to hard and perilous service; many of them lost their lives; many of them have been disabled.

Mr. WILSON. How long were they in the service?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not remember how long they were in the service, but they were raised for three years' service. They were raised for local service. They were raised for the purpose of protecting the frontier and suppressing Indian hostilities. They were not raised for the purpose of taking part in the suppression of the rebellion. This first section provides—

That to each and every soldier who served in the armies of the United States in the late war of the rebellion, without distinction of color or race and who has been, or who may be hereafter honorably discharged therefrom, there shall be paid, except as hereinafter specified, eight and one third dollars per month for each and every month of service rendered.

And then there is a proviso which excludes—

Troops known as home guards, or other volunteer troops organized for local service.

I suppose that clause would embrace the troops that were raised in the State of Oregon.

Mr. NESMITH. It would embrace all the troops raised on the Pacific coast.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They would all be excluded by that expression in this section. It seems to me that a measure framed so as to have that effect is one that will work great injustice, and so far as I am concerned I do not feel at liberty to consent to any such proposition.

Mr. WILSON. They never had any bounty.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They had State bounty.

Mr. DAVIS. I think, sir, that a bill of some sort to equalize bounties ought to pass, but it is a most extensive, complicated, and difficult subject. It certainly, I think, in its importance and complexity requires due consideration in a separate measure. Therefore, although I am in favor of a judicious and just bill to equalize the bounties to our soldiers, I am utterly opposed to attaching this subject to the appropriation bill now under consideration. I shall vote for the best amendments that are offered to the proposition, and ultimately I shall vote against attaching the subject of the equalization of bounties to this bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Senator from California will not accomplish anything that he thinks he will accomplish by striking out this proviso. I am satisfied that under the ruling of the War Department he will accomplish nothing, and I have had some experience on that subject.

Mr. CONNESS. Then I will withdraw my amendment, and let us come to a vote on the main question.

Mr. SHERMAN. The better way is to vote down the original amendment.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not know why the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs introduced here the words "without distinction of color or race;" for, in the first place, he says that "to each and every soldier who served in the armies of the United States" the bounty shall be paid. After using those general words, why introduce the words "without distinction of color or race?" Is the black man not a soldier, because of his "color?" Why introduce these words "without distinction of color or race?" into everything? How long is it to be continued? I expect if I live for seventy-five years to come to have "color or race" running through, not my recollections and memories merely, but through my every-day life.

Mr. COWAN. I have simply a word to say. I think the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa was fatal to this whole proposition, as it was right and proper that it should be. This is an attempt to equalize bounties among our soldiers. Well, if you undertake to equalize the bounties, you must take into the account all the bounties they have received, and that has been done by that amendment. But in avoiding Scylla we run upon Charybdis. The honorable Senator from Vermont showed that very clearly. Are we to tax those States which did pay their full proportion of bounties to their soldiers in order to make up for those States which did not? In my State, very much in the condition of Vermont, we paid large bounties and raised large relief funds. Now, shall we be taxed to make up the deficit which occurred by the negligence or default of other States? Certainly not. It is utterly unjust and unfair to tax a State which has paid her full share, or to tax the county or the township or the town or the individual.

The honorable Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRIMES] says "not default or negligence, but excess of patriotism." Well, if we are to pay for that excess of patriotism at this late day, I should like to be very well assured of it. We thought it was an excess of patriotism to pay upon the counter, upon the nail. If Iowa chose to postpone the day of payment, we have no objection that she shall pay now if she will.

But, Mr. President, there is another general objection to this project, which in my mind is equally fatal to it, and that is, its utter and total impossibility. When you come to contemplate the magnitude of the subject, the idea of adjusting the equities—because that is what you want to get at, not to equalize the bounties but to adjust the equities between the nation generally, not the nation particularly, the United States and the individual, but between the United States, the States, the counties, the towns, the boroughs, the cities and the individual—the idea cannot be carried out. Think of it for one moment; think of the magnitude of that task, and think of the difficulties that stare you in the face at every foot of the way when you attempt to adjust the equities between a million of men and half a dozen of employers. How is it to be done? It is utterly and totally impossible, and in attempting it you will do wrong to just as many soldiers as you will benefit by the operation; you imperil the Treasury of the country; you impose burdens upon innocent people, people who have paid heretofore their full share of the burdens of the country, and what do you gain? I am told that not one tenth of this appropriation will ever go into the pockets of the soldiers. These claims are now in the hands of brokers and speculators of all kinds, who ever since the war closed have been buying up the discharges of the soldiers in order that they might come in for some share in an appropriation of this kind.

There is one law on this subject which I believe I would cheerfully vote for, and that is a law declaring that we would, at some time or other, pay assignees of these discharges; and after all the discharges had been assigned, then I would vote for another law to declare that we would not pay them. That, perhaps, would throw the burden upon the right shoulders.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Several SENATORS. Oh, no; let us vote.

The question being put, the motion was not agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 17, noes 20.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to offer an amendment to come in at the end of the first section of the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. BROWN. I suggest whether it would not be better to take the sense of the Senate on the amendment as it stands; we can perfect it afterward when the bill comes into the Senate, if it shall be adopted.

Mr. HENDERSON. Very well; I withdraw my proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now repeat the question which I had the honor to submit to the honorable chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs a few moments ago, and to which I have not yet received an answer. I want to know why it is that this amendment of his appears to provide against allowing a bounty of eight and one third dollars a month, or any other sum, to soldiers unless they served at least two years, or if the language of the thirteenth line of the second section is to be construed literally, why it is that he prohibits any soldier who has served more than two years from having any bounty at all. Here in the list of prohibitions, in the description of those who are prohibited from having any bounty, I find this language:

And no bounty whatever shall be paid to any soldier who has deserted from the service, nor to any soldier who was a captured prisoner of war at the time of enlistment, or to any soldier who has been discharged at his own request, unless for transfer to the Navy, or for the purpose of accepting promotion or appointment in the Army or Navy or after two years' service, or who has been discharged at the request of parents, guardians, or other persons, or on the ground of minority.

It is open to a little doubt upon the face of it whether that language, properly construed, means that no soldier who served less than two years shall have anything, or whether it means, as it literally reads, that no soldier who served more than two years shall have anything. I should be glad to be informed, first, what that means, and second, why it is inserted at all.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator will find that every month of service, if it be but one month, is paid for by this provision, eight dollars and one third a month. The clause to which he refers is the clause containing exceptions, and it is "and no bounty whatsoever shall be paid to any soldier who has deserted"—if the soldier has deserted he cannot receive any part of this bounty—"nor to any soldier who was a captured prisoner of war"—that is, a rebel who entered into our service—"nor to any soldier who has been discharged at his own request, unless for transfer to the Navy or for the purpose of accepting promotion or appointment in the Army or Navy or after two years' service." That is the meaning of that provision.

Mr. GRIMES. What is the meaning?

Mr. WILSON. It is a very plain provision. It is that no bounty shall be paid to any soldier who has been discharged at his own request, unless for transfer to the Navy or for the purpose of accepting promotion or appointment in the Army or Navy or after two years of service. If a man asked to be discharged for his own account, under two years of service, he gets nothing. If he served two years we give him the bounty, because we think two years is so long a time that after he has served that period he ought not to lose the entire bounty. This clause as to two years, in this place, only applies to those who themselves asked to be discharged.

There has been great criticism made on this measure, and I wish simply to say one word in reply to it. The Senator from Oregon spoke of it. Let me tell him that this measure has been studied and written carefully. It is one of the best drawn bills presented to the Senate this year from any committee. After being drawn up here it went through the hands and received the careful and thorough revision of the Paymaster General of the Army. It then went under the revision of Mr. Brodhead, of the Treasury Department, then under the eye of the Secretary of War, and through the hands of some six or seven of the best informed men in the various Departments. It was specially discussed and considered in reference to its provisions concerning those Departments.

The object was not to take into account troops that had been temporarily raised for local purposes. Some say there will be a large number excluded by that provision, but I do not think there will be a great many.

The Senator from Pennsylvania spoke about equalization. Let me tell the Senator that this measure is one of absolute equalization. That is as clearly demonstrable as any proposition in Euclid. It is based on the highest bounty ever paid by the Government of the United States, $8 33 a month. We accept that as the basis, and on that theory the bounty of the Federal Government is made equal in every case.

Now, it is said we are to equalize it in regard to local bounties. I say $8 33 a month is not the measure, if you include not only the bounty of the Federal Government but the bounties of the State governments as well. On that basis, instead of the measure being $8 33 per month, it should be at least twenty-five dollars. During the first two years and a half of the war we paid at the rate of $100 for three years' service. The early men who enlisted got but little from the local authorities; but after the Federal Government offered $300 for volunteers and $400 for veterans, the State authorities and other local authorities carried up the bounties on their part to $300 or $400 and in some cases to $500, so that the men enlisted during the last eighteen months of the war got their $300 United States bounty, while the men enlisted at the beginning of the war got, many of them, but $100 bounty for three years' service.

Mr. COWAN. If I understand the position of the Senator from Massachusetts, he is speaking now of the original measure and not of this proposition as it has been amended by the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. WILSON. Certainly.

Mr. COWAN. That contemplates, if I understand the Senator, merely to adjust the equities between the United States and the soldier, without going further.

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. COWAN. Then I would ask how the honorable Senator distinguishes between the States and the municipal communities and the United States. Are they not all one and the same? And if the equities are to be adjusted at all, does it not follow as a matter of necessity that you must include all these various parts of the general whole? Would it be fair to simply take the equities between the United States and the soldiers and throw out the others?

Mr. WILSON. So far as the Federal Government and the soldier are concerned, I think it would be fair; but allow me to say to the Senator that the difficulty of taking into account the local bounties is so great that I do not believe we can take them into account.

Now I wish to say another word. The men who have a claim in equity for the equalization of bounties are the men who enlisted from April, 1861, to the 17th of October, 1863, during the first two years and a half of the war. They enlisted for $100 bounty for three years' service. They are the only men, I think, who have any claim in equity upon us, because all enlisted after October 17, 1863, with perhaps a very few exceptions, received the large bounty of $300 from the Government, or $400 if they were veterans, and they received also large local bounties.

Now, I will read a provision that I should prefer to anything which has been presented, and which, I think, will reach the case fully as far as the Federal Government is concerned:

That to each and every soldier who enlisted into the service of the United States for a period not less than two years during the war, and who has received or is entitled to receive $100 bounty and no more, there shall be paid an additional bounty of $100; and any soldier who has been discharged on account of wounds received in battle, and the widow or heirs of any soldier who has died in the service of the United States, shall be paid the bounty hereby provided the same as though such soldier had served the full term of enlistment.

That would give to every soldier who enlisted for $100 bounty for three years and who got that bounty, who complied with the law and the rules and regulations and got his $100, an additional $100. It is clear and well defined. I prefer this to the other proposition as it has been amended.

Mr. COWAN. Then the thing should be called by its right name. That is not an equalization of bounties at all; it is an addition to bounties before received, and has no element of equality about it, because men who received the largest bounty would as well be entitled to this $100 as those who received but $100 from the United States. This is entirely a different proposition, and one which I think ought to be well considered before it is hurried through the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that now the very fact that he is compelled to suggest amendments to his own proposition shows that we are not prepared to consider this measure on this bill.

Mr. WILSON. I only read it as a proposition. I do not offer it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest that we had better take a vote on the proposition before us, reject it, and let it come up again for future consideration. It is so late to-night that we are all weary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not too late to see that what is necessary and proper should be done. Now, I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs—I assume that he is one of the numerous gentlemen who have had a hand in this pie—why it is that our gallant soldiers who were taken prisoners and were languishing in prisons and lost their health and almost their lives, and came home skeletons; or those who had the malaria in the swamps down here and were discharged on account of sickness and not on account of wounds received in battle, are not provided for.

Mr. WILSON. I will say to the Senator that they got their pay for the time they served the country, and they got their bounty for the time they served.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So do those who were wounded.

Mr. WILSON. But these men by the ruling of the Government have never had any bounty.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So much the more reason why they should have it now.

Mr. WILSON. Men who retired wounded received bounty, and men who retired for sickness, whether real or pretended, whether a sickness for which they ought to retire, or a sickness growing out of disease before they entered the service, have never received any bounty, and we now propose to give them bounty for the time they served. If they served two years they get two years' bounty, but nothing after that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why not?

Mr. WILSON. It is so difficult to tell who retired on account of sickness justly and who not; but there is no difficulty in telling about a wounded man.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why is it any more difficult in regard to bounty than it is under the pension laws?

Mr. WILSON. At any rate it is so difficult that the Government has never yet allowed any bounty for them, and nobody has ever proposed to give any, and this is the only chance they have to get any bounty at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We are the Government.

Mr. WILSON. I mean Congress. The Department have never paid these men anything. In the beginning of the war, for the first six or eight or perhaps twelve months of the war, hundreds and thousands and tens of thousands went out of the service who ought not to have gone out and who could not have got out during the last two years. They let almost anybody go out at first. Now, the question is, are you to give a bounty to those men for a longer time than they served? Will you treat them as you do the wounded men who could not serve you? There are cases, I admit the fact, of men who retired on account of sickness, who ought to have bounty up to the end, but it is so difficult to confine it to those cases that it is an impracticable thing to do.

Mr. GRIMES. I suppose the expression, "nor to any soldier who was a captured prisoner of war at the time of enlistment," refers to the few regiments raised among the rebel prisoners at Rock Island and Fort Delaware.

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts on behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs, as amended.

Mr. LANE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOWARD, (when his name was called.) On this question I agreed to pair off with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. FESSENDEN,] who is absent in consequence of ill health. I should vote in the affirmative on this question, and he would vote in the negative if he were here.

Mr. MORRILL, (when his name was called.) I should vote in favor of the amendment, but I have paired off with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. JOHNSON,] who was obliged to leave the Hall a short time ago.

The Secretary concluded the call of the roll. Mr. HENDRICKS, (who had voted in the affirmative.) I ask permission of the Senate to withdraw my vote. I forgot at the time I voted that I had paired off with the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. GUTHRIE.] He is against the measure, as an amendment to this bill, and I am for it.

No objection being made, leave was granted to withdraw the vote.

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Creswell, Grimes, Henderson, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Trumbull, Wade, Willey, Wilson, and Yates—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Clark, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Edmunds, Foster, Harris, McDougall, Morgan, Nesmith, Poland, Riddle, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Van Winkle, and Williams—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cragin, Dixon, Fessenden, Guthrie, Hendricks, Howard, Johnson, Morrill, Norton, Nye, Saulsbury, and Wright—12.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOWARD. I desire to move an amendment.

Mr. CONNESS. If the Senator will give way I will move an adjournment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope we shall go on and finish the bill to-night.

The motion to adjourn was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 22, noes 15; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, July 24, 1866.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

On motion of Mr. ELIOT the reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. FINCK. I ask unanimous consent of the House to record my vote on the Fenian resolution yesterday.

The SPEAKER. By the rule of the House it cannot be done.

Mr. FINCK. I wish to state, then, that if I had been present I should have voted for both resolutions offered yesterday on that subject. I was unavoidably absent.

PORT OF CALAIS, MAINE.

Mr. ELIOT. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report a bill to authorize the entry and clearance of vessels at the port of Calais.

The SPEAKER. This is in accordance with the leave granted by the House the other day at the request of the chairman of the committee, [Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois.]

The bill was read a first and second time. It provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may authorize the collector of customs at the port of Calais, Maine, to enter and clear vessels and perform such other official acts as the Secretary of the Treasury may think advisable.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WEIGHING OF EXPORTS.

Mr. ELIOT, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back House bill No. 480, to provide for and to regulate the weighing of exports, and for other purposes.

The bill was read. It provides that on all weighable articles on which drawback or return duty is allowed there shall be levied and collected from the several ports three cents per hundred pounds, to be returned by the weighers. It also abolishes the office of measurer at New York, whose duties shall be performed by the weighers. It also regulates the salary of the weighers.

Mr. DAVIS. Do I understand that this bill abolishes the office of inspector?

Mr. ELIOT. Not the inspectors, but the measurers are abolished, because all their duties are transferred to the weighers.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

On motion of Mr. PRICE, by unanimous consent, the Committee on the Pacific Railroad was discharged from the further consideration of bill of the Senate No. 20, granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast, and the same was laid upon the table.

INSPECTORS OF MERCHANDISE.

Mr. ELIOT, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back bill of the Senate No. 39, to amend the act in relation to officers employed in the examination of imported merchandise in the district of New York, with sundry amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WRECK OF THE SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. ELIOT, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back, with an amendment, joint resolution of the Senate No. 31, manifesting the sense of Congress toward the officers and seamen of the vessels, and others, engaged in the rescue of the officers and soldiers of the Army, the passengers, and the officers and crew of the steamship San Francisco from perishing with the wreck of that vessel.

Mr. ANCONA. Is this the regular order of business?

The SPEAKER. It is. Leave was granted to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] to make these reports, and in consequence of his sickness the leave was transferred to his colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ELIOT.]

Mr. ELIOT. I demand the previous question on the amendment, first yielding to my colleague on the committee [Mr. O'NEILL] to make a report upon the subject.

Mr. O'NEILL. I submit a report upon this joint resolution, and move that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to which was referred joint resolution of the Senate No. 31, "manifesting the sense of Congress toward the officers and seamen of the vessels, and others, engaged in the rescue of the officers and soldiers of the Army, the passengers, and the officers and crew of the steamship San Francisco from perishing with the wreck of that vessel," respectfully reports that the subject has had full, mature, and ample consideration. The services rendered by Captain Creighton, of the ship Three Bells, of Glasgow; Captain Stouffer, of the ship Antarctic; and Captain Low, of the bark Kilby, on the occasion of this terrible wreck, about the end of the year 1853, and their voluntary and magnanimous conduct in saving the lives of some six hundred soldiers of the United States with the passengers and crew of the ill-fated steamship, in the estimation of the committee indeed deserve some marked manifestation of the American Congress. The joint resolution passed the Senate unanimously on the 20th of April last, and proposed that "valuable gold medals with suitable devices" should be presented to each of these noble captains, and that the President should reward them and the officers and crews of their vessels and such other persons as aided in the rescue, by distributing among them, in such manner as he might deem expedient, the sum of $50,000, and recommended that such an amount of money be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for carrying the joint resolution into effect.

Your committee concurs with the Senate in the presentation of the medals, but does not adopt the views of that body in the appropriation of so large an amount as $50,000, although that appropriation was adopted by the unanimous vote of Senators, without a division. A similar appropriation passed the Senate in the Thirty-Third Congress, but the joint resolution failed to reach the House for want of time. Your committee, feeling that the justice of a suitable reward, for such disinterested actions should be fully appreciated, especially in a case like the one under consideration, where these captains not only risked their own lives but the lives of their crews and the safety of their vessels, recommends that in addition to the medals for the captains, there be given to each of the captains, namely, Captain Creighton, Captain Stauffer, and Captain Low, the sum of $7,500; to each of the mates of the respective vessels the sum of $500; and to each man and boy of the respective crews the sum of $100; these amounts to go, in the event of the decease of the respective captains, mates, men, and boys, first to their widows respectively, if they be living, or in the event of their death, then to their children respectively, or those surviving neither widow or children, then to their respective fathers, or if the fathers be not living then to their respective mothers.

The circumstances attending the wreck of the San Francisco were perhaps the most distressing known in the annals of the ocean. She was crowded with some seven or eight hundred passengers, five or six hundred of whom were officers and soldiers of the United States Army, with their wives and families, on their way to California and the Pacific coast. She left the port of New York in the month of December, 1853, and on the 24th of that month was overtaken by a most terrible storm, which continued without interruption twelve or thirteen days. The steamer became unmanageable and entirely at the mercy of the winds and waves. At about eight o'clock in the evening the sea broke over her, and carried to the depths of the ocean nearly one hundred and eighty of the soldiers and passengers, with some of the women and children. It was at this time that Colonel J. M. Washington, Major George Taylor, Captain H. B. Field, and Lieutenant Smith, all distinguished officers of the Army, were lost. Subsequently some sixty or seventy others of the soldiers, passengers, and crew died from injuries received during the storm and from exhaustion caused by their great distress and unremitted labor.

Upon the 1st day of January, 1854, Captain Creighton, of the bark Three Bells; Captain Stauffer, of the ship Antarctic; and Captain Low, of the bark Kilby, hove in sight. Their vessels had been scarcely able to outride the storm. Their crews had been night and day for several days at the pumps to keep them afloat, and their stores and water had been so much reduced by lightening the ships that starvation literally stared them in the face. Fortunately for the San Francisco her signals were seen and her guns of distress heard by these captains, who, with all the humanity and self-sacrificing spirit for which sailors are distinguished, "stood off and on" the wreck for six consecutive days until the storm had abated and they could so communicate with the sinking hulk as to give hope and encouragement to her desponding hundreds who momentarily expected to go to the bottom. The words of Captain Creighton, "Be of good cheer, we will stand by you," should never be forgotten. Captain Stauffer and Captain Low in the same spirit, "stood by," and the Three Bells, the Antarctic, and the Kilby, all of them so injured by the storm, actually filling with water at the rate of almost nine inches an hour, never left the wreck until over five hundred survivors of the perils of this widely spread storm were saved and eventually landed at New York and Liverpool. Many a poor sailor of each of these three vessels lost his life by his efforts in behalf of the sufferers of the San Francisco, and so crippled were the crews that port was not made for many, many days after these humane acts had been performed.

Your committee submit the amendments as indicated, and respectfully urges the House to do this eminent act of justice to the heroic captains, mates, and crews of these vessels.

By order of the committee:

CHARLES O'NEILL.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. ELIOT. I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INSPECTORS OF MERCHANDISE—AGAIN.

Mr. ELIOT. The House has just passed bill of the Senate No. 39, to amend the act relating to officers employed in the examination of imported merchandise in the district of New York. Since the passage of the bill I have received a note from the Secretary of the Treasury recommending an amendment of the bill. I move, therefore, a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was passed; in order that I may offer the amendment now.

By unanimous consent, the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed were reconsidered.

Mr. ELIOT. I move to amend by adding the following section:

And be it further enacted, That all aids to the revenue or others performing the duties of inspectors be paid the same per diem compensation as inspectors of customs.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I would like to know how much that is, and what change it makes in the law.

Mr. ELIOT. It is four dollars a day.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. What change does it make?

Mr. STEVENS. It is now five dollars a day for one year.

Mr. ELIOT. It continues it now at the same rate. It was to have been put in another bill, but was inadvertently omitted.

Mr. STEVENS. We did prolong the time so far as inspectors are concerned.

The amendment was agreed to:

The bill, as amended, was then read the third time and passed.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. W. J. McDonald, its Chief Clerk, returned, in pursuance of the request of the House, Senate bill No. 285, granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley railroad and its extension to Red river, with the House amendments to the same.

DANIEL LUCAS.

Mr. TAYLOR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Daniel Lucas; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read at length. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Daniel Lucas, of Plymouth, Massachusetts, formerly a private in company E, third United States infantry, on the roll of invalid pensions, at the rate to which he may be entitled under the pension laws.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. TAYLOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHARLES M. POTT.

Mr. TAYLOR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to pay Charles M. Pott a pension of fifteen dollars per month; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read at length. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to pay Charles M. Pott, late of company K, one hundred and seventy-ninth Pennsylvania militia, the same pension as is provided for persons having lost one hand in the military service of the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. TAYLOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

QUINCY A. MAY.

Mr. TAYLOR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Quincy A. May; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read at length. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to pay to Quincy A. May, company H, eighty-third Illinois volunteers, a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month from and after the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. TAYLOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARION M. BUXTON.

Mr. VAN AERNAM, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Marion M. Buxton; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read at length. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to pay to Marion M. Buxton, widow of James H. Buxton, late an ensign in the United States Navy, a pension out of the naval pension fund at the rate furnished by law to officers of his rank, the pension to be continued to the minor children in case of her death or remarriage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VAN AERNAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SCHENCK. I must insist upon the regular order. This irregular firing enables some of the committees to get rid of their business. If the House will adopt a resolution to enable all the committees to be called in regular order in the evening as well as the morning sessions, then we can get rid of our business. I send to the Clerk's desk a resolution on the subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That in addition to the regular call of committees in the morning hour, the call of committees for reports shall proceed continuously in the evening sessions of the House, after the business now on the Speaker's table shall have been disposed of, and until the present call of all the committees shall have been concluded.

Mr. KASSON. I must object to that unless it contains one other element in it, and that is, that each committee shall have the privilege of reporting but one measure. Otherwise the benefit of this rule will be confined to two or three committees, who will take up the balance of the session.

Mr. SCHENCK. I do not think this objection comes with a very good grace from gentlemen whose committees have been already called. There are committees who have not been called for months, and now their drawers are crowded with reports.

Mr. DRIGGS. It is suggested that each committee have half an hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that, as soon as the special order at the evening session—bills on the Speaker's table—shall be disposed of, there will be, in accordance with the previous order of the House, an hour at each evening session for business of the morning hour.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask more than that. I propose that we shall not only have an hour at the evening session, but that, after business on the Speaker's table shall have been disposed of, the remainder of the evening session shall be devoted to reports of committees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] objects.

Mr. DRIGGS. The gentleman does not object, if each committee be confined to half an hour.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If this is to interfere with the regular call of committees, I must object to it; but if it is in addition to the regular call of committees, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that committees called at the day session, being entitled to an hour, would stand in a much better position than committees called at the evening session and having but half an hour.

Mr. SCHENCK. Gentlemen will observe that my proposition will not interfere with the present call of the morning hour. The language of the resolution is—

That in addition to the regular call of committees in the morning hour, the call of the committees for reports shall proceed continuously in the sessions of the House, after the business now on the Speaker's table shall have been disposed of, until the present call of committees shall have been completed.

I propose, if gentlemen insist upon it, to add the words "allowing one hour to each committee;" though I think that when gentlemen have been occupying days with the reports of their committees, it comes with a bad grace for them to insist on this restriction.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not see how we are to get through with the special orders if we adopt this proposition. The bills which are matured and before the House will all be pushed aside.

Mr. SCHENCK. Not at all. Gentlemen will have the whole of the day session for such business. My resolution applies only to the evening session.

Mr. STEVENS. If the morning hour of the day session be abolished, I will consent to the proposition.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I call for the regular order.

JAMES P. JOHNSON.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill No. 874, an act for the relief of James P. Johnson, was referred to the Committee of Claims.

The bill, which was read, provides that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and required to pay to James P. Johnson, of Iowa, the sum of $202 50, in full payment for his services as veterinary surgeon in the fourth Iowa cavalry.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question then recurred, Shall the bill be referred to the Committee of Claims? which was decided in the negative.

Mr. ANCONA. I desire to reserve my right to make the point of order that this bill must, under the rule, go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask the gentleman to hear the report read. When he learns the circumstances of the case, I think he will not object.

The report was read.

Mr. ANCONA. I make the point of order that the bill must go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I appeal to the gentleman to withdraw that point of order. The papers upon which the report is based show that this claim is indorsed by the Secretary of War, as well as by the colonel of the regiment and the general commanding the brigade.

Mr. ANCONA. I have no doubt as to the merits of the case. The report satisfies me on that point. But I do not see why this claim should be preferred to others of equal merit.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The bill simply proposes to pay a man who performed service in the Army, and who cannot get his pay because of a mere mistake in the voucher.

Mr. ANCONA. I will withdraw the point; and I will see whether other gentlemen appreciate the favor.

Mr. RADFORD. There are a thousand cases similar to this, and I do not see why this should be preferred.

Mr. WILSON of Iowa, demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REORGANIZATION OF TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill, in the nature of a substitute for House bill No. 696, to reorganize the Treasury Department, and to fix the pay of its officers; which was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

MILLER AND ULRIK.

Mr. MOORHEAD, from the same committee, moved that the committee be discharged from the consideration of the memorial of Miller and Ulrick, and that the same be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

JAMES POOL.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill No. 311, for the relief of James Pool was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

A bill for the payment of this claimant was passed by the Senate in 1861, on the report of Senator WADE, which I now hold in my hand. I was requested to look at the case, and did so and became satisfied it was a just claim and ought to be paid. It failed in the House. The Senate again passed it in 1862, and it again failed to pass the House. It has once more passed the Senate, and I think there will be no objection when the report has been read. The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to pay to James Pool $1,287 10 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, provided that $487 50 of said amount shall be paid out of any annuities or moneys payable to the Senecas or Shawnee Indians, if there be any, and if none, then the whole sum to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. That is much less than was provided in the bill of 1861, when, if it were not a just claim, it would not have been passed.

I ask the Clerk to read Senator WADE'S report.

The Clerk read as follows:

"It appears that the petitioner was employed by the United States, under the provisions of sundry treaties, as a blacksmith for the Delaware, Shawnee, and Seneca tribes of Indians, from August, 1823, until November, 1838.

"During portions of this period it became necessary to employ an assistant or striker, and Mr. Pool employed a striker and paid him out of his private funds, under the assurance, as is alleged, of the commissioners or Indian agents, that the money should be refunded as soon as appropriations could be obtained. In consequence of the death of Governor Stokes and Captain Vaishon, the Indian agents, the proper estimates and vouchers failed to be forwarded, and although the claim was repeatedly and urgently pressed upon the Government, it was not paid until 1852.

"In 1851 he renewed the application, but there being no fund out of which he could be paid, a clause was inserted in the deficiency bill for that year (Thirty-Second Congress, first session, page 19,) 'for payment for services of blacksmith and for use of tools for the Seneca tribes of Indians, from July 1 to November 8, 1838, $213 33.' And in the deficiency bill for 1852, (Thirty-Second Congress, second session, page 186,) 'for the services of a striker in the shop of the Delaware Indians, from August 1, 1823, to August 31, 1826, and for the services of a smith and striker in the shop of the Senecas and Shawnees of Lewiston, from 17th November, 1823, to 15th February, 1838, deducting all amounts paid for such service during said period, and for balance due for services on Seneca mill-dam, as estimated by the proper Department, $2,229.'

"Both of the above sums were found by the accounting officers to be due to the memorialist, and were paid to him.

"He now asks that interest may be allowed him from the time the sums became due until provision was made by Congress for their payment.

"The chiefs of the tribes certify that the payment was demanded, at the time, of Major Graham, the Indian agent, and that he had no funds in his hands out of which he could pay it.

"The memorialist further states that this money was actually paid out by him at the time; that he expected immediate reimbursement; that upon making the demand it was found that there was no fund applicable to that object, although the treaty stipulations with those tribes required the expenditure; that the successive deaths of Governor Stokes and Captain Vaishon, Indian commissioners, prevented the proper application being made at the time for the appropriation; and that his laborious duties, and the care of a family dependent on his labor for support in that remote section of country, together with the repeated promises of successive agents that his case should be attended to, prevented his coming to Washington to demand payment at an earlier day. When he did come the indebtedness was admitted by the Department, and an appropriation was asked and granted to pay the principal, but no allowance was made for interest."

The House divided; and there were—ayes 80, noes 10; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER, under the rules, ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. JOHNSON, and Mr. HARDING of Illinois.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I make the point of order that the bill makes an appropriation, and must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have done my duty.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Mr. CONKLING moved to reconsider the votes by which the business on the Speaker's table last evening was referred to the several committees; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REIMBURSEMENT OF MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. DAWES. I call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate joint resolution (S. R. No. 121) providing for the auditing of the accounts of the State of Massachusetts for moneys expended during the war for coast defense, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion to refer was disagreed to.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and requested to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, two commissioners who shall examine into the claim and audit the accounts of the State of Massachusetts for moneys expended for coast defense during the war, and shall make a full and complete report thereon to Congress at its next session.

Mr. DAWES. I move the following substitute which conforms to the bill prepared by the committee. It strikes out the appointment of commissioners and leaves the Secretary of War to do this work:

That the Secretary of War be authorized and required to settle with the proper authorities of the State of Massachusetts for expenses incurred by that State for coast defenses during the war, and to report the amount found to be justly due to said State on said account to Congress in December next.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution, as amended, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has now commenced, and the first business in order is the consideration of the bill reported on Thursday last during the morning hour by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. McCULLOUGH.]

CHESAPEAKE AND POTOMAC CANAL COMPANY.

The House accordingly resumed the consideration of Senate bill No. 281, to authorize the Chesapeake Bay and Potomac River Tidewater Canal Company to enter the District of Columbia and extend their canal to the Anacostia river at any point above Benning's bridge.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Is the gentleman who has charge of this bill present?

The SPEAKER. He is not.

Mr. INGERSOLL. What is the condition of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering it to be read a third time.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. INGERSOLL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced to the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 178) in reference to the Dismal Swamp Canal Company; and

An act (H. R. No. 729) to change the port of entry in Puget Sound.

The message further informed the House that the Senate had passed the following House bills, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (H. R. No. 609) to constitute Omaha and Nebraska City, in the Territory of Nebraska, and St. Paul, in Minnesota, ports of delivery; and

An act (H. R. No. 728) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue certificates of registry or enrollment and license to certain vessels.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 400) to fix the compensation of certain collectors of customs, and for other purposes;

An act (S. No. 334) to prevent the wearing of sheath knives by American seamen;

An act (S. No. 399) relative to collection districts in North Carolina;

An act (S. No. 445) for the relief of R. P. Parrott;

An act (S. No. 419) repealing an act entitled "An act repealing certain provisions of law concerning seamen on board public and private vessels of the United States," approved June 28, 1864; and

An act (S. No. 446) for the relief of George W. Fish.

DANIEL WINSLOW.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back Senate bill No. 149, for the relief of Daniel Winslow, with a recommendation that it do pass. The bill was read. It releases the petitioner from certain judgments obtained against him in the district courts of the United States, upon failure to comply with his contract, dated September 29, 1846, with the chief of the Bureau of Provisions, to deliver at Charlestown, Massachusetts, eighteen hundred barrels of Navy beef.

Mr. SPALDING. I would like to know the reason for this.

Mr. WILSON of Iowa. I will state the case briefly. Daniel Winslow in 1846 made a contract for furnishing the United States with eighteen hundred barrels of beef at $7 87½ per barrel. Soon after the contract was made the Mexican war commenced, and the price of beef rose rapidly to fifteen dollars per barrel. Mr. Winslow continued to comply with his contract until beef reached twelve dollars, and at that time had furnished three hundred and fifty barrels upon his contract. He then failed and was unable to complete his contract. The Government subsequently bought the amount of beef at $12 or $12 50 per barrel, paying $8,061 75 more than the contract price, but not more than the market price of beef. Owing to this failure to comply with his contract Mr. Winslow has been under a cloud ever since, and has been unable to engage in any business; and to add to his calamity, during the recent fire at Portland, Maine, what little property he had was destroyed by that fire. This bill proposes merely to relieve him from his liability under that contract.

I will state that this case has been reported on several times in the House and once or twice in the Senate. It has been recommended by the United States district attorney for the State of Maine at different times, and I believe by the Attorney General, and I certainly can see no kind of detriment to the Government in the passage of the bill. I demand the previous question.

Mr. SPALDING. This is a special act of bankruptcy; that is all. I have no objection to it.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with an amendment, bill of the Senate No. 179, in relation to the district courts of the United States in the States of California and Louisiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPALDING. I desire to inquire how this bill fixes the salaries of the judges of the district courts.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It affects only the salary of the judge of the district court of the State of Louisiana.

Mr. LE BLOND. What change does it make in the amount of salary?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It changes it from $3,500 to $4,500, and it abolishes the southern district of California and the western district of Louisiana.

Mr. LE BLOND. I understand that, but why abolish these offices? What necessity is there for it?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will state to the House that there is not business enough in the southern district of the State of California to warrant the continuance of the district court, and consequently it should be abolished. In relation to the district in Louisiana, I will state that a memorial from the bar of Louisiana has been referred to the committee requesting that the two districts be consolidated, on the ground that it will advance the interests of the State and be more convenient for the people. The committee, therefore, recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. LE BLOND. What is to become of the judge?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. We are already rid of him. There is no judge in either of these districts.

Mr. LE BLOND. Well, if what the gentleman states is the sole object of the bill, I have no objection to it. We have had so much legislation for the purpose of getting rid of objectionable incumbents that it struck me that that might be the object of this bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. There is nothing of that kind in it.

Mr. WARD. What is the reason for increasing the judge's salary?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That amendment has been adopted, and the reason why the committee reported it was that they were satisfied that the present compensation of the judge of the district court of Louisiana, the two districts being combined, would not be sufficient.

Mr. McRUER. At present the business in the southern district of California is not very large, but the country is rapidly filling up. The people of southern California have now to travel three or four hundred miles to reach the court, and if the court for the southern district be abolished, they will be compelled to travel a hundred miles further to San Francisco, which is the distance from Monterey, where the court is now held. I trust, therefore, that the amendment so far as it affects California will not be agreed to. It costs some six or seven thousand dollars a year to maintain that court. The southern district of California is being rapidly settled, and the presumption is that the business will increase rather than diminish. Now, if the bill to reorganize the judiciary shall pass, and I understand it is about to be reported, it will increase very materially the business to be transacted. And, therefore, those who are conversant with this subject, think that this judgeship should be continued. Therefore I hope that the bill, so far as it relates to the southern district of California, will not be passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will state, in reply to what the gentleman from California [Mr. McRUER] has said, that the Committee on the Judiciary have investigated the subject of the amount of business transacted in the southern district of California. And we have come to the conclusion that there is not business enough in that district to occupy the attention of a judge for one month of the entire year. They have always stated to gentlemen who have opposed the abolition of that district, that if they will show to the committee that there is business enough there to warrant the continuance of the district we would recommend an amendment of this bill. No such showing has been made, and no such showing can be made. And therefore I hope this bill will pass.

Mr. HIGBY. I agree with my colleague [Mr. McRUER] that the time may arrive when it will be necessary to have a judicial district in the southern part of California. I recollect that during the Thirty-Eighth Congress the question came up, and information was obtained from the most authentic sources that there was very little business done in this southern district, and that it might as well be abolished as not.

Let me state one other fact: Monterey, the place where the southern district court is held, is one hundred miles from the city of San Francisco. The facilities for traveling there are as good as they are in other parts of the State. From Monterey to the southern part of the State is about four hundred miles; and people who have to go from the southern part of the State four hundred miles to Monterey, with the facilities for travel which they have, might as well go the other hundred miles to a court that can attend to all their business as to go to this court which is almost a sinecure. We want the appropriations for California to be given for good and useful purposes. And that is one reason why I favor the position taken by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I now call the previous question on this bill.

Mr. JENCKES. I understand this is a bill to decrease the judicial force of the United States, when it ought to be increased.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order pending the call for the previous question.

The question was taken upon seconding the call of the previous question; and upon a division, there were—ayes 56, noes 30; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WILSON of Iowa, and Mr. JENCKES were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 64, noes 29.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RHODE ISLAND UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back without amendment, and with a recommendation that it do pass, House bill No. 643, to alter the places of holding the circuit courts of the United States for the Rhode Island district.

The bill was read at length. The first section provides that from and after the 1st of July, 1866, the circuit courts for the district of Rhode Island shall commence and be held at the United States court-room, in the city of Providence, on the 15th of November, and the 15th of June in each year, instead of at the places heretofore established by law; provided, that when either of the days last named shall fall on Sunday, the session of said court then next to be held shall commence on the Monday next following.

The second section provides that all indictments, informations, suits, or actions, and proceedings of every kind, either of a civil or criminal nature, pending in said circuit court on the 1st of July, 1866, shall thereafter have day in court and be proceeded in, heard, tried, and determined on the days and at the place herein appointed for holding said court, in the same manner and with the same effect as if the court had been held as heretofore ordered by law.

The third section provides that all writs, suits, cognizances, and other proceedings, which shall or may be instituted, served, commenced, or begun in said court, shall be returnable at the times and place by this act provided, in the same manner and with the same effect as if the court had been held as heretofore provided by law.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

COUNTERFEITING PUBLIC SECURITIES, ETC.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 719) to punish certain crimes in relation to the public securities and currency, and for other purposes.

The bill, which was read, provides in the first section, that if any person or persons shall buy, sell, exchange, transfer, receive or deliver, any false, forged, counterfeited or altered bond, bill, certificate of indebtedness, certificate of deposit, coupon, draft, check, bill of exchange, money order, indorsement, United States note, Treasury note, circulating note, postage stamp, postage stamp note, fractional note, or other obligation or security of the United States, or circulating note of any banking association organized or acting under the laws of the United States, which has been issued or may hereafter be issued under any act of Congress heretofore passed, or which may hereafter be passed, with the intent, expectation, or belief, that the same shall or will be passed, altered, published or used as true and genuine, such person or persons so offending, shall be deemed guilty of felony, and on conviction thereof shall be imprisoned not more than fifteen years, or fined not more than $10,000, or both, at the discretion of the court.

The second section proposes to enact that it shall not be lawful to design, engrave, print, or in any manner make or execute, or to utter, issue, distribute, circulate or use, any business or professional card, notice, placard, circular, handbill, or advertisement, in the likeness or similitude of any bond, certificate of indebtedness, certificate of deposit, coupon, United States note, Treasury note, circulating note, fractional note, postage stamp note, or other obligation or security of the United States, or of any banking association organized or acting under the laws thereof, which has been or may be issued under or authorized by any act of Congress heretofore passed or which may hereafter be passed. Any person or persons offending against the provisions of this section are on conviction to be fined $1,000, to be recovered by an action of debt, one half to the use of the informer.

The third section provides that it shall not be lawful to write, print, or otherwise impress upon any bond, certificate of indebtedness, or other instrument specified in the last preceding section, any business or professional card, notice, or advertisement, or any notice or advertisement of any goods, wares, or merchandise, or of any drug or medicine, or of any invention or patent, or of any other matter or thing whatsoever; and any person or persons offending against the provisions of this section is to be subject to a penalty of $300, to be recovered by an action of debt, one half to the use of the informer.

The fourth section enacts if any person shall, without authority from the United States, take, procure, make, or cause to be taken, procured, or made, upon lead, foil, wax, plaster, paper, or any other substance or material, an impression, stamp, or imprint of, from, or by the use of, any bed-plate, bed-piece, die, roll, plate, seal, type, or other tool, implement, instrument, or thing, used or fitted, or intended to be used, in printing, stamping, or impressing, or in making other tools, implements, instruments, or things to be used, or fitted, or intended to be used, in printing, stamping, or impressing any kind or description of bond, bill, note, certificate, coupon, or other paper, obligation, security, or instrument now authorized, or hereafter to be authorized, by law, to be executed, altered, delivered, given, issued, or put in circulation by, for, or on behalf of the United States, such person shall be deemed guilty of felony, and on conviction be punished by imprisonment not more than fifteen years nor less than five years, or by fine not less than $5,000, or both, at the discretion of the court.

It is provided in the fifth section that if any person shall have in his possession, keeping, custody, or control, without authority from the United States, any imprint, stamp, or impression, taken or made upon any substance or material whatsoever, of any tool, implement, instrument, or thing used or fitted, or intended to be used, for any or either of the purposes mentioned in the last foregoing section; or if any person shall sell, give, or deliver any such imprint, stamp, or impression to any other person, such person, so offending, shall be deemed guilty of felony, and on conviction be punished by imprisonment not more than fifteen years nor less than five years, or by fine not less than $5,000, at the discretion of the court.

The sixth section proposes to enact that if any person, whether employed under the United States or not, shall, without authority from the United States, secrete within, embezzle, or take and carry away from any building, room, office, apartment, vault, safe, or other place where the same is kept, used, employed, placed, lodged, or deposited by authority of the United States, any bed-piece, bed-plate, roll, plate, die, seal, type, or other tool, implement, or thing used, or fitted to be used, in stamping or printing or in making some other tool or implement used, or fitted to be used, in stamping or printing any kind or description of bond, bill, note, certificate, coupon, postage stamp, revenue stamp, fractional currency note, or other paper, instrument, obligation, device, or document now authorized or hereafter to be authorized by law to be printed, stamped, sealed, prepared, issued, uttered, or put in circulation by or on behalf of the United States, or shall, without such authority, so secrete, embezzle, or take and carry away any paper, parchment, or other material prepared and intended to be used in the making of any or either of such papers, instruments, obligations, devices, or documents, or shall, without such authority, so secrete, embezzle, or take and carry away any paper, parchment, or other material printed or stamped, in whole or in part, and intended to be prepared, issued, or put in circulation, by or on behalf of the United States, as one of the papers, instruments, or obligations hereinbefore named or printed or stamped, in whole or in part, in the similitude of any such paper, instrument, or obligation, whether it be intended to issue or put the same in circulation or not, such person or persons so offending shall, on conviction, be punished by imprisonment not exceeding fifteen years nor less than five years, or by fine not less than $5,000, or both, at the discretion of the court.

The seventh section enacts that if any person shall take and carry away, without authority from the United States, from the place where it has been filed, lodged, or deposited, or where it may for the time being actually be kept by authority of the United States, any certificate, affidavit, deposition, written statement of facts, power of attorney, receipt, voucher, assignment, or other document, record, file, or paper prepared, fitted, or intended to be used or presented in order to procure the payment of money from or by the United States or any officer or agent thereof, or the allowance or payment of the whole or any part of any claim, account, or demand against the United States, whether the same has or has not already been so used or presented, and whether such claim, account, or demand, or any part thereof, has or has not already been allowed or paid; or if any person shall present or use or attempt to use any such document, record, file, or paper so taken and carried away, in order to procure the payment of any money from or by the United States, or any officer or agent thereof, or the allowance or payment of the whole or any part of any claim, account, or demand against the United States, such person so offending shall be deemed guilty of felony, and on conviction be imprisoned not more than fifteen years or fined not more than $10,000, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The amendment which I am directed by the committee to report is to insert after the words "postage stamps," in the eighth line of the first section, the words "revenue stamps."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. JOHNSON. The first section of this bill, if I understand it correctly, provides for punishing, by heavy penalties, any person having in his possession any forged or counterfeit money without requiring proof of any guilty knowledge. I suggest that the word "knowingly" ought to be inserted. I call for the reading of the first section.

The Clerk read the first section of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. It will be observed that this section provides a penalty for any person who undertakes to pass any forged or counterfeit security, but it requires no proof fixing guilty knowledge upon the party. It seems to me especially important that the word "knowingly" should be inserted.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think the gentleman misapprehends the language of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. I certainly listened to it with a great deal of attention.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The first section provides for the punishment of those who circulate counterfeit securities "with the intent, expectation, or belief, that the same shall or will be passed, altered, published, or used as true and genuine."

Mr. JOHNSON. Every man who disposes of a genuine security expects that.

Mr. JENCKES. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee to a fact which I mentioned to him in the early part of the session, that there is no punishment now prescribed by law for forging registers and other documents of United States courts and custom-houses; and I ask him whether he will not consent to have inserted in this bill a provision supplying this omission in our laws.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It may be very proper for us to pass a separate bill to meet the difficulty suggested by the gentleman from Rhode Island, [Mr. JENCKES;] but I think we ought not to delay the passage of this bill in order to prepare an amendment to cover that case.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee to that section with reference to having the possession of dies or stamps. I think that the objection suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania certainly applies to that section. The section, I believe, contains no words which require proof of guilty knowledge or intent.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. A die found in possession of a person not entitled to have the same raises a presumption of guilt.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I think not.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. They are to be kept in certain places, and the possession of those stamps in any other way than that provided by law ought to demand some explanation.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. A person may be put in possession without guilty knowledge.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. He does not come within the operation of this bill. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that this bill has been carefully prepared by the law officers of the Treasury Department. It was sent to the committee in a draft prepared in the Department. They have found a good deal of difficulty in enforcing the law in regard to the securities of the United States and the subjects connected therewith; and they are anxious this bill should be passed to cure the defects in the existing law.

Mr. JENCKES. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to move an amendment in reference to the forgery of records of courts of the United States.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am not prepared to accept that. I think when we are preparing a penal law it should be done with caution, and I am not prepared to say what will be the effect of the proposed amendment. The gentleman from Rhode Island has suggested this matter before. Now, let him prepare a bill and present it to us, and I have no doubt it will pass if it be all right.

Mr. JENCKES. Let me move the amendment. It is remarkable that the records of our courts can be forged, and there is no power to punish the forgery.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. As I have already said, I am not prepared at this time to accept the amendment. We ought to examine it and know its effect.

Mr. LE BLOND. Let this bill be recommended. There is doubt on this side of the House as to the language of one or two sections. If the bill does not provide that there shall be a criminal intent, as I understand from the chairman it does not, then that should be provided. Suppose a party is put clandestinely in possession of a die?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The possession of the die raises the presumption of guilt. In explanation the party may give in evidence the circumstances, and so relieve himself of guilty intent.

Mr. LE BLOND. The gentleman fails to answer my point. He is to be presumed to be guilty, and yet has not the means to prove his innocence. It was put there without his knowledge. In that way a bad man could ruin a good man.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. This bill in relation to the possession of dies and stamps makes no change whatever in the existing law. I insist on the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. ELDRIDGE demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 89, nays 25, not voting 67; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Baker, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Benjamin, Bidwell, Boutwell, Brownell, Broomall, Reader, W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Davis, Dawes, De-frees, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eakley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hubbard, Ingersoll, Kasson, Kelley, Ketcham, Koontz, Kuykendall, Laffin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Lynch, Marston, McRuer, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Pike, Plants, Price, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Seafeld, Shellabarger, Spalding, Stevens, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Winfield, and Woodbridge—89.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Hogan, Jenckes, Johnson, Kerr, Latham, Le Blond, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Ritter, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Strouse, Taber, Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, Ward, and Wright—25.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Deles R. Ashley, James M.

Ashley, Baldwin, Beaman, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Buckland, Bundy, Chandler, Cook, Cullom, Culver, Darling, Dawson, Delano, Deming, Denison, Dodge, Dumont, Gootyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hayes, Henderson, Hill, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Humphrey, Jones, Julian, Kelso, Longyear, Marshall, Marvin, McClurg, McIndoe, McKee, Noel, Patterson, Phelps, Pondray, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, John H. Rice, Rogers, Ross, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stilwell, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Upson, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, and Williams—67.

So the bill was passed.

During the roll-call,

Mr. LOAN stated that his colleague, Mr. McClurg, was detained from the House by reason of sickness.

The result having been announced as above recorded,

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HABEAS CORPUS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back House bill No. 775, amendatory of an act to amend an act entitled "An act relating to habeas corpus, and regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases," approved May 11, 1866, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was read. It provides that whenever in any suit or prosecution which has been or may be commenced in any State court, and which the defendant is authorized to have removed from said court to the circuit court of the United States, under and by virtue of the provisions of an act relating to habeas corpus and regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases, approved March 3, 1863, or by virtue of an act amendatory thereof, approved May 11, 1866, and all the acts necessary for the removal of said cause to the circuit court shall have been performed, and the defendant in any suit shall be in actual custody on process issued by said State court, it shall be the duty of the clerk of the said circuit court of the United States to issue a writ of habeas corpus cum causa; and it shall be the duty of the marshal, by virtue of the said writ of habeas corpus, to take the body of the defendant into his custody to be dealt with in said circuit court according to rules of law and the orders of the said court or of any judge thereof in vacation; and he shall file a duplicate copy of said writ of habeas corpus with the clerk of the State court in which said suit was commenced, or deliver said duplicate to the clerk of said court, and all attachments made and all bail and other security given in any suit or prosecution which has been or shall be removed from any State court to the circuit court of the United States in pursuance of law shall be and continue in like force and effect as if the same suit had proceeded to final judgment and execution in the State court.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. This bill is rendered necessary by a defect in the former act, which provides no means for removing the person of a defendant whose cause has been removed from the State court to the jurisdiction of the United States courts. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I demand the previous question on the passage.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. TRIMBLE. I demand the yeas and nays on the passage.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. TRIMBLE. I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

The bill was then passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the consideration of the banking bill.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 791) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1866, and for other purposes.

The pending question was the motion of Mr. DELANO to strike out the following paragraph:

To pay Roy Stone, of Pennsylvania, for certain buildings owned by him in Memphis, Tennessee, and which were taken possession of, used, occupied, and destroyed by and for the benefit of the forces of the United States, the sum of $12,000: Provided, That it shall first be shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War that said buildings were of the value of $12,000, and were the property of said Stone: And provided further, That this sum shall be in full satisfaction for all claims on account of said property against the United States.

On the pending motion Mr. SCOFIELD was entitled to the floor.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DELANO.] I happen to know this General Stone, and the circumstances under which the indebtedness of the United States to him originated. When the war broke out he was a resident of my district. He was a large manufacturer of lumber which he sold at Memphis, Tennessee. For purposes connected with his business there he had purchased some buildings upon the banks of the river. Just at the time the war broke out he had in the city of Memphis a large amount of lumber in the yard for sale. He left his business at home and his business at Memphis in the care of an agent, raised a company which he uniformed and equipped at his own personal expense, made some boats or skiffs, put his company on board of them, started down the Alleghany river and was mustered at Pittsburg in the United States service. That company went into the celebrated regiment called the Bucktails, of Pennsylvania, probably the most celebrated of any in our State.

From being a captain of the company which he himself raised he rose to the command of the regiment, and led it through many battles in the Peninsular campaign. He then came back to Pennsylvania and raised a brigade, and was made a brigadier general, and was put in command of the brigade known as the "Bucktail" brigade. He then went again to the war. He continued in the service until the war ended, and then he came home, having been in all the battles in which the Bucktail brigade was engaged, and that brigade was engaged in the McClellan campaign, was at Gettysburg when Pennsylvania was invaded, and in the battles of the Wilderness under Grant. He came back with a person maimed and a constitution shattered by the accidents of the service, to find that his fortune which, when he entered the service, was considerable, was worse shattered than his person. During the first months of the war the rebels seized a large and valuable lumber-yard belonging to him at Memphis and converted it to their own use. I am told by him that the value of it was about forty thousand dollars. Then his mill up in my district, on the Alleghany river, was accidentally destroyed by fire.

When the United States forces took possession of Memphis, they took his buildings, which were conveniently situated, and after occupying them for some time demolished them for the purpose of using the materials in the construction of fortifications for the protection of the river at that point. All there is in this bill is a small appropriation to pay this officer for the value of the materials on his place, saying nothing about the use of the buildings. That was the only remnant of the large fortune with which he entered the war that was left. I know about his affairs personally. He is now poor, although he went into the service probably with more wealth than any other young man in that region of the country. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DELANO] will not prevail, but that this very deserving officer may be able to secure from the United States this little amount that belongs to him. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. This case was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and was examined by that committee, and I believe they were unanimously in favor of the claim. I happen to know something myself of General Stone's claim, having served with him during the Peninsular campaign in 1862 where I first met him. He was then connected with the Pennsylvania "Bucktail" regiment, which was located very near my own regiment, the eighth Illinois cavalry, at the extreme right of the army. His regiment and mine received the first shock of Stonewall Jackson's corps at the commencement of the war. I knew him well and intimately, and have known him very well since. He served in the Army very bravely and faithfully until the spring or summer of 1865, when he was mustered out of the service. After the retreat at Harrison's Landing, I came up on the same boat with General Stone, he having been wounded in one of the engagements. He was then placed upon the recruiting service, when he raised a brigade and returned again to the field. No more gallant and meritorious soldier could be found in the army of the Potomac than Roy Stone. I have here an old paper which contains, I think, an allusion to this same officer. I judge so from the remarks made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] in reference to his losses at Memphis and the circumstances connected with his entering the service. It is a New York paper published in July, 1861.

A MEMBER. What paper?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. The New York Tribune. It says:

"On the head waters of the Alleghany river lives an active, thrifty citizen, still in early manhood, who devotes his energies to the preparation and sale of lumber. He raises many thousands of fine boards annually down the rivers, and has a lumber-yard at Memphis, probably not his only one."

"Hearing of trouble at Memphis he started for that city some weeks since to look after his property, but was met at Cincinnati by representations that induced him to think he might not be safe in the Tennessee emporium. He telegraphed to Memphis for a solution of his doubt, and was rather surprised at receiving the gruff answer, 'Damn you! come on!' He obeyed this rather discourteous invitation, reached Memphis, and soon found his hotel surrounded by a mob of demons yelling for his blood, though they only knew of him that he came from the North, and was supposed to be after pay for his property. Aided by a friend he made his escape and somehow reached Cincinnati, whence he telegraphed home that he would follow the message forthwith, and wished to meet his friends and neighbors the next evening. He did so meet them, told them he was for the war for the Union, and raised a battalion of sharpshooters on the spot, and is now at its head in Virginia. Whenever the North shall decide to entertain propositions looking to compromise, we shall move that he be appointed one of the commissioners to arrange the terms of adjustment."

General Stone, as the proof before the committee showed, was the owner of certain brick buildings in Memphis on the old navy-yard ground. He had purchased these buildings, and they were under lease at the commencement of the late war. The proof shows, I think, that they were, every one of them, under lease, from which he was realizing a rental of $1,800 per year. Besides that, as has been stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOFIELD,] he owned a lumber-yard, and a large quantity of lumber there, that was taken possession of by the rebels, and was lost to him entirely. Now, this appropriation does not cover that at all; we do not propose to make him any compensation for anything destroyed by the rebels. But when our own Government has taken possession of his buildings for the use of the Army, occupying them exclusively, and eventually taking them down for the purpose of using the brick in the erection of barracks and fortifications, thus depriving him entirely of his property by taking it for the use of the Government, he at that time fighting to sustain that Government, it seems to me it would be the height of injustice to refuse to pay him. There is nothing in this paragraph to pay General Stone for any property either destroyed or used by the rebels. It is only for the value, at a very moderate estimate, of the property which was taken and used by our own Army.

The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DELANO,] in discussing this subject yesterday, spoke of the fact that the Committee of Claims universally rejected all claims for property taken or destroyed in the rebel States during the rebellion, under a resolution adopted by this House. Now, while that may be so, I protest against the most manifest injustice of refusing to open the doors of Congress, even to the petition of a just claimant who happened to have property south of Mason and Dixon's line, and who was most loyal and true to the Government. Now, if we cannot pay all let us pay what we can. It is manifestly unjust to say that because we cannot at this moment pay everybody, therefore we will not pay anybody; that because we owe so much, therefore we will repudiate the whole. It seems to me there is no debt more sacred under the sun than such debts as these. General Stone was twice wounded in the service of his country. He came out of the war with a broken constitution, as has been stated to the House by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SCOFIELD.] Not only did he find all his property South destroyed, but his mills in Pennsylvania were burned and all his business was gone. He came back at the end of the war a broken man, not only in constitution but in fortune. And it seems to me to be manifestly unjust for the House now to refuse to pay this little pittance for property which was taken possession of and used for the benefit of our Army, the very Army he was connected with.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I will now yield a portion of my time to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK.]

Mr. SCHENCK. If this were a mere question of sympathy, I should go most heartily with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FARNSWORTH] in favor of this proposition. But as this is not such a case, I cannot go with them. Now, there is no question but that there is here a most meritorious, and more than that, an interesting case of just and fair claim against the Government on the part of General Stone. But that is not the question now before this Committee of the Whole. The question before us is whether we shall separate the case of General Stone from all other meritorious cases and give to it the advantage which it has obtained over all other similar claims by being put into this appropriation bill, nobody knows how.

Mr. STEVENS. I can tell the gentleman how. It was sent by the House to the Committee on Appropriations, and they put it in this bill. So the gentleman need not be so anxious about it.

Mr. SCHENCK. I intend to be distinctly understood, and I wish I had the power of invective possessed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] if it was necessary to use it all in treating of this matter. The gentleman says this subject was referred to the Committee on Appropriations by the House. Now, everybody knows how petitions are referred to committees by the House. And I suppose this was referred by some one under the rule to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DELANO. Will my colleague allow me to state a fact? This claim was brought before the Committee of Claims, either formally or informally; and the party was instructed that the committee could not recommend its payment without a direct violation of the rule established by the House. How the claim was taken away from our committee, and how it reached the Committee on Appropriations, is for other gentlemen to say. I do not know.

Mr. SCHENCK. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am provoked to speak plainly about this matter, more plainly than I had intended to do. I will speak plainly.

This is a Pennsylvania claim, the claimant being a most excellent gentleman and a gallant officer. But he saw that there was no chance for him if he were put upon the same footing with thousands and thousands of others of meritorious claimants coming before Congress. Therefore his case, which under the general ruling of the House had no chance before the Committee of Claims, is presented somehow or other under the rule and sent to the Committee on Appropriations, a committee having nothing under heaven to do with the subject. By that committee it is reported in an appropriation bill. It is not an appropriation to carry out the object of any law, or to pay anything regularly due by the Government of the United States. It is an ordinary claim for damages, which should have gone properly to the Committee of Claims. Yet it goes to the Committee on Appropriations, upon some supposition that this Pennsylvania case would before that committee stand a better chance to be favorably reported upon and included in some appropriation bill, than if the claim should take the usual course. Thus, General Stone's claim is separated from every other case in this House, and sent to a committee which properly has nothing upon the face of the earth to do with it. By this committee it is inserted as a clause in an appropriation bill, and thus brought before the House, gaining in this manner an advantage over every other case of the same class that has been presented to this House.

Now, sir, I sympathize with General Stone; I admire him. I know his reputation. I believe that this is a meritorious case; I believe it is a case that appeals not only to our sense of justice but to our sympathies. But I will not vote to put General Stone or any other man—no matter how gallantly he may have behaved, nor how just may be his claim—upon a different footing from the thousands of men, women, and children throughout the whole extent of this land who by an inexorable rule are cut off from such an advantage, unless they get round through some back door. Gentlemen say that this is a peculiar case. Why, sir, there are thousands of other cases presenting just as strong claims upon us. I had the honor to present here the case of Dr. Best, of Paducah, Kentucky, who was the owner of a brick house (constituting pretty much the whole of his possessions) which was torn down under a written order of the Union officer in charge of the place to afford range for cannon for the defense of that town against an attack of the rebels. Best was one of the few thorough-going good Union men residing there. He had already been threatened, and perhaps even his life endangered; and at one time he had to flee from his home on account of the approach of the guerrillas, because he was a Union man. He received a written certificate of these facts. His case has been before the Committee of Claims, who say, "No matter how meritorious the claim, we cannot consistently with the order of the House, pay this honest thorough-going Union man, who was not only driven from his home, but had his house torn down, a written certificate of the fact being given to him by the officers in command, the house being torn down by the Union forces in order to resist an attack on the town."

I might name another case which has also been before the Committee of Claims, who have refused to consider it, under the general rule which they deem themselves bound to observe. I refer to the case of General Thomas, an officer of our Army, who, like General Stone, has been fighting for us all through the war. He was the owner of brick-yards across the river here, in Fairfax county. His brick-yards and bricks were used in constructing buildings for the shelter of the soldiers. Other property belonging to him was also taken for the use of the Army. This gentleman is not only loyal to the Government, but he fought for it as an officer of the Army till the end of the war, and is perhaps not yet mustered out. But under this general rule to consider none of these cases that among others has been ruled out. I am not saying—far be it from me to say it—this is not a just and fair demand on our Government. I am not saying it ought not at some future time, if not now, to be fairly met and paid.

I go further. I opposed that resolution passed by the House instructing the Committee of Claims to entertain none of these cases. I tried to get an amendment to the resolution that property actually taken or destroyed or used in any way for the public service and for the advancement of our armies in fighting against the rebellion should be made at least exceptional. I did not succeed. I submitted to the judgment of the House; I submitted to the resolution; I submitted reluctantly. I think this and like cases should be paid; but so long as you have made a general rule, and refused to pay such cases as a class, I will be opposed forever, while you maintain that law, and will therefore vote to strike out this appropriation, no matter how meritorious the officer who gets in in some back door-way, while others are refused and driven away.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. How long are we to regard the House as being bound by that resolution that claimants shall not come to Congress?

Mr. SCHENCK. Until they repeal it. While this Congress at this session has made that rule, and your committee, as the chairman of the committee tells you, are fairly adhering to that rule, I do not think it proper, finding it has no chance before that committee, to take a case of that character from that committee and send it to a committee to which it does not belong, to get in indirectly that which the House says shall not be done directly.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman from Ohio says if this were a case of sympathy he would vote for it; and his colleague, the chairman of the Committee of Claims, says it was excluded from their consideration by coming within the rule. I think they are both mistaken. I think it is a claim which, if they had considered the facts, they would have found not to be excluded by the rule of the House. General Stone does not come here and ask compensation for loss caused by act of war by taking down his house in order to have fair range of the enemy. His house was torn down when our troops were in possession of Memphis, and they took the bricks for the purposes they needed. The case of the claimant from Paducah is entirely different. It was clearly in the field of battle. It was a territory about to be fought for.

Mr. DAVIS. The gentleman does not say that Paducah was not in possession of our troops.

Mr. KELLEY. Our troops were not in peaceful possession if they had to remove the building near to them for the purpose of having range of the enemy.

When I first saw General Stone he was hanging, a mere skeleton on crutches, from his third wound received in our service. He had the larger part of his property within the insurrectionary lines. He had chosen his lot. He had become captain of a company which he had raised and boated down to Pittsburgh. He had become colonel and then general. There he hung upon his crutches, I say, a mere skeleton. Had he not been in the service of the country his claim would have been paid by the quartermaster's department or received a certificate. He simply asks to be paid in accordance with the vote this morning in reference to an Iowa soldier, where payment was withheld because he was physically unable from wounds to be present to demand his pay.

Mr. STEVENS moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that they had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 791, to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. STEVENS. I move when the House resolves itself again into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union that general debate be terminated in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 791) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1866, and for other purposes.

Mr. STEVENS. The Committee on Appropriations found referred to it, by order of the House, the claim of this officer. We supposed that it was our duty to dispose of it, and we saw no reason why we should not dispose of it as we did. We do not propose to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] whether it has come in at the back or the front door when this House sends it to us. We hold that we understand and know when we have a right to act upon a thing sent to us, as well as the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. So much for that. We took this claim and we recommended considerably less than one eighth part of it. That was all that we suppose came within the rules. As regards the rule which was adopted at the commencement of this session, on the report of the Committee of Claims, it does not touch this case. That rule is as follows:

Resolved, That, until otherwise ordered, the Committee of Claims be instructed to reject all claims referred to it for examination by citizens of any of the States lately in rebellion growing out of the destruction or appropriation or damage of property by the Army or Navy engaged in suppressing the rebellion.

That rule, I say, does not touch the case of General Stone. He never was a citizen of a rebel State. He was a citizen of Pennsylvania, and remained so. He was in the rebel States only as an officer of the Army. He came, therefore, within the rule, and we, in pursuance of what was considered as most overpowering justice, reported in his favor. We violated no rule. I have no respect for that resolution of the Committee of Claims. I look upon it as a most cruel and unjust rule to say that citizens of the United States who have lost their property by its being taken by the Army of the United States from military necessity under an order of a United States officer shall not be paid because we are embarrassed. It is as much as to say, because we have not just as much money as we can appropriate to pay everybody now, we will rob them. It is nothing more. I thought so at the time that resolution was passed—though it does not reach this case—and I think so still. It does not bind us, and when I come to vote I shall pay no regard to such a rule. If we cannot pay them let us give them certificates of indebtedness or bonds, and not cut off all these people because of this rule of the Committee of Claims. I say again, I look upon it as the most rank injustice, as wronging the most meritorious, suffering classes of the people of the United States. I scorn the principle contained in that resolution, although I have great respect for the committee that reported it, and never when I am called upon to act will I act in accordance with it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SCHENCK. I simply wish to say this in response to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Everybody knows how petitions are presented here. They are presented by individual members and referred to any committee the member chooses to indorse upon them. And everybody knows that when a committee finds that a subject has been referred to it which does not properly belong to the matters which, under the rule, should go to that committee, it is usual to report it back and ask to be discharged from its consideration, and that it be sent to the appropriate committee. Everybody knows, therefore, that it would have been the most natural thing in the world for the Committee on Appropriations, finding a claim of this kind before them, to have reported it back and asked to have it referred to the appropriate committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the motion to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. MORRILL. I move pro forma to strike out "twelve" and insert "one." This appropriation to pay the claim of Roy Stone is very like some items introduced into an appropriation bill here two years ago, containing provisions for the payment of private claims, when the House most emphatically set the seal of its condemnation upon that practice. A question of order was successfully made, and they were ruled out of order. Another member of the Committee of Ways and Means reported the same bill with the same items, or nearly the same, in it, and so indignant was the House at the attempt to ingraft on an appropriation bill items that ought to be considered by the Committee of Claims that they immediately, at the very first opportunity in Committee of the Whole, struck out the enacting clause of the bill. So much for the practice.

Now, in relation to the substance of this appropriation, if we shall once set the example, I warn the House that it will take several hundred million dollars to pay off these claims. The gentleman from Pennsylvania holds, not only that those actually in arms, but the entire South were alien enemies and must accept the consequences of their position in accordance with the principle which he lays down. Now, if we are to consider losses of Union men, however much our sympathy may be excited, I say that it will be utterly impossible for us to get along with the present arrangement for taxation. We shall immediately have to provide means for an increase of revenue if we shall once commence paying off these claims, and I doubt whether, with all our means, we can afford to assume the responsibility of paying the vast sums of damages done by our armies in the South, and for which this would justly be cited as a precedent. I hope, therefore, the motion to strike out will not prevail.

Mr. SPALDING. I wish to say, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, that this is not par excellence and was not treated as a Pennsylvania claim. Neither was the chairman of the committee [Mr. STEVENS] at first in favor of it. To my knowledge he voted to refer it back to the Committee of Claims; but at the instance of myself, or of the member from Illinois, that vote was reconsidered, and we then decided to act upon the claim ourselves, because the House had told us to do so. That is the whole sum of it. It was done in defiance of the intimation of the chairman of the committee. But when we had reconsidered it, and when we had agreed to put this claim in the appropriation bill, the chairman agreed with us in regard to the expediency of providing for the payment of this claim.

Now, sir, so far as regards the rule of the House, adopted at the instance of the Committee of Claims, I apprehend that the rules are intended for the government of the committee. At all events, I was one of the minor ity who voted against that resolution. I did not conceive that as a member of the Committee on Appropriations I was bound to abide by it at all. I conceived that I was bound by the rule of eternal justice, as being superior to this resolution adopted by the majority of the House. I believe that this claim is one which is rightfully due to this applicant for the use of his property by the Government of the United States. It was not the waste committed particularly by the Army, but his property was taken and used by the United States Government. A portion of it was torn down and destroyed, and the committee make as much appropriation to pay this man as will pay for the property thus wasted by the Government. I see no impropriety in this, nor any great conflict even with the rule which was established by the Committee of Claims.

Now, it may be well enough to refer to this claim as being a claim of an officer of our gallant Army who made great sacrifices; but I do not rest the claim entirely upon that. I think the claim is just, aside from the merits of the man as an officer of the Army, and I hope the motion to strike out will not prevail.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to amend the amendment so as to make it "three" instead of "one." I do so for the purpose of suggesting whether there is any difference in principle in these cases between the case of a citizen residing in Pennsylvania who is loyal to the Government and a citizen of Tennessee or Kentucky who is loyal to the Government. It is proposed to pay Mr. Stone for property which was taken by this Government within the rebel lines, in a country which was disputed between our forces and the rebel forces. But by the rules which have been laid down by this Congress it has been determined that all this property, no matter by whom owned, whether by rebels or loyal persons, was the property of public enemies, and liable to seizure and confiscation. And in respect to that property, as I took occasion once before to assert on this floor, under the principles which have been alleged here, General Roy Stone himself was a public enemy.

I have nothing to say in derogation of the patriotism or ability of General Stone. I believe that his claim is a just one, and that it ought to be paid by this Government. And I believe there are other claims just as much entitled to consideration on the part of this Government. Loyalty is the same in Tennessee as in Pennsylvania: it is devotion to the flag of the country, to the Union, to the Constitution, and to the laws. Wherever that devotion exists, and wherever a man is faithful to his flag and his country, there I hold that the shield of the Government is over him; and you have no right to confiscate his property, whether it is situated within the lines of the rebellion or not.

Now, I know of cases of loyal men in Tennessee who have lost everything, who have been stripped of every dollar's worth of their property, whose houses have been burned down over their heads, and whose families have been driven into the forest. Yet they have come to this Congress for reparation and redress, asserting their loyalty; and we are told by the Committee of Claims that, in consequence of the action of this House, they have no power to relieve. It is said here that this case is an exception to that rule; that because the claimant is a citizen of Pennsylvania, therefore he does not come within the rule which alludes to citizens of the rebel States. But I would ask, is not the principle the same? Is it not payment for property seized within the lines of rebellion? I can see no difference whatever in the principle. I do hope that the time may come when all these just claims, preferred by loyal and true men, may be recognized and adjudicated by this Government. But until that time shall come I will not insult the loyal men of the South by voting for such partial legislation as this.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Mr. Chairman, it is never difficult for a pretty able lawyer to find a tolerably good and fair reason for a bad conclusion. I have no doubt that all those gentlemen who have spoken upon this subject have always found in their practice at the bar, when hunting around for an argument, an opportunity to make a middling fair argument which they knew would be likely to bring the jury to a wrong conclusion.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SCHENCK] says that this claim ought to be denied to this wounded soldier hobbling around our Halls here, because injustice has been done to another deserving soldier of the Republic. And with that earnestness he always brings to bear upon even the most trifling subject, he says that over and over again, and tells us of a man in Kentucky that has been wronged, and of a man in Ohio that has been wronged, and thence draws the conclusion that you must wrong a most deserving soldier from Pennsylvania. And the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL], whose fairness and candor always take this House captive, comes on with another middling fair argument for a wrong conclusion, and his argument is that two years ago the committee of which he was then a member, and of which he is now the chairman, attempted to palm off upon this House an item of expense which they had condemned, and that the House rejected it, as it ought to have done, of right; therefore, he argues, you ought to rob this wounded and suffering soldier of what he concedes is his due.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman should state fairly what I said.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Of course I do not mean to state what the gentleman said in the very language which he used, because he put his argument so plausibly that the House would not perceive its error. But I mean to state the result of his argument accurately.

Mr. MORRILL. But the gentleman does not state it accurately. The House had not condemned the appropriations in the bill, not having seen them until they were reported.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I am very sure the gentleman said that they came here and were ruled out, and were put back in another bill in a little different shape.

Mr. MORRILL. They were ruled out on their first appearance here; and if the point of order had been made when this bill was first reported this appropriation would certainly have been ruled out.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I have mentioned two of the reasons which have been given. There is another; and that is urged by my friend from Ohio, [Mr. DELANO], who is always more ingenious in this line of debate than either of the gentlemen to whom I have referred. He says that if this claim had come to his committee he would have rejected it on the ground that the House has so instructed him. Now, sir, this resolution instructing the Committee of Claims provides that the committee "be instructed to reject all claims, referred to them for examination, by citizens of any of the States lately in rebellion." General Stone was a citizen of New York. A year or two before the war began he came with his patrimony to my own district. He lived there for a short time, investing his fortune, as I have stated, and sinking it. He was never a citizen of a rebel State.

So far as I had anything to do with the presentation of this claim upon the Government, I did not have it referred to the Committee of Claims, because I had understood from conversation with the chairman of that committee that he was giving to this resolution a construction which the House never intended—a construction in violation of the very language of the resolution. I had learned from him in conversation that, according to his construction, that resolution cuts off all demands of any citizen of the United States for damages sustained or losses incurred in rebel States.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DAVIS. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. DELANO. I move pro forma to amend by striking out the last word of the paragraph. Mr. Chairman, I do not know to whom may be most applicable the gentleman's rule that "a good lawyer can always find a pretty good reason for a wrong conclusion." The gentleman from Pennsylvania may be disposed to apply it to me and my colleague, [Mr. SCHENCK]; while other gentlemen might be disposed to apply it to other distinguished lawyers.

Now, sir, let me say that the rule which the House adopted with reference to claims of this character was adopted at the instance of the Committee of Claims at an early period of the session, the committee seeing the necessity of meeting that question promptly. That rule, sir, whatever may be its particular terms or phraseology, was intended to cut off all claims for property destroyed in the rebel States; for it was there that the great destruction had been committed. There were two reasons for the adoption of this rule: one was the inability of the Government to meet these numerous claims for the ravages of war; the other was the difficulty of ascertaining the loyalty of parties making these claims.

Now, sir, that rule, in its spirit, was not intended to make the residence of the party the test with reference to allowing claims of this character. In my opinion it is "sticking in the bark" to give it such an interpretation. We all feel the necessity of the adoption of this rule as a security for the present; and we regarded it as a rule of only temporary application. I wish to say that the Committee of Claims, faithfully adhering to this rule, have rejected claims which appealed to the humanity and the sympathy of the committee much more strongly than this claim can. Let me say also in this connection that it is the purpose of the committee—I now have the subject under consideration—to mature and present to the House at an early period of the next session some plan by which this class of cases may be examined and uniform and equal justice be meted out to all claimants. I have not been able to bring forward this plan at the present session; nor have I deemed it necessary to do so in the present disturbed and unsettled relations of the States whose people were recently in rebellion. I beg that the House will for the present let this rule stand as it is, and that it will not, in this indirect manner, open, as it were, the flood-gate for all claims of this description.

That this claim is not as meritorious as others I know. There is near by where this property stands to-day a poor widow woman whose husband was murdered before her eyes because he was a loyal man, and whose property was afterward destroyed by our own forces as a military necessity just as this was destroyed. There is such a woman there, and she is unable, under this rule at this time, to receive relief. There are thousands of such cases.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Where does she reside?

Mr. DELANO. In Tennessee, not far from Memphis.

Mr. SCOFIELD. She comes under your rule, as she was the citizen of a rebel State.

Mr. DELANO. I do not come here to make a construction of the rule. I am speaking of it in a larger sense than that. It was for that reason I took occasion to say, when the gentleman from Pennsylvania said there were some gentlemen who could find a good reason for a bad conclusion, he might find its application to somebody else than myself.

Mr. TRIMBLE. I would like to know whether the gentleman has investigated as to the probable amount which will be required to pay all of this class of claims.

Mr. DELANO. I can make an approximate estimate, but it is needless to do so. I will say to the committee if you settle the rule of paying for property destroyed by the ravages of war it will include all the destruction by General Sherman, from Chattanooga to Savannah, and from Savannah home. It will also include the destruction of Atlanta—I mean so far as loyal citizens are concerned.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STEVENS moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that they had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 791, to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1866, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. STEVENS moved that all debate in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the pending paragraph shall terminate in one minute after its consideration shall be resumed.

The motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 791) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1866, and for other purposes.

Mr. DELANO. I wish to suggest that having acted under this rule for six months, now at the close of the session and under these circumstances it would be a great act of injustice to ourselves as well as to those who have been refused to withdraw it now.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 57, noes 27.

Mr. SCOFIELD demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SCOFIELD and Mr. DELANO were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 67, noes 29.

So the paragraph was stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Public buildings and grounds:
To complete the sewer through the Botanic Garden, $15,000.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to add the following:

Provided, That the Commissioner of Public Buildings shall advertise for two weeks for sealed proposals for the performance of such work, and the furnishing of materials therefor, in the two newspapers in the city of Washington authorized to publish the official advertisements, and at the expiration of such time on a day to be specified in such advertisement, the proposals shall be opened by the Commissioner of Public Buildings, in the presence of the Secretary of the Interior, and the work shall be then let to the person who shall have offered to do the same and furnish the materials at the lowest rates and aggregate, and who shall give proper security for the performance of his contract; and the Commissioner of Public Buildings is hereby required to report to Congress at the commencement of the next session a full statement of the expenditure of the present and past appropriations for this work, with the rates that have been paid for the work and materials under each appropriation.

I presume there will be no objection to the amendment. It is a very ordinary provision, and I am induced to offer it because I think it worth while to continue the effort to annex some sort of guarantees in the disbursement of money in this capital. My recollection is that a hundred thousand dollars were originally appropriated, and then not twenty, but twenty-five thousand dollars were appropriated for the purpose. Now, I think that proposals should be advertised for from parties who would be responsible for the doing of the work.

Mr. STEVENS. I suppose it is known to the gentlemen of the House that mechanics have been employed upon this sewer. More was appropriated at first than was necessary, but the Secretary now informs the Senate that an additional appropriation is necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to strike out from line 119 to line 121, as follows:

For annual repairs of President's House, $6,000, for the year ending June 30, 1867.

I rise mainly to do justice to a constituent of mine, a late President of the United States. On a former occasion, in discussing a deficiency for furnishing the White House, I said that they existed in other Administrations; that during Mr. Buchanan's the deficiency was $4,000, for which we made an appropriation. On further examination I find I was in error. The amount settled by Dr. Blake, the then Commissioner of Public Buildings, shows that there was no deficiency. The only sum expended beyond the usual appropriation of $20,000 was the proceeds of the sale of the old furniture, between one and two thousand dollars, which always goes to that object.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to amend by adding after line 131 the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to alter and repair the building in the city of Philadelphia, belonging to the United States, known as the Pennsylvania bank building, so as to render it suitable for the occupancy of the appraisers connected with the customs at Philadelphia, and that the sum of $20,000 is hereby appropriated for said alterations and repairs, payable out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The subject of procuring proper accommodations, Mr. Chairman, for the appraisers' department of the customs in Philadelphia came before the Committee on Commerce by a petition presented by me some time since, signed by many of the most prominent merchants, citizens, and Government officials of that city. The appraisers' offices and store-houses are now rented from private individuals, and while they are located at inconvenient distances from the business centers of Philadelphia, this bank building, so admirably situated for the purpose, accessible on all its sides by streets, and having cost the Government a large sum of money, has remained vacant for years. Efforts have been made to sell it at public sale several times, at a price fixed by the Government, but it still is unsold. The subject was referred to me by the Committee on Commerce, and after submitting it to the Secretary of the Treasury, I have a communication from him, dated the 18th instant, inclosing the section read by me, and in which he recommends to the Committee on Commerce that the proposed alterations and repairs should be authorized to be made. I call the attention of my colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to the amendment, and send the letter of the Secretary to the Clerk's desk, to be read, if desired.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to insert, after line one hundred and thirty-one, "to ventilate the bath-room of the House of Representatives, $200." All the members of the House who resort to this bath-room know what it requires; but, as there may be some who do not do so, I will state that there is no ventilation and no escape for the steam which rises there, making it a most uncomfortable place instead of a luxury. It may be necessary to run a tube through the ceiling of one of the committee-rooms, but I think that $200 will be a sufficient sum to defray all the necessary expenses.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RADFORD. I move to amend the bill by striking out, in line one hundred and fifty-three, the word "twenty;" so as to make it read, "to enable the Secretary of State to remove his office and contents, $5,000 in addition to the sum heretofore appropriated."

I do not propose to argue the question at all, we recently appropriated $25,000 for this purpose, and now we have before us an additional appropriation of $25,000. I would like the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to inform us why this large amount of money is necessary for the purpose of securing the safety of some few papers in the State Department? It seems to me that $5,000 would be more than enough.

Mr. STEVENS. I will only say this: that when the Secretary of State found it necessary to move his office, he asked for $50,000. This House, not knowing at the time what arrangements were proposed, cut the appropriation down to $25,000. We find now that that amount will not answer the purpose, and we have therefore reported this appropriation of $25,000, which will make the amount what it was originally. If there is any one Department of the Government which is economical in the administration of its affairs, it is the Department of State, and I have no idea that a dollar more than is necessary will be expended of this amount.

The question was taken on the amendment, and it was disagreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I move to amend the bill by striking out in line one hundred and fifty-five the words, "for this sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary," and to insert in lieu thereof the words, "to enable the Secretary of War;" so that it will read:

To enable the Secretary of War to make the pay of the persons employed at any time during the last fiscal year as temporary clerks in the office of the Quartermaster General, or any division thereof, equal to the pay of first-class clerks, which is hereby allowed.

Mr. KASSON. I move now to strike out the word "allowed," at the end of that section, and to insert in lieu thereof the word "directed." I also move to add to the section the words "and such sum as may be necessary for that purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the third section, as follows:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That such sum as may be required to enable the Clerk of the House of Representatives to execute the resolutions of the House of the present session, directing the payment of increased and additional compensation to officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the employ of the House of Representatives be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move to amend that section by inserting after the word "Representatives," in line five, the words "including the Capitol police." I do this because it was the intention of the House in passing the resolutions to allow them additional pay, and I wish to make it clear that these gentlemen are included in the increased compensation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to strike out the fifth section of this bill, calling attention to the fact that it is evidently improperly put in an appropriation bill.

The fifth section was as follows:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the sum of $32,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated to pay Madison Sweetzer, upon condition that the said Madison Sweetzer shall first, by a good and sufficient deed, convey to the United States all his right, title, and interest in and to the following lands, conveyed by the United States to Joseph Richardville, sr., and Joseph Richardville, jr., by treaty at St. Mary's, October 6, 1818, to wit: the west half of section No. 26, the east half of section No. 28, and section No. 27 of township five south, range four east, lying in the county of Angell, and State of Ohio.

Mr. STEVENS. This is a case involving land which was granted by the United States, which grant it was afterward found was to some extent informal. Some two or three years ago a commission was appointed by the Government to examine the whole question and determine the amount to which this Mr. Sweetzer was entitled. They determined not to disturb those now in possession, but recommend this appropriation to pay Mr. Sweetzer.

Mr. CONKLING. Is not this the same case which was here during the Thirty-Seventh Congress, and which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims?

Mr. LE BLOND. I will explain to the gentleman. This case has been here two or three times, and a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to appoint a person to appraise these lands passed the House at one time, passed the Senate at another time, but failed to pass both Houses at the same Congress. But in the Thirty-Eighth Congress a bill passed Congress authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to appoint a commissioner to appraise these lands and determine their value in a state of nature.

I will state briefly the history of this case, and then I think gentlemen will at once see its merits. There are two sections of land involved. One section was conveyed by the General Government to individuals, and the other section was conveyed by the General Government to the State of Ohio for canal purposes. That land was sold by the State to individuals who are now in possession of it. At the time the Government thus conveyed this land it was supposed that it had the right to do so. But prior to this conveyance of this land to the State of Ohio and to these individuals, the Government by treaty had conveyed these very lands to Joseph Richardville, senior, and Joseph Richardville, junior. The senior Richardville died, and this man Sweetzer obtained a judgment against Joseph Richardville, junior, who had become the sole owner of these two sections of land. After obtaining his judgment he levied upon these lands, which were sold and bid in by him. He then instituted an action of ejectment in the district court of the United States against the occupants of the land. That suit was fiercely contested, but the court found the title to be in this man Sweetzer, and that the Government had no title at the time it conveyed the land to these individuals.

Now, these parties, as well as the State of Ohio, ask Congress to quiet their titles to these lands. And Mr. Sweetzer has agreed to accept the value of these lands, free from improvements, and to relinquish his title to the General Government, which will make the title of these individuals perfect. In pursuance of that request a law was passed by the Thirty-Eighth Congress and the appraisement of these lands had. The appraiser reported to the Secretary of the Interior at this session, and the Secretary of the Interior has sent the report in here asking for this appropriation. The value of the land was ascertained by the testimony of disinterested witnesses who live in the neighborhood and know the value of it. And I myself know that these lands were not appraised too high in a state of nature. This appropriation is for the purpose of paying Mr. Sweetzer, upon the condition that he will relinquish his title and leave these parties in possession of this land.

Mr. RADFORD. At what time did the Government transfer these lands, and what consideration did it receive for them?

Mr. LE BLOND. I cannot tell the exact time, but I suppose it was something like twenty years ago.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. How much did these parties pay to the Government for this land?

Mr. LE BLOND. I suppose the Government have received $2 50 per acre for one of the sections under the alternate section rule.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Does the Government ever do anything more in such cases than to refund the money to the purchaser?

Mr. LE BLOND. Let me say to the gentleman that that question was argued in this House when the bill originally passed. Opposition was made to it upon that very ground, but the House settled the question that in this case at least the Government would pay the value of these lands in a state of nature. Now let me call the attention of gentlemen to it, and see the position in which you leave these men if this is not done.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STEVENS. I move pro forma to amend by striking out the last two words. I desire to say that this is not a question whether the money shall be refunded to the persons who bought this land from the Government. Mr. Sweetzer is not anxious that the money shall be refunded. He bought the property from third persons, who had bought it from the Government. The Government had no title; and the question now is whether Sweetzer shall get property worth three times the appraised value of this land, or whether the Government will quiet his title.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to insist upon an amendment when the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LE BLOND,] who knows most about the matter, deems the provision of the bill entirely fair. Yet, upon the whole presentation of the case, I do not think that $32,000 ought to be appropriated in this bill for this purpose. This claim, if I understand it correctly, is one which should properly be embraced in a private bill. It does not appropriately belong in an appropriation bill or in any public bill. It is a claim about which a great deal is to be said on both sides. And I have a lurking recollection that, during this session, this very matter has been before the House, and has been in some way disposed of. I ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] whether I am not right.

Mr. LE BLOND. When the miscellaneous appropriation bill was before the House this was offered as an amendment to that bill, and the Chair ruled that it was not in order. Perhaps, however, the gentleman may have reference to the appointment of the commissioner who was directed to appraise the land.

Mr. CONKLING. No, sir; I think it is the miscellaneous appropriation bill to which I refer. In that case the Chair ruled as the Chair would have ruled upon this bill, had any one known that this section was covered up in the bill, and had thus been enabled to make the point of order in season. Manifestly this appropriation does not belong in this bill. The Committee of the Whole, in acting on the case of General Stone this morning, has by a very pronounced majority declared in favor of the principle which has been acted upon by the committee almost uniformly heretofore, that it is right to discourage the practice of introducing into a general appropriation bill sections designed to accomplish a purpose which should be accomplished by private bills.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I confess that I do not for one feel at all satisfied in reference to the merits of this case; but I do feel clear that an appropriation for this claim does not properly belong in this bill, and that the committee should adhere to what has been its previous practice, allowing all parties to fare alike in the presentation of private claims, and insisting that such claims shall be embraced in private bills, to the end that they may be deliberately passed upon by the appropriate committees. Therefore, sir, I insist upon my original motion to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. STEVENS. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I renew the amendment. Mr. Chairman, I ask the attention of the House, and particularly the lawyers of the House, to what little I have to say in relation to this claim. I am conscious that it is a painful duty for members of the House to resist an appropriation for a private claim; but I do trust that the character of this claim may be understood by members before they agree to set a precedent that may involve the nation in an expenditure of millions of dollars.

What is this claim? If I understand the facts correctly, Madison Sweetzer was the owner of two sections of land, the title to which he derived from certain Indian tribes. The Government of the United States supposed that it had acquired the title from those tribes. The Land Office directed the land to be surveyed; and one section was given to the State of Ohio for canal purposes, and another section of the land was sold. The title of the Government failed because Sweetzer had a prior title derived from the Indian tribes. The grantee of the State of Ohio, and the private individual who derived his title from the Government, took possession of these lands, made improvements upon them, and have occupied them up to the present time.

Madison Sweetzer, who held the original prior Indian title, brought an action in the circuit court of the United States against the occupants, and judgment was rendered in his favor. He, I understand from my colleague, has the judgment and can enforce it against the occupants of the land. Now, the Government of the United States received for one section $2 50 an acre, and for the other he says the United States received nothing at all, but there is no doubt that it was of equal value. This is the highest price the Government has received for any land sold for a great number of years. The whole amount received by the Government would be $4,000.

What is this bill? It is not a bill for the relief of the occupants of the land, but it is a bill which proposes to quiet title, the occupants all buying out the prior title held under the Indian tribes, the prior title of Madison Sweetzer. What is the measure of damages the Government propose to pay to quiet these titles? It is not the measure of damages which may be awarded against the Government if the occupants of these lands could bring an action in a court of law. If we authorized these occupants to sue in a court of claims their measure of damages, according to the decision in Ohio, would not be the value of the lands. That rule does not prevail in more than one or two States of the Union, if anywhere. The measure of damages would be simply the money which was paid, without interest, because the occupants under the decision are not entitled to interest unless it be interest after suits have been commenced in the circuit court. In other words, then, instead of getting $32,000, these occupants would get $4,000, with a modicum of interest amounting to a very small sum.

Now, this man Sweetzer can enforce a writ of ejectment by showing his right of possession; but he cannot turn these occupants out until they have been paid for all the improvements which have been made and for all the taxes which have been paid upon the lands. It will be seen, Mr. Chairman, from the statement I have made in this matter, that the Government of the United States is establishing a new mode of relief for all persons who acquire land from the Government and whose title happens to fail. It is a mode of relief unknown to any judicial tribunal. It has never before been adopted by this Government. It is important and ought to be carefully considered. What, I pray you, is to be the result? In the conflict of titles which must follow the making of land grants for railroad purposes and the passage of land bills for California, as well as the thousand other grants in which controversies will arise—

Mr. CONKLING. I rise to oppose the amendment; but I will give the gentleman from Ohio a part of my time.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. The thousands of cases in reference to which controversies will arise respecting title, and where the title of the United States may fail, it would be monstrous to adopt the principle here contended for. It is therefore for the House to say whether it will adopt a rule different from that now established, and load the Government down with responsibilities amounting to untold and countless millions of dollars. When the Government sells land the title to which fails the purchasers under the Government certainly ought not to ask any more than they would be entitled to claim as against a private grantor. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. I renew it. Mr. Chairman, there has not been an appropriation which we have not been told not only involves the safety of this nation, but the ruin of God's creation. I have heard that sort of thing over and over again from the gentleman who has just spoken, as well as from others. I have heard it so often that I have ceased to be alarmed at their thunder. When there is an honest debt due I will pay it if I am able; if not I will confess the debt. In the letter of the Secretary of the Interior to Hon. John F. Kinney, it is stated that pursuant to the authority vested in him by a joint resolution approved on the 5th of May, he appointed Mr. Kinney a commissioner to appraise the lands described in the act entitled "An act for the relief of William Sawyer and others, of Ohio," approved July 1, 1864. I need not go on further to state what the Secretary says. Here is an appropriation to carry out the law. The value of these lands has already been ascertained in the mode prescribed by act of Congress.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask the gentleman whether the statute under which this appraisal was made does not expressly provide that the land shall be appraised and valued according to its present valuation in a state of nature.

Mr. STEVENS. It does, and so the commissioner, in a long report giving us the evidence, states that he did value it in a state of nature. Now, sir, it is the most remarkable thing in the world that Mr. Sweetzer, who has a right to this land, is to be held responsible for the original title given by the Government of the United States to these settlers. Mr. Sweetzer can turn them out to-morrow under the law without asking anybody's favor, and in order to prevent it the vendor, who sold what he did not possess and thus put into possession innocent men, is asking us to appropriate this money to protect the vendees from a just and lawful claim, so decided by ourselves and decided by the judgment of the courts.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I wish to ask whether there have not been two appraisements of this land; whether the commissioner who made the first did not appraise it at a much less price than is now fixed; whether Sweetzer did not refuse to take it, demanding a higher price; and whether he did not procure the appointment of another commissioner who, for some reason, I know not what, has returned this appraisal, which is satisfactory to Sweetzer.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not know about the first appraisal, but the resolution shows that this is a reappraisal; hence there must have been one before. Mr. Sweetzer was not bound to accept it, but he has signified his willingness to accept the sum which was fixed by Mr. Kinney. Now, it is a simple question whether this Congress will allow their own vendee to be turned out.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CONKLING to strike out the section, it was not agreed to—ayes thirty-five, noes not counted.

Mr. KASSON. I move to add the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That whereas doubts have arisen whether the fourth section of the act approved March 3, 1865, entitled "An act to amend an act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, authorized disbursing agents to disburse other moneys than those appropriated in the said fourth section; therefore for the purpose of removing said doubts and declaring the true intent and meaning of said fourth section the said fourth section shall be deemed, held, and construed as being and remaining in full force and effect from and after the 3d day of March, 1865, until the same shall be modified and repealed, and as authorizing the disbursement through such agents of money heretofore appropriated and that may hereafter be appropriated for the payment of the lawful expenses incident to carrying into effect the various acts relative to the assessment and collection of the internal revenue; and all bonds and obligations heretofore entered into by collectors of internal revenue as disbursing agents shall be binding and obligatory upon such collectors and their sureties as well in respects to moneys which have been or may hereafter be received by said collectors as such disbursing agents as to moneys appropriated in the said fourth section.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I offer the following additional items as amendments to the bill:

For compensation of the depositary at Santa Fé, New Mexico, as per act of March 3, 1863, $1,000.

For salaries of additional clerks and additional compensation of officers and clerks, under act of August 6, 1846, at such rates as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem just and reasonable, $10,000.

For compensation of two superintendents for the life-saving stations on the coast of Long Island and New Jersey, per acts of December 14, 1854, and August 13, 1856, $2,500.

For compensation of fifty-four keepers of stations, per same act, $6,000.

For salary of the superintendent of the building occupied by the Quartermaster General's office, $200, for the current fiscal year.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. I offer the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the Capitol police shall be entitled to the increased compensation allowed to officers, clerks, messengers, and others in the employ of the House of Representatives.

I will state that last year a bill was passed which it was supposed gave to them their compensation as employes of the House, but it appears that as the law stood they were employed by Congress, the House paying one half and the Senate the other half. Therefore they were left out in the cold. The object of my amendment is to have that mistake rectified. There are only a half dozen of these men and I think justice requires that this amendment should be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the committee lay this bill aside and take up another small appropriation for Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

REIMBURSEMENT OF NEBRASKA.

The Committee of the Whole then proceeded to consider House bill No. 761, to authorize the reimbursement of Nebraska of certain expenses incurred in repelling Indian hostilities.

On motion of Mr. STEVENS, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with, and the bill was read by sections.

No amendment was offered.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. KASSON. I move to amend by adding that the Chairman report both bills to the House.

Mr. J. L. THOMAS. I accept the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the special order, being bill of the House No. 791, to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending 30th of June, 1866, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments; also that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the special order, being bill of the House No. 761, to authorize the reimbursement to the Territory of Nebraska of certain expenses incurred in repelling Indian hostilities, and had directed him to report the same to the House without amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had concurred in the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 775, to establish certain post roads.

Also, that the Senate had passed without amendment House bill No. 772, to authorize the issue of certain bonds in denominations greater than $1,000.

Also, that the Senate had passed House joint resolution No. 176, amendatory of a joint resolution entitled "Resolution respecting bounties to colored soldiers and the pensions, bounties, and allowances to their heirs," approved June 15, 1866, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

Also, that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 387) making appropriations for the current contingent expenses of the Indian department for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1867.

ENROLLED BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 692) increasing the pensions of widows and orphans, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 587) to incorporate the Soldiers' and Sailors' Union, of Washington, District of Columbia;

An act (H. R. No. 729) to change the port of entry in Puget Sound;

An act (H. R. No. 779) to incorporate the National Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Home;

An act (H. R. No. 365) granting the right of way to ditch and canal owners over the public lands, and for other purposes;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 190) in regard to rations of Union soldiers held as prisoners of war; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 178) in reference to the Dismal Swamp Canal Company.

DEFICIENCY BILL—AGAIN.

Tha House proceeded to the consideration of the deficiency bill as reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STEVENS. I demand the previous question on the several amendments made in committee.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I ask for a separate vote on striking out section five.

The SPEAKER. That was not stricken out in committee.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Then I hope the previous question will not be seconded so that the motion may be made to strike out.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were concurred in, and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. STEVENS. I call the previous question on the passage of the bill as amended.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The bill was then passed.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REIMBURSEMENT OF NEBRASKA.

The House then proceeded to consider House bill No. 767, authorizing the reimbursement of the Territory of Nebraska for certain expenses incurred in repelling Indian hostilities; which had been considered in Committee of the Whole and reported to the House without amendment.

Mr. KASSON. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TENNESSEE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

The following "Joint resolution, restoring Tennessee to her relations in the Union," was last evening presented for my approval:

"Whereas, in the year 1861, the government of the State of Tennessee was seized upon and taken possession of by persons in hostility to the United States, and the inhabitants of said State, in pursuance of an act of Congress, were declared to be in a state of insurrection against the United States; and whereas said State government can only be restored to its former political relations in the Union by the consent of the law-making power of the United States; and whereas the people of said State did, on the 22d day of February, 1865, by a large popular vote, adopt and ratify a constitution of government whereby slavery was abolished, and all ordinances and laws of secession, and debts contracted under the same, were declared void; and whereas a State government has been organized under said constitution, which has ratified the amendment to the Constitution of the United States abolishing slavery; also the amendment proposed by the Thirty-Ninth Congress, and has done other acts proclaiming and denoting loyalty: Therefore,

"Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That the State of Tennessee is hereby restored to her former proper, practical relations to the Union, and is again entitled to be represented by Senators and Representatives in Congress."

The preamble simply consists of statements, some of which are assumed, while the resolution is merely a declaration of opinion. It comprises no legislation, nor does it confer any power which is binding upon the respective Houses the Executive, or the States. It does not admit to their seats in Congress the Senators and Representatives from the State of Tennessee; for, notwithstanding the passage of the resolution, each House, in the exercise of the constitutional right to judge for itself of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its members, may, at its discretion, admit them or continue to exclude them. If a joint resolution of this kind were necessary and binding as a condition-precedent to the admission of members of Congress, it would happen, in the event of a veto by the Executive, that Senators and Representatives could only be admitted to the halls of legislation by a two-thirds vote of each of the two Houses.

Among other reasons recited in the preamble for the declarations contained in the resolution, is the ratification, by the State government of Tennessee, of "the amendment to the Constitution of the United States abolishing slavery, and also the amendment proposed by the Thirty-Ninth Congress." If, as is also declared in the preamble, "said State government can only be restored to its former political relations in the Union by the consent of the law-making power of the United States," it would really seem to follow that the joint resolution which at this late day has received the sanction of Congress, should have been passed, approved, and placed on the statute-books before any amendment to the Constitution was submitted to the Legislature of Tennessee for ratification. [Applause from Democratic side.] Otherwise the inference is plainly deducible that while, in the opinion of Congress, the people of a State may be too strongly disloyal to be entitled to representation, they may nevertheless, during the suspension of their "former proper, practical relations to the Union," have an equally potent voice with other and loyal States in propositions to amend the Constitution, upon which so essentially depend the stability, prosperity, and very existence of the nation.

A brief reference to my annual message of the 4th of December last will show the steps taken by the Executive for the restoration to their constitutional relations to the Union of the States that had been affected by the rebellion. Upon the cessation of active hostilities, provisional governors were appointed, conventions called, Governors elected by the people, Legislatures assembled, and Senators and Representatives chosen to the Congress of the United States. At the same time the courts of the United States were reopened, the blockade removed, the custom-houses reestablished, and postal operations resumed. The amendment to the Constitution abolishing slavery forever within the limits of the country was also submitted to the States, and they were thus invited to and did participate in its ratification, thus exercising the highest functions pertaining to a State. In addition, nearly all of these States, through their conventions and Legislatures, had adopted and ratified constitutions "of government whereby slavery was abolished and all ordinances and laws of secession and debts and contracts under the same were declared void." So far, then, the political existence of the States and their relations to the Federal Government had been fully and completely recognized and acknowledged by the executive department of the Government; and the completion of the work of restoration, which had progressed so favorably, was submitted to Congress, upon which devolved all questions pertaining to the admission to their seats of the Senators and Representatives chosen from the States whose people had engaged in the rebellion.

All these steps had been taken, when, on the 4th day of December, 1865, the Thirty-Ninth Congress assembled. Nearly eight months have elapsed since that time; and no other plan of restoration having been proposed by Congress for the measures instituted by the Executive, it is now declared, in the joint resolution submitted for my approval, "that the State of Tennessee is hereby restored to her former proper, practical relations to the Union, and is again entitled to be represented by Senators and Representatives in Congress." Thus, after the lapse of nearly eight months, Congress proposes to pave the way to the admission to representation of one of the eleven States whose people arrayed themselves in rebellion against the constitutional authority of the Federal Government.

Earnestly desiring to remove every cause of further delay, whether real or imaginary, on the part of Congress for the admission to seats of loyal Senators and Representatives from the State of Tennessee, I have, notwithstanding the anomalous character of this proceeding, affixed my signature to the resolution. [General applause and laughter.] My approval, however, is not to be construed as an acknowledgment of the right of Congress to pass laws preliminary to the admission of duly qualified representatives from any of the States. [Great laughter.] Neither is it to be considered as committing me to all the statements made in the preamble, [renewed laughter,] some of which are, in my opinion, without foundation in fact, especially the assertion that the State of Tennessee has ratified the amendment to the Constitution of the United States proposed by the Thirty-Ninth Congress. [Laughter.] No official notice of such ratification has been received by the Executive or filed in the Department of State; on the contrary, unofficial information from most reliable sources induces the belief that the amendment has not yet been constitutionally sanctioned by the Legislature of Tennessee. The right of each House, under the Constitution, to judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members is undoubted, and my approval or disapproval of the resolution could not in the slightest degree increase or diminish the authority in this respect conferred upon the two branches of Congress.

In conclusion, I cannot too earnestly repeat my recommendation for the admission of Tennessee, and all other States, to a fair and equal participation in national legislation when they present themselves in the persons of loyal Senators and Representatives, who can comply with all the requirements of the Constitution and the laws. By this means harmony and reconciliation will be effected, the practical relations of all the States to the Federal Government reestablished, and the work of restoration, inaugurated upon the termination of the war, successfully completed.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 24, 1866.

[Applause from the Democratic side.]

The message was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEVENS. Inasmuch as the joint resolution in regard to Tennessee has become a law by the entire and cordial approval of the President, [laughter,] I am directed by the joint committee on reconstruction to ask that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the credentials of the members-elect from the State of Tennessee, and to move that the same be referred to the Committee of Elections of this House.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to have one of the credentials read to the House, in order to give me an opportunity of inquiring of the House whether it is expected of the Committee of Elections, if these credentials shall be referred to them now, to pass upon anything more than the fact whether or not they conform to the law. If that be all that the committee is expected to do, then I think the House can act as well as the Committee of Elections on that matter.

Mr. LE BLOND. I rise to a privileged question. I move that the members-elect from the State of Tennessee, now present, have administered to them the oath of office.

The SPEAKER. It is within the power of the House to refer to the Committee of Elections the credentials of any gentleman claiming a seat even from a State that has not been in rebellion. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] is still on the floor, which would prevent the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] from being made.

Mr. STEVENS. I believe that these credentials are in the usual form, and it is to be expected that they will be examined by the Committee of Elections just as the credentials are which are referred to that committee by the House. They will understand whether they are irregular or not. I now call the previous question.

Mr. LE BLOND. Does not my motion take precedence of that?

The SPEAKER. It does not; the usage has been precisely the other way. If a motion is made to swear in a man claiming a seat in the House after it is organized, and a member rises and moves to refer the credentials to the Committee of Elections, that motion is entertained and acted upon.

Mr. LE BLOND. I have always understood that the credentials alone are considered prima facie evidence of a right to a seat when there is no contestant.

The SPEAKER. That is only for the purpose of organizing the House. The Chair will refer the gentleman to a case in point. In the Thirty-Seventh Congress a gentleman from Tennessee (the Chair does not now recollect the name) claimed to have been elected a Representative from that State, and there was no contestant in his case. The credentials in that case were referred to the Committee of Elections, who examined as to the number of votes cast for him, the condition of the district, &c., and reported upon the case, and the Chair thinks he was admitted to his seat.

Mr. LE BLOND. That, Mr. Speaker, grew out of the fact that the State at that time was in a state of rebellion and no election could be held.

The SPEAKER. That is true; but there was no contestant at that time. The question was whether the gentleman presenting the credentials should be admitted to a seat, no person contesting his election.

Mr. LE BLOND. My recollection of that case is that the certificate was informal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point that the gentleman has the right to make this motion pending the demand for the previous question.

Mr. RADFORD. I desire to inquire whether it is now in order to move to lay the resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the table.

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. RADFORD. I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. That motion, if adopted, will carry the credentials to the table; but they can be taken up by the House.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a point of order. My colleague [Mr. STEVENS] moves to discharge the committee on reconstruction from the further consideration of the credentials of the Tennessee members, and also moves that those credentials be referred to the Committee of Elections. I wish to inquire whether it is not in order to have the question divided. I am in favor of discharging the committee on reconstruction but am opposed to referring these credentials to the Committee of Elections, for the reason that we have for eight months been discussing this subject, and—

Mr. MYERS. I object to my colleague making an argument under the guise of a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SREYENS] is susceptible of division. It embraces two distinct propositions.

Mr. SCHENCK. I desire to make an inquiry.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I insist on the previous question.

Mr. RADFORD. I withdraw the motion to lay on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question is first upon discharging the committee on reconstruction.

Mr. BANKS. If the first branch of the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is defeated we cannot vote on the second. Therefore I think the question ought to be taken as a whole.

The SPEAKER. The rule declares that a motion may be divided if it embraces two distinct and substantive propositions. That is the case here. The two propositions could have been presented as separate motions.

The question being taken on the motion to discharge the committee on reconstruction from the further consideration of the credentials, it was decided in the affirmative.

The question recurred on referring the credentials to the Committee of Elections.

Mr. LE BLOND and Mr. FINOK called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FINCK. I ask for the reading of the credentials of one of the gentlemen from Tennessee.

The Clerk read the credentials of Mr. Nathaniel G. Taylor.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire whether the President of the United States has returned to this House, in which it originated, the joint resolution for the restoration of the State of Tennessee with his approval.

The SPEAKER. The President of the United States when he approves a bill or joint resolution, sends it to the Department of State and not to either House of Congress. The message of the President states that he has signed the joint resolution.

The yeas and nays having been ordered on referring to the Committee of Elections the credentials of the gentlemen claiming seats as Representatives from the State of Tennessee,

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 90, nays 28, not voting 63; as follows:

Mr. WENTWORTH moved to reconsider the votes just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KASSON. I submit the following privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment to the bill (H. R. 387) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1867, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House of Representatives recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 38, 39, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, and 113, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their seventeenth, one hundred and fourteenth, and one hundred and fifteenth amendments.

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House to the sixth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their disagreement to the amendment of the House to the one hundred and seventh amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the second amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: in line one, after the word "for," insert the following words: "gratuities for;" and in line four of said amendment, before the word "thousand," strike out the word "five" and insert in lieu the word "three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the fifteenth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: in line eighteen, page 16, of the engrossed bill, strike out the words "last of ten" and insert in lieu thereof the words "ninth of ten;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the sixteenth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: in line three of said amendment, after the word "in," insert the words "money or;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the nineteenth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with the following amendment: in line four, page 17, of the engrossed bill, strike out the words "last of ten," and insert in lieu "ninth of ten;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the twentieth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: in line seventeen, page 17, of the engrossed bill, strike out the following: "last of five," and insert in lieu the words "fourth of five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the twenty-first amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: in line thirteen, page 18, of the engrossed bill, strike out the words "last of ten," and insert in lieu the words "ninth of ten;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the one hundred and eighteenth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: add to the end of said amendment the following proviso: "Provided, That no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be paid until a full examination shall be made by the Secretary of the Interior and the First Comptroller of the Treasury; and they shall ascertain that the money is justly and equitably due under contracts made and executed in entire good faith and for necessary supplies actually delivered to the Indians as aforesaid, at reasonable prices, and for this purpose the Comptroller is hereby authorized to take testimony and state the amount due said contractors upon principles of equity; and no money shall be paid or allowed on account of supplies furnished after the passage of this act."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the ninety-first amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: in line one of said amendment strike out the words "Cheyennes, Arapahoes an;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the one hundred and nineteenth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: in line four of said amendment after the word "bond," insert the following words: "to the United States." And in line seven, after the word "trade," insert the following words: "or by the United States district judge or district attorney for the district in which the obligor resides."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the eighth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: strike out all of said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following: "for this amount or so much thereof as may become due to the Choctaws and Chickasaws under the third and forty-sixth articles of the treaty of April 28, 1866, for interest at the rate of five per cent. upon the amount paid for certain lands ceded by them to the United States, $15,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN SHERMAN,
J. W. NESMITH,
J. R. DOOLITTLE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JOHN A. KASSON,
WILLIAM E. NIBLACK,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KASSON. If no member wishes to ask a question, I submit the report without debate, and call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the report was adopted.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON CENTER MARKET.

Mr. INGERSOLL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to incorporate the Center Market Company in the city of Washington, District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

JANES, FOWLER, KIRTLAND, AND COMPANY.

On motion of Mr. INGERSOLL, by unanimous consent, Senate bill No. 429, for the relief of Janes, Fowler, Kirtland & Co., was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

NATIONAL FARM SCHOOL.

Mr. KASSON. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill to incorporate a National Farm School.

Mr. SCHENCK. I object to anything but the regular order of business.

CAPTORS OF BOOTH, ETC.

Mr. HOTCHKISS, from the Committee of Claims submitted a report relating to the rewards for the arrest of the assassins of President Lincoln and the capture of Jefferson Davis; which was ordered to be printed and its further consideration postponed until tomorrow after the reading of the Journal.

THE BANK BILL.

The SPEAKER stated the first business in order to be House bill No. 771, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," and for other purposes, on which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. The object of the first amendment proposed by this bill to the eighteenth section of the bank law is to give additional power to the Comptroller of the Currency to examine the character of any application to organize a bank, to satisfy himself that it is for the purpose of establishing a legitimate bank, and to give him the power after the bank is organized to wind it up if he has reason to believe it to be fraudulently or illegally conducted. The existing law makes it the duty of the Comptroller to give the required certificate to any association if the prescribed formula of the law has been observed. The bank may violate every provision of the law, in defiance of any power possessed by the Comptroller, until some of its notes have been protested; that being the only circumstance under which the Comptroller can interfere with the conduct of the bank.

The next amendment is in the twenty-ninth section of the law, limiting the liability of any person, firm, company, or corporation to one tenth of the capital of the bank. The existing law has no provision to prevent loans beyond that proportion of the capital. Many small banks organized in different parts of the country are owned and managed for the benefit of individuals and firms in the city of New York and other places, who use nearly all the assets of the bank. The Comptroller may know this, as was the case with the bank at Venango, with Culver, Penn & Co., and the Merchants' Bank at Washington, with Bayne & Co., but he cannot interfere until the notes of such a bank are protested. It is easy for any one to organize a bank by furnishing the bonds required to be deposited as security for the ninety per cent. of circulating notes, and the party organizing the bank may then take the circulating notes for his own use. These notes are equal in value to the same amount of greenbacks, for when put into circulation they never go back to the bank for redemption, in the present condition of the currency; it is true a debt to the bank is created amounting to more than one tenth of the capital, but the Comptroller has no power to interfere, and the bank claims it to be "a balance" due them and not a loan.

The amendment to section thirty forfeits the whole debt whenever interest is taken beyond the amount allowed by law, instead of forfeiting only the interest, as provided by the law now.

Section thirty-two relates to the redemption of circulating notes, and changes the present law so far as to require the banks in certain cities named in the bill to redeem their own circulation and the circulation of those banks for which they are redeeming agent in the cities of New York, Philadelphia, and Boston. It provides for the redemption of all national bank notes in one of the seventeen great commercial centers of the country, and requires the banks in those commercial centers to redeem their own notes and the notes of the banks they redeem, either at New York, Philadelphia, or Boston. It also makes satisfactory compensation to all these banks for this work of redemption by allowing balances in other banks to be counted as part of the required reserve. The banks in places outside the seventeen commercial centers are required to have a reserve of fifteen per cent. of their liabilities for circulation and deposit to meet demands against them, but may count balances due them from banks employed as their redeeming agent to the extent of three fifths of the required reserve. Banks in the seventeen commercial centers are required to have a reserve equal to twenty-five per cent. of their liabilities but may count balances due them from their redeeming agents in New York, Philadelphia, or Boston, to the extent of one half the required reserve; while the banks in New York, Philadelphia, and Boston must have the full amount of twenty-five per cent. reserve. A bank in any part of Illinois, Ohio, or any other State may redeem in New York, Philadelphia, or Boston; otherwise it must redeem in Cincinnati, Chicago, or some other commercial center; and in the latter case, the bank redeeming the notes must also redeem them at some bank in New York, Philadelphia, or Boston.

When the effect of the national banking law is fully understood and appreciated the national banks will discover that their circulating notes are required at home for their own use, and that it is not for their interest to send them to distant places for circulation. The great difficulty in the banks now throughout the interior of the country is to find currency; and they generally give a draft on New York or some one of the large centers of commerce rather than pay out currency. Under the old system, the State banks issued as many notes as they could circulate, and preferred always to pay in their notes; but the amount of notes that any national bank can issue being limited by law, the difficulty with the banks is to procure a sufficient amount of currency for the daily transaction of their business; after sending away their own notes they often find it necessary to send to New York and pay a premium for other notes for their daily use.

The amendments of section thirty-four relate to the returns of the banks, the object of it being to make the returns more complete and intelligible, and to provide penalties for neglect or for deceptive or fraudulent returns.

Section forty-one relates to the tax on banks, and changes the existing law by striking out the annual tax of one half per cent. on the amount of capital in excess of the amount invested in bonds of the United States, and diminishes the annual tax on circulation from one per cent. to one half per cent. The provisions in regard to State taxation are left precisely as in the existing law. This amendment provides also for the return of the amount of notes of State banks which have been paid out by any association, on which after the 1st of August a tax of ten per cent. is levied; any bank may receive such notes at one hundred cents for a dollar, but with the tax of ten per cent. on the amount paid out only ninety cents for a dollar would be realized for them. The effect of this will doubtless be to exclude the notes of State banks from circulation, leaving greenbacks and national currency the only paper money in circulation.

The amendment to section forty-five requires security to the full amount of public money deposited in any national bank designated as a public depository, and weekly returns to be made of the amount of public money deposited to the credit of the Treasurer or any disbursing officer or agent of the United States. It also makes it the duty of the Treasurer to transfer to the Treasury any excess of deposit beyond the amount of security. A proviso is added to this section, prohibiting the selection of any national bank as a depository of public money at Washington or in the cities where a sub-Treasury is located; requiring all public money in those places to be deposited in the Treasury or sub-Treasuries. I am opposed to the use of the public money by banks, and wish to restrict it; yet I believe this provision applied only to a few of the large cities will operate to incommode the Government and the public. In New York, for example, collectors of internal revenue being obliged to deposit their collections every day, would be at a great inconvenience, and I think they would find it impossible to make all their deposits each day in the sub-Treasury. The objects of the amendments to section fifty-six are mainly to give the power to any receiver appointed under the law to bring suits, and to meet other difficulties which have been found by recent experience to exist in discharging the duties which the law devolves upon him.

The amendments of the twenty-first section are, in some respects, the most important in this bill; their object was to furnish currency for new banks and for the conversion of the remaining State banks, by withdrawing from each bank now established ten per cent. of the amount of currency they are entitled to under the existing law. This if carried out fully would give thirty millions for the purpose, and be sufficient to supply what is now wanted. A majority of the committee were unwilling to reduce the pro rata of circulation of any bank with a capital not exceeding $300,000; making up for it, in part, by taking an increased proportion from a few large banks by limiting the amount of currency to any one bank, not to exceed $1,000,000. The National Bank of Commerce of New York with a capital of ten millions, and four millions of currency now in circulation, would by this amendment be entitled to ten per cent. only of currency; although one third of the capital of that bank must be invested in Government bonds to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States.

I cannot perceive the justice of taking away all but ten per cent. of the amount of currency to which a bank of ten millions is entitled, and allowing other banks to invest the whole of their capital, when not exceeding $300,000, in bonds to be pledged as security, and receive ninety per cent. of that amount in notes for circulation. The abuses of the national currency act will be found to be generally in banks of small capital, which can be controlled and managed by individuals for their own benefit. It has always seemed to me that the system of a national currency would have been better for the community if the ratio of circulation to capital had been made uniform, and in no case to exceed fifty per cent. of the capital of any bank; so that while one half of the capital was in bonds deposited in the Treasury, the other half would be employed in the regular business of the bank. As this amendment now reads, exempting the banks of not more than $300,000 capital from any reduction, there will be a margin of about twenty-four millions to organize new national banks.

The Comptroller of the Currency, in his annual report, recommended the issue of one hundred millions of six per cent. bonds in place of one hundred millions of greenbacks to be withdrawn from circulation, and to give the banks ninety millions more of circulating notes upon the pledge of those bonds as security.

The committee could neither see the wisdom nor justice of the Government assuming the payment of six millions annually for interest, only for the purpose of increasing the bank circulation. So long as there is no redemption of the notes of national banks, they circulate, in every respect, equally as well as greenbacks. The national currency now in circulation is so much addition to the currency of the country. The Government might as well loan greenbacks to the banks without interest as to authorize the issue of more national currency. If the $300,000,000 of national currency had been issued by the Government in greenbacks it would have saved annually at least eighteen millions, which is now paid for interest on the bonds pledged to secure that three hundred millions of national bank notes. The Government should have the benefit of the issue if more paper money is necessary. It is to be hoped that the national bank notes will never be allowed by Congress to exceed the present amount of three hundred millions; and when more bank notes are required, that the ratio of circulation to each bank be reduced to furnish the currency required for the new banks. I have stated the leading features of the amendment proposed by this bill, and now leave it for the action of the House.

THE SPEAKER. The amendments of the committee will be first in order.

MR. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to insert on page 13, after line three hundred and four, the following:

And provided further, That in all cases where a national bank has paid, or may pay, in excess of what may be found due from said bank, on account of the duty required to be paid to the Treasurer of the United States, the bank so having paid or paying such excess of duty, may state an account therefor, on being certified by the Treasurer of the United States and found correct by the First Auditor and approved by the First Comptroller of the Treasury, shall be refunded in the ordinary manner by warrant on the Treasury.

MR. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I send up to the Clerk's desk a letter, which I ask to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE TREASURY OF THE UNITED STATES,
WASHINGTON, July 14, 1866.

SIR: A number of national banks having made application for return of duties claimed to have been illegally exacted and paid, a statement of said claims, so far as they had at that time been preferred, was, on the 21st day of May last, submitted to the Solicitor of the Treasury for his opinion, and with the view of ascertaining whether proper authority of law existed for the return to the banks of the duty claimed to have been overpaid.

I inclose copies of a circular issued from this office under date of June 27, 1866, which circular embodies a statement of the origin of said claims made to the Solicitor, with his opinion, in reply, that there was no existing law authorizing the return to the banks of the amounts claimed.

In regard to these claims, I desire respectfully further to state, that as the matter now stands, those banks which refused compliance with the requirements of this office, in the particulars named, and continued so to refuse until the modifications which in effect released them had been adopted, escaped the payment of the duty; while such banks as did comply with the requirements and paid duty on the items have now no means of recovery; the effect being to make a distinction against those banks which complied, and in favor of those which resisted the payment required. Many of the banks which paid the duty, protesting that they deemed the requirement an improper one, were informed from this office that it was not deemed that their rights to recovery, thereafter, of an amount of duty improperly exacted, would be prejudiced by their making payment then, as in case it was decided by competent authority that such payment was improperly exacted, the amount overpaid would be allowed as a credit on the payment due on the next return.

It appearing from the opinion of the Solicitor of the Treasury that this course cannot lawfully be pursued, and deeming it an act of justice to the banks concerned that some provision should be made for the return to them of such amounts of duty as may have been paid by them under requirements subsequently modified, (which modification would, if made before the payment, have released them therefrom,) I have prepared, and have the honor to submit herewith, an amendment to section forty-one of the national currency act, providing for the return of duty under all the safeguards provided by any act for the payment of money out of the Treasury, the adoption of which amendment I beg respectfully to recommend.

Very respectfully, F. E. SPINNER.

Treasurer United States.

Hon. SAMUEL HOOPER, of Committee on Banking and Currency, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

TENNESSEE—AGAIN.

Mr. DAWES. I rise to a question of privilege, to make a report from the Committee of Elections.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the banking bill will be laid aside to allow the Committee of Elections to make a report.

No objection was made.

Mr. DAWES. The Committee of Elections, to whom were referred the credentials of certain persons claiming to have been duly elected as Representatives to this Congress from the State of Tennessee, have instructed me to report that the credentials of the following gentlemen have been referred to the committee, namely: Nathaniel G. Taylor, for the first district of Tennessee; Horace Maynard, for the second district; William B. Stokes, for the third district; Edmund Cooper, for the fourth district; William D. Campbell, for the fifth district; Samuel L. Arnold, for the sixth district; Isaac R. Hawkins, for the seventh district; and John W. Leftwich, for the eighth district. The credentials presented have been examined by the committee and appear to be in conformity with the laws of the State of Tennessee and of the United States. They set forth that on the first Thursday of August, in the year 1865, each one of these gentlemen was duly elected a Representative in Congress in conformity with the laws of Tennessee and of the United States. Each one of the credentials is signed by the Governor of the State and attested by the secretary of state, with the seal of the State affixed thereto. The committee have instructed me to report that those credentials are in conformity with law, and to move that these several gentlemen be sworn in as members of the House from the State of Tennessee.

Mr. LE BLOND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAWES. Yes, sir.

Mr. LE BLOND. I fully concur with the report made by the chairman of the Committee of Elections. But, sir, I am somewhat puzzled to know how that committee comes to the conclusion that it has given any force or effect to the resolution that passed this House and the Senate. The preamble to that resolution presupposes that the State of Tennessee was out of the Union and not entitled to representation until the adoption or ratification of the constitutional amendment. If so, I ask the chairman of the committee how in Heaven's name the election of these Representatives can be legal. For one I believe the election to be proper. I believe these members are entitled to seats and that they have been so entitled all the time. But if the spirit of that preamble is right, certainly the report of this committee is a perfect anomaly. I have been in favor of admitting these men all along, and I simply make this statement, hoping that the chairman of the committee may be able to reconcile his position.

Mr. DAWES. After the luminous exposition of the gentleman showing the inconsistency of the position in which he finds himself after having voted for that resolution, I do not think it necessary to detain the House any further, and I therefore demand the previous question.

Mr. LE BLOND. I do not vote for it at all. [Laughter.]

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the report of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. LE BLOND. It is not necessary; there is nobody opposed to it.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSRS. NATHANIEL G. TAYLOR, HORACE MAYNARD, and WILLIAM B. STOKES then came forward amid applause, took the oath of office prescribed by the act of July 2, 1862, and took their seats in the House.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I move the House now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That will be till to-morrow.

Mr. EGGLESTON. That is what I propose. The motion was disagreed to.

BANK BILL—AGAIN.

The House resumed the consideration of the banking bill, the pending question being on the amendment offered by Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts.

Mr. STEVENS, I think I understand the object of that amendment; I am not quite sure. Some time ago it was decided by the late Commissioner of Internal Revenue that banks were bound to pay the tax of one sixth of one per cent., and I suppose it has reference to what is paid under that decision. Now, that was decided by the courts in Philadelphia to be illegal. There has been paid a good many thousand dollars of revenue in Pennsylvania under that erroneous decision. I believe this amendment has reference to that.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. It refers entirely to that. The Solicitor reported that there was no authority to refund the money.

Mr. STEVENS. I suggest whether we ought not to have a clause ratifying what has already been paid.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. They have not asked it.

Mr. STEVENS. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend by inserting after the word "any," in line fifty-one, page 3, the words, "national banking," so that it will read "national banking association."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I suggest that the bill be now taken up and read by paragraphs for amendment.

The SPEAKER. Under what rule?

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Let the Chair suggest the rule.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection the bill will be read by paragraphs for amendment, the same as in Committee of the Whole, allowing five minutes' speeches pro and con.

No objection being made, it was so ordered.

The Clerk read the first paragraph, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the act entitled "An act to provide a national currency, secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," approved June 3, 1864, be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows, namely:

That section eighteen of said act be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that if, upon a careful examination of the facts so reported and of any other facts which may come to the knowledge of the Comptroller of the Currency, whether by means of a special commission, which he is hereby authorized to appoint for the purpose of inquiring into the condition of such association, or otherwise, it shall appear to him that such association has complied with all the provisions of law and is prepared and intends to engage in, and is lawfully entitled to commence, the business of banking, he shall give to such association a certificate, under his hand and official seal, that such association has complied with all the provisions of law required to be complied with before being entitled to commence the business of banking under the national currency act, and that such association is authorized to commence said business accordingly; and it shall be the duty of said association to cause said certificate to be published in some newspaper in the city or town where the association is located for at least sixty days next after the issuing thereof, and if no newspaper is there published, the certificate shall be published in a newspaper designated by the Comptroller of the Currency. And whenever the Comptroller of the Currency shall have evidence, or shall have reason to believe, that any such association is not carrying on the proper business of banking, or that any of its reports required by law have been false or fraudulent, or that its funds have been willfully misapplied by the directors or officers, in violation of the national currency act, or that the directors have intentionally or negligently violated, or intentionally or negligently permitted any of the officers, agents, or servants of the association to violate any of the provisions of law, it shall be the duty of the Comptroller of the Currency to cause an examination of its affairs, and upon satisfactory proof to the Comptroller that such association is not carrying on the proper business of banking, or has rendered false or fraudulent reports, or that its funds have been misapplied, or that it has violated the provisions of law, he may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, appoint a receiver to close up its business, according to section fifty of the national currency act.

Mr. LYNCH. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of this paragraph:

Provided, however, That the appointment of such receiver shall be vacated and the Comptroller shall be enjoined and restrained from further proceedings in the premises under this section, if the nearest district, circuit, or territorial court of the United States shall, on application of such association, made within ten days after it shall have been notified of such appointment and upon hearing of the case, so order.

The object of the amendment is to give the same right of appeal that is given in section fifty of the national currency act. That provides for closing up on certain violations of the law.

Mr. CONKLING. If I caught the sense clearly I would suggest that the amendment goes further than the gentleman intends. It provides that the appointment of any such commissioner shall be vacated if the court shall so order.

Mr. LYNCH. The section provides that the Comptroller of the Currency shall wind up the bank under certain provisions of the national currency act, and the proviso is to give the parties a right to appeal to the courts. If the gentleman will refer to section fifty he will find the provision referred to.

Mr. CONKLING. I would suggest to the gentleman, then, that he ought to provide not only that the appointment should be vacated, but that the proceedings themselves should be vacated.

Mr. LYNCH. It provides just that.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Perhaps I misunderstood the gentleman; but I understood him to say that his amendment was from the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. LYNCH. I did not say it was from the committee; I offered it as an amendment of my own.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. It seems to me unnecessary, as that provision already exists in the law. The propriety of the provision I assent to, but it is already provided for in the law. This subject was discussed in the committee, and they thought it was sufficiently provided for now in the fiftieth section of the national currency act.

Mr. LYNCH. Section fifty does not cover this case. That section provides in relation to "such association against which proceedings have been so instituted on account of any alleged refusal to redeem." This is not on account of any alleged refusal to redeem; therefore that proviso is not applicable to this at all. It is only applicable to a bank which is being wound up on account of its alleged refusal to redeem, and it does not apply to the extension given under this section.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I think I understand very well what the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LYNCH] is seeking to accomplish. The object of the committee in this respect was this: that where a bank fraudulently violates the law, or neglects the requirements of the law, the Comptroller of the Currency shall have the opportunity to come in and take possession of the assets of the bank, giving him more full power than he has heretofore had to save the public money, if it be a public depository, and if not at least to save the money due to the depositors, and also provide that the circulation may be promptly redeemed. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Maine will not be adopted.

Mr. LYNCH. I would call the attention of the gentleman to section fifty of the currency act, to which this section relates. As the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] has said, it was the intention that this proviso should apply. But he will find that the proviso of section fifty does not apply to this section at all.

The hour of four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m. having arrived, the House took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The hour of half past seven o'clock p. m. having arrived, the House resumed its session.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. O'NEILL asked and obtained leave of absence for the remainder of the session for his colleague, Mr. THAYER.

ADAM GARLOCH.

On motion of Mr. HOLMES, the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions were discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Adam Garloch, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ASSAULT ON A MEMBER.

Mr. BANKS. I move that all further proceedings under the order of the House relating to the assault upon the member from Iowa [Mr. GRINNELL] be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ANCONA demanded the regular order of business.

The House, pursuant to order, resumed the consideration of business upon the Speaker's table.

PORTS OF DELIVERY.

The first business upon the Speaker's table were amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 609, to constitute Omaha and Nebraska City, in the Territory of Nebraska, and St. Paul, in Minnesota, ports of delivery.

Mr. ELIOT. I move that the bill with the amendments be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PRICE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill and amendments were referred; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CERTIFICATES OF REGISTRY TO VESSELS.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 728, to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue certificates of registry or enrollment and license to certain vessels.

The amendment was as follows:

Add to the bill the following proviso: Provided, That there shall be paid on each of said vessels that are foreign built a tax equal to the internal revenue tax upon the materials of construction of similar vessels of American build.

Mr. ELIOT. I move that the House concur in the amendment of the Senate.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PETER ANDERSON.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 79, for the relief of Peter Anderson; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

REUBEN CLOUGH.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 171, for the relief of Reuben Clough; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

MRS. NANCY A. STOCKS.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 358, granting a pension to Mrs. Nancy A. Stocks; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read at length. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Mrs. Nancy A. Stocks, widow of Reuben Stocks, late a private in company K, eighteenth regiment Illinois infantry volunteers, on the pension-roll, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence from the 11th day of June, 1868, and to continue during her widowhood.

Mr. ANCONA. I insist on the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion was not agreed to; there being—ayes nine, noes not counted.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM CROSWELL.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 324) entitled "An act for the relief of William Crosswell;" which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read at length, proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of William Crosswell, of Boston, Massachusetts, on the roll of invalid pensioners at the rate of eight dollars per month, the pension to commence February 1, 1865.

Mr. PERHAM. I move to amend the bill by adding the words, "and said pension shall be paid out of the naval pension fund."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HOPESTILL BIGELOW.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 359) entitled "An act for the relief of Hopestill Bigelow, of New Market, New Jersey;" which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

ABRAHAM LANSING.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 366) entitled "An act granting a pension to Abraham Lansing;" which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read at length, directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Abraham Lansing, late a master's mate in the United States Navy, on the pension-roll, at the rate of ten dollars per month, to commence from and after the passage of this bill and to continue during his natural life; said pension to be paid out of the naval pension fund.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DRUSEY A. LAYMAN.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 376) entitled "An act granting a pension to Drusey A. Layman;" which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read at length, directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll the name of Drusey A. Layman, of Palatine, Marion county, West Virginia, widow of Eugenius E. Layman, deceased, late a private in company C, of the seventeenth regiment of West Virginia volunteers, and allow and pay to her a pension of eight dollars per month from the death of her husband on the 18th day of January, 1865, to continue during her widowhood.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN PYLE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a bill (S. No. 390) entitled "An act granting a pension to John Pyle;" which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read at length, directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of John Pyle, late a sergeant in company B, one hundred and fifth regiment Indiana militia volunteers, on the pension-roll, at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, to commence from and after the passage of this bill, and to continue during his natural life.

Mr. ANCONA. I move that this bill be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and on that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. PERHAM. I desire to state that the Committee on Invalid Pensions have had before them substantially the same bill, and are in favor of its passage. I ask that the report be read.

The Clerk read the report.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Pennsylvania. I hope that this bill will not be referred. I trust that my colleague [Mr. ANCONA] will withdraw the motion.

Mr. ANCONA. I cannot withdraw it. Let us take the same course with these Senate bills that the Senate has taken to-day with our bills of a precisely similar character.

On the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, there were—ayes 6, noes 55; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER, under the rules, ordered tellers, and appointed Mr. ANCONA and Mr. PERHAM.

The House divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 9, noes 79; no quorum voting.

Mr. ANCONA. I withdraw the demand for a division.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

W. B. KELLEY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 398, for the relief of W. B. Kelley; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to pay to W. B. Kelley, late a second lieutenant in company F, first regiment Kentucky cavalry volunteers, a pension, at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, from the 31st of July 1863, to March 13, 1865, amounting to $291 60.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. PERHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BOUNTIES TO COLORED SOLDIERS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the following amendments of the Senate to House joint resolution, No. 176 amendatory of a joint resolution entitled "A resolution respecting bounties to colored soldiers, and the pensions, bounties, and allowances to their heirs," approved June 15, 1866:

Strike out all after the enacting clause of section two down to the end of section three, and insert in lieu thereof as follows:

That whenever application shall be made by any claimant for bounty under the provisions of the joint resolution aforesaid, by or through any agent or attorney, such agent or attorney shall hereafter be required to file with each claim his oath or affirmation that he has no interest whatever in said bounty beyond the fees for collection of the same, which are hereby fixed and established as follows, namely: for the preparation and prosecution of claims for and the collection and the remittance of all sums not exceeding fifty dollars, the sum of five dollars, and less than $100 the sum of $7.50, and for all sums exceeding $100 the sum of ten dollars; and said fees shall include all expenses incident to the collection of said claims except the expense of the necessary affidavits and notarial or other acknowledgments, which shall be defrayed by the claimant; and any agent or attorney who shall charge directly or indirectly in any case a greater sum for his services in preparing and prosecuting said claims and collecting and remitting the amount due, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction, be punished by fine not exceeding $3,000 nor less than $1,000, and shall be forever excluded from prosecuting military or naval claims against the Government.

Section four, strike out all after the word "depository" to the end of line five.

Section five, line three, strike out "sailor or marine."

Section five, lines four and five, strike out "final statement, descriptive list, or other papers."

Section five, line twelve, strike out "sailor or marine."

Mr. SCHENCK. The amendments of the Senate do not make the resolution so stringent against claimants as the House committee would desire, but after examining the amendments I think we had better concur. I move concurrence.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLAIMS AGAINST NEVADA.

The next business in order on the Speaker's table was Senate joint resolution No. 84, authorizing the payment of certain claims against the late Territory of Nevada; which was read a first and second time.

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to settle and pay outstanding claims chargeable to the contingent expenses of the executive department of the Territory of Nevada, it proposes to transfer so much of the unexpended balance of the appropriation "for compensation and mileage of members of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Nevada" as may be found necessary for that purpose, to the credit of the fund for paying the contingent expenses of the executive department of that Territory, and the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, out of the balance so transferred, are to pay "the said claims as adjusted and allowed."

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES.

The next business in order on the Speaker's table was bill of the Senate No. 401, to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States, which was read a first and second time.

Mr. SCHENCK. I desire to say to the House that this is one of the numerous Senate Army bills, but as we have succeeded at length in getting an arrangement by which the Senate adopted this as a substitute for the substitute of the House, so that we may have a committee of conference, I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and that the committee have leave to report it back at any time.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I object to that. Pass it over for the present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the bill had better be referred until after this order is executed.

The motion to refer was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF CAPITOL GROUNDS.

The next business in order upon the Speaker's table was bill of the Senate No. 389, to enlarge the public grounds around the Capitol; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

THADDEUS HYATT.

The next business in order upon the Speaker's table was bill of the Senate No. 367, to extend the letters-patent granted to Thaddeus Hyatt; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It extends the patent of Thaddeus Hyatt for vault lights for seven years, to end in November, 1873.

Mr. JENCKES. The Committee on Patents have instructed me to report in favor of agreeing to the bill of the Senate. I ask the previous question on its passage.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. JENCKES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES EXPLORING EXPEDITION.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was joint resolution of the Senate No. 126, "to authorize the use of certain plates of the United States exploring expedition by the Navy Department;" which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution authorizes the Joint Committee on the Library to grant to the Navy Department the plates used in illustrating the exploring expedition of Captain Wilkes, with a view of printing a supply of charts for the use of the Navy Department.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Let me state that the Committee on Naval Affairs have examined this bill and recommend its passage.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The next business in order upon the Speaker's table was bill of the Senate No. 125, granting the right of way through the military reserves to the Union Pacific railway and its branches; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Is it in order to move to refer this bill to the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. DRIGGS. It merely grants the right of way.

Mr. PRICE. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. PRICE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THE PORTLAND FIRE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was joint resolution of the Senate No. 131, for the temporary relief of the sufferers by the late fire in Portland, in the State of Maine; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I trust not. This resolution contains no appropriation. It simply provides for a suspension of the collection of taxes.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. There is one provision of the joint resolution which I think ought to be amended. It would relieve from taxation persons owning property in Portland, but residing and doing business elsewhere. For instance, if there be a distiller owning property there, but doing business in Peoria, the payment of his tax would be suspended.

Mr. ALLISON. I will move that the resolution be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, with leave to report at any time.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I believe there is no objection to that on the part of the gentleman who represents the Portland district.

Mr. LYNCH. I have no objection to that reference if the committee have leave to report at any time.

Mr. STEVENS. I desire to add to the resolution an amendment providing that taxes shall also be suspended in the burnt portion of Chambersburg, Pennsylvania.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I supposed that question had already been referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. CONKLING. I have been seeking the floor for an opportunity of making some remarks in regard to this Chambersburg matter.

I notice by the Globe that during my necessary absence from the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania made some remarks in reference to that Chambersburg matter in which he stated that I had been appointed by the Committee of Ways and Means a sub-committee in relation to it. I wish now to set the matter right, and to remind the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that he was forgetful of the facts when he made that statement. I did examine into the matter, but subsequently, upon suggestion of a party admitted into the committee-room, the matter was acted upon by the Committee, and since that time it has never, in any sense, been in my hands. I wished to state this fact for the information of the gentleman and the House, and in justice to myself.

Mr. ALLISON. I demand the previous question on the motion to refer.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion to refer to the Committee of Ways and Means, with leave to report at any time, was agreed to.

MAIL SERVICE TO CHINA.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was joint resolution of the Senate No. 98, to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of ocean mail steamship service between the United States and China," approved February 17, 1865; which was read a first and second time.

On motion of Mr. ALLEY the joint resolution was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

C. T. FAY AND WILLIAM Y. PATCH.

The next business on the Speaker's table was joint resolution of the Senate No. 182, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and settle the accounts of Caleb T. Fay and William Y. Patch, late assessor and collector of internal revenue at San Francisco, California; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. McRUER. I desire to call the previous question upon this joint resolution, but before doing so I will ask for the reading of a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, July 13, 1866.

DEAR SIR: I inclose to you herewith a proposed resolution authorizing the settlement of the accounts of Caleb T. Fay and William Y. Patch, late assessor and collector of internal revenue at San Francisco, upon an equitable and just basis.

From the report to me of clerks of this Department, appointed as a committee to investigate the accounts of those officers and to settle them if possible, I am satisfied that, by reason of informality in the appointment of certain persons who acted and were paid by the collector as assistant assessors, the accounts of these gentlemen cannot be justly settled without the aid of some legislation like that proposed in the accompanying resolution. I therefore desire to call the attention of Congress, through you, to this subject.

Very respectfully,

H. McCULLOCH, Secretary.

Hon. D. C. McRUER, M. C., House of Representatives.

Mr. McRUER. I will merely say that this is a question arising from certain informalities in appointments.

Mr. STEVENS. It seems to me that a more definite bill ought to have been drawn.

Mr. McRUER. The Government failed for six or seven months to furnish the funds there to pay the clerks in the internal revenue department; and it was absolutely necessary that those informalities should take place, or the office be closed.

Mr. STEVENS. What informalities? It very often happens that there is a deficiency in the money needed.

Mr. McRUER. These men were appointed, pro forma, as assistant assessors, without any direct authority of law for the purpose; and on account of this informality the Auditor refuses to pay the account. I now call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. McRUER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MARINE HOSPITAL IN JAPAN.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 408, making an appropriation for the erection of a marine hospital at Yokohama, in Japan, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read at length. The first section provides that the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of constructing a marine hospital for the use of the United States, and to furnish the same with proper furniture, instruments, and medicine, at Yokohama, in Japan. The second section provides that the said sum of money, or so much thereof as shall be necessary for the purposes aforesaid, shall be expended under the direction of the Department of State.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I raise the point of order that this bill contains an appropriation, and therefore must be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the bill will be referred accordingly.

CODIFYING CUSTOMS LAWS.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate joint resolution No. 82, to provide for codifying the laws relating to the customs; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read at length. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be prepared and submitted to Congress at its next session, under the direction of one member of the Senate and one member of the House of Representatives, each to be appointed by the Presiding Officer of the body to which he belongs, a general customs revenue law, designed to supersede all other laws on that subject, and embracing all necessary provisions for regulating the foreign and coasting trades, the assessment and collection of duties on goods, wares, and merchandise imported from foreign countries, and other subject-matters immediately pertaining thereto; the expenses necessarily incurred in the preparation thereof to be paid from the appropriation for the "expenses of collecting the revenue from customs," provided the said expenses shall not exceed $10,000.

Mr. MORRILL. It must be obvious to all that this is a very necessary work, almost as necessary, perhaps, as the general codification of the laws of the United States. I trust it will meet with no objection.

Mr. ELIOT. I desire to state that the Committee on Commerce have had this subject under consideration, have examined it pretty fully, and are agreed that this joint resolution should pass. This work should have been performed years ago. I have a letter here from the Secretary of the Treasury stating the importance of the passage of this joint resolution, which I will have read if any gentleman desires to hear it.

Several MEMBERS. That is not necessary.

The joint resolution was then read the third time and passed.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SERGEANT MILTON M'KINNON.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate joint resolution No. 111, for the relief of Sergeant Milton McKinnon; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution was read at length. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Sergeant Milton McKinnon the sum of $58 45, being the amount of a draft drawn in his favor by Major M. L. Martin, late paymaster in the United States Army, on the Assistant Treasurer of the United States in New York, dated March 24, 1864, and which was lost in its transmission to New York; provided Milton McKinnon file a duplicate of the draft, duly authenticated, with the Secretary of the Treasury; also that the payment authorized shall not be made until McKinnon shall execute to the United States a bond, with security, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, conditioned to indemnify the United States against all loss, cost, or damage incurred by reason of the payment hereby authorized.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

Mr. INGERSOLL moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ILLINOIS SOLDIERS' COLLEGE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was joint resolution S. No. 139, for the benefit of the Illinois Soldiers' College and Military Academy; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I hope that this bill will be put upon its passage now.

The resolution, which was read at length, provides that the Secretary of War be authorized to transfer to the Illinois Soldiers' College and Military Academy, from the surplus on hand and not needed for the public service, cots and bedding necessary to accommodate five hundred persons, for the use of free students in that institution disabled by the war.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FARNSWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SOLOMON P. SMITH.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 410) entitled "An act for the relief of Solomon P. Smith;" which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read at length, provides that there shall be paid to Solomon P. Smith, late a captain in the one hundred and fifteenth regiment of New York volunteers, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $260, for his pension from January 14, 1865, when he was mustered out of the service, until February 15, 1866, the date of the filing of his application for a pension with the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I move that this bill be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

ALEXANDER F. PRATT.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 435) entitled "An act for the relief of Alexander F. Pratt;" which was read a first and second time.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Alexander F. Pratt $530, in full for pursuing and capturing Elijah K. Jauner, convicted of counterfeiting United States coin.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that this bill be referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. PAINE. I understand that a bill for the payment of this claim has passed the House on two or three occasions at former sessions of Congress, and has been lost in the Senate. I believe that those members of this House who are familiar with this case are satisfied with the bill. I am not myself familiar with the facts, but I wish that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Allison] would withdraw his motion for the reference of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. The Secretary of the Treasury has at his disposal a large fund which is annually appropriated for the payment of such claims as this. There must be something peculiar about this claim or it would be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury without any special authority. I would like to know what there is peculiar about this case.

Mr. PAINE. Perhaps I may be able to state sufficient to satisfy the gentleman on that point.

Mr. ROSS. I make the point of order that this bill contains an appropriation, and must be referred, under the rule, to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order; and the bill must be so referred.

MRS. AMELIA FEASTER.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 434) entitled "An act for the relief of Mrs. Amelia Feaster, of Columbia, South Carolina;" which was read a first and second time.

The bill requires the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Mrs. Amelia Feaster, of Columbia, South Carolina, $10,000, as a reimbursement for money expended by her in alleviating the suffering of the officers and soldiers of the United States Army confined in the rebel prisons in that city during the late rebellion.

Mr. KELLEY. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

E. J. CURLEY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 433) entitled "An act for the relief of E. J. Curley;" which was read a first and second time.

The bill requires the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to E. J. Curley $34,248 52, as compensation in full for corn purchased of him by Captain E. B. W. Reslieaux, assistant quartermaster, on the part of the Government.

Mr. CONKLING. I move that it be referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. It makes an appropriation, and must be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

It was referred accordingly.

WASHINGTON CROSLAND.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 431, for the relief of Washington Crosland; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. CONKLING moved that it be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MISS SUE MURPHEY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 412, for the relief of Miss Sue Murphey, of Decatur, Alabama; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. CONKLING moved that it be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEWIS DYER.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 383, for the relief of Lewis Dyer, late surgeon of the eighty-first regiment of Illinois volunteers; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, moved that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN HASTINGS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 324, for the relief of John Hastings, late surveyor and depository of public moneys at Pittsburgh; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I hope that bill will be put on its passage.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. What are the provisions of the act to which this refers? I remember we had a contest over this case at the last session.

Mr. MOORHEAD. The gentleman recollects the law as well as I do. I did not know this was here until just now. I know this man suffered in the war; that he was terribly wounded and is now destitute. This is to release one of his bail, an honest, hard-working man.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If John Hastings was disabled in the war I am willing he shall have a pension. The gentleman says he did not know this bill was here till just now. He did not know last session why the original bill was here. If we grant a pension to Hastings it is enough. The original bill allowed him a credit for $9,956 62, and this allows a like credit. Now, is it proposed to cover $18,000? Why we are asked to pass this I cannot understand. I think it ought to be referred.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I move it be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not object to that.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I ask that the committee shall have leave to report at any time.

Mr. CONKLING. I object to that.

The motion to refer was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOSIAH O. ARMES.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 16, for the relief of Josiah O. Armes; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WINDOM. I call the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. The bill makes an appropriation, and must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The bill was referred accordingly.

THE PORTLAND FIRE.

The next business in order upon the Speaker's table was bill of the Senate No. 428, for the relief of the sufferers by the late fire in Portland, Maine; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes the President to tender to the Governor of Maine, in the name of the Government of the United States, for the relief of the sufferers by the late fire in Portland, $50,000, to be used for that end in such manner as he may think best. The bill also makes an appropriation of $50,000.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move the reference of that bill to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will permit the bill to pass. There are now from twelve to fifteen thousand of the people of Portland homeless and houseless.

Mr. LATHAM. I rise to a question of order. I submit that this is an appropriation bill, and must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I appeal to the gentleman from West Virginia to withdraw that point of order.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Give the reasons.

The SPEAKER. Debate on the bill must take place in Committee of the Whole.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, and it was agreed to.

So the bill was referred to the Committee of Claims.

PAYMENT OF THE PUBLIC DEBT.

The next business in order on the Speaker's table was bill of the Senate No. 300, for the payment of the public debt; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MORRILL. I suppose the members of the House have noticed this bill. I do not suppose the House wishes to consider the bill to-night. I move that it be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means with leave to report it at any time.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I object.

Mr. MORRILL. Well, I believe we have that authority, whether the gentleman objects or not.

The motion to refer was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I understand the committee have leave to report the bill back at any time?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not understand that they have a right to report back a bill of this character at any time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read from the Digest, the last part of the one hundred and fifty-first rule in reference to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The Clerk read as follows:

"And the said committee shall have leave to report for commitment at any time."

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the committee have a right to report a bill of this character at any time.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the bill be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

MARGARETTE ANN LAURIE.

The next bill in order upon the Speaker's table was the bill of the Senate, No. 441, for the relief of Margarette Ann Laurie; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Margarette Ann Laurie $2,700 for the use of her house and lot by the military authorities of the District of Columbia.

Mr. CONKLING. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. DELANO. I ask that the report of the Senate, which I send up, be read.

The report was read.

Mr. DELANO. I wish to say that I have examined the evidence in this case as well as I could, and I think the evidence sustains the report of the Senate committee. These premises were occupied from 1862 to the termination of the war without any payment of rent and at very considerable damage. As to the loyalty of the claimant there can be no doubt, if the evidence can be depended upon, and I have no doubt it can be.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. Allow me to interrupt the gentleman with a question. I wish to know whether he is in favor of paying this woman because the Bucktail regiment of Pennsylvania encamped upon her lot, when he refused to support a bill for the benefit of the man who led that regiment?

Mr. DELANO. If the gentleman has delivered himself and is easy in his mind I will state that I am in favor of this bill upon its merits, and I base my support upon its merits alone.

Mr. CONKLING. I think such a bill as this should be referred to some committee.

Mr. DELANO. This lot was occupied by the Government and no rent was paid for it. It was taken possession of by the medical department of the Army, and it was done so illegally and irregularly that the claim could not be settled by the Department.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask the gentleman, regardless of what may be the particular merits of this bill, whether it is not better to refer all these claims to a committee rather than to select out a particular case in this way. I think, upon reflection, he will agree with me that the bill had better go to a committee. If it has merits it will certainly be reported back.

Mr. DELANO. There is certainly much force in the remarks of the gentleman from New York. I, however, look upon this case as simply a claim for rent and occupancy by the Government of the claimant's property. It is a very clear case, and I should be glad if the House would pass it without a reference; but if there be serious objections, I will not press the matter.

Mr. CONKLING. If the gentleman presses it, I will withdraw my motion; but I submit to him that the bill really better be referred.

Mr. DELANO. My judgment is that the bill ought to be passed. That is all I can say. I leave the matter with the House.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. There are a great many cases of precisely the same character, where buildings have been taken by the Government without any order, and if we establish a precedent by passing this bill it might be dangerous. For one I would much rather it should be referred and reported on.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I will insist upon my motion, and upon it demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof it was referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. CONKLING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ACCOUNTS OF ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. BINGHAM. I rise to a question of privilege. I send to the Clerk's desk a report of the committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the House No. 101, for the relief of certain officers of the Army. I ask that it be read.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the resolution (H. R. No. 101) for the relief of certain officers of the Army having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to the respective Houses as follows:

That the House of Representatives recede from their disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, numbered 1, 2, 4, and 5, and agree to the same:

That the Senate recede from its third amendment.

ALEXANDER RAMSEY,
EDGAR COWAN,
W. SPRAGUE,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN A. BINGHAM,
GILMAN MARSTON,
NELSON TAYLOR,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will explain to the House that the bill, as amended by the conference committee, provides for an agreement to some of the Senate amendments and a disagreement to others. The effect of the report will be to leave the bill so as to provide that in every case in which a commissioned officer has actually entered on his duty, but by reason of being killed or captured by the enemy or other cause beyond his control, was not mustered into the service, the pay department shall allow such officer or his heirs the full pay and emoluments of his rank from the day when he actually entered on such duty, deducting all pay that may have been actually received by such officer. It provides that in case of death, the heirs or legal representatives of the party who would have been entitled to this compensation if he had lived, shall receive it. I now call the previous question on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PORTRAIT OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN.

Mr. RAYMOND. I ask unanimous consent of the House to suspend further proceedings under the order of the House for the present, until I submit a resolution for its action, the object of which I will briefly explain. Some months ago I received from the United States consul at Aix-la-Chapelle a letter of introduction which he had given to a Venetian artist by the name of Salviati. He inclosed a letter from that artist, from which I now send to the Clerk's desk an extract, and ask that it may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

134 REGENT STREET, WEST LONDON,
April 9, 1866.

SIR: I have the honor to address you, through the inclosed introduction of W. H. Vesey, Esq., of Aix-la-Chapelle.

During the deplorable war, which has now ceased, my fellow-citizens and myself ever felt the deepest sympathy for your great nation; and on hearing of your national bereavement in the death of one who will ever be remembered as one of the world's greatest heroes, my establishment thought it could not better express the sympathies of our countrymen than by presenting to the American nation a portrait of their deceased President, executed in such imperishable materials that it might be handed down to their posterity, and ever preserve in their memories the greatness and recollections of Abraham Lincoln.

Prompted by such heart-felt emotions, a portrait of him has been executed in enamel mosaic, at my establishment in Venice, and now begs its acceptance by the United States people, as a small token of our deepest sympathies with them in their bereavement, and as an expression of our unqualified admiration of the character of the great man represented by the portrait.

Should this favor be denied me, I would beg that the portrait may be accepted by the American people, and placed in one of their great and admirable institutions, where it may be seen by all true Americans, who may rest assured that one thousand years hence the great President's portrait will be as perfect as when first executed, if uninjured by accident or willful damage.

I have the honor to be, sir, your most obedient servant,

A. SALVIATI.

Hon. HENRY J. RAYMOND,

Member of the House of Representatives.

Mr. RAYMOND. The portrait, to which reference is made in the letter which has just been read, reached me a week or two since, and I caused it to be placed in the Speaker's room for the examination of members of this House. Those who have examined it will have seen that while the class of art to which it belongs is not perhaps the highest among the fine arts, it has nevertheless a great many recommendations, chief among which, as the artist himself states, is its imperishable nature. It is a style of art which is one of the oldest in Europe, and has contributed by its character to the preservation of the great master-pieces of early ages, which otherwise would have gone to decay. Some of the principal buildings of Italy, and notably among them San Marco of Venice, and St. Peter's of Rome, are ornamented with works of art in mosaic, some in precious stones and others in enamel. They have endured for hundreds of years, and are still as bright and fresh as when first executed. I trust that this House and this Congress will deem it proper to accept this gift from this foreign artist, presented as a tribute on his behalf and that of those associated with him to the greatness of our deceased President, as a mark of their respect for the great country over which he presided.

Some writer—I do not now recollect who—has remarked, in reference to criticism upon literary works, that the verdict of a foreign nation may well be regarded as essentially the verdict of posterity. I am sure that that remark, to a certain extent, may be applied to the verdict of foreign nations upon the political character of the great men of any day; and in this respect we may well congratulate ourselves upon the unanimous approbation and applause which have greeted the career of the deceased President, whose loss we so recently were called upon to deplore. Perhaps more than any other prominent American who ever lived, except, perhaps, Benjamin Franklin, Abraham Lincoln was the embodiment and representative of whatever is peculiar in the American character and in American culture; and more than any American, with possibly the same exception, his character and his career have commanded the admiration and applause of foreign nations. From all parts of Europe—from the workmen of England, from the workmen of the great manufacturing cities of France—have come to us in various forms tributes to his character and tributes to the great work which he performed for this his native land, and the only land which his eyes had ever seen. And now, sir, there comes to us from the ancient city of Venice a tribute in the form of a work of art, to which, I am sure, we shall accord a similar welcome.

Something, perhaps, of respect and sympathy may be due to the city from which this work comes; a city whose vicissitudes, political and civil, have been among the most remarkable in the history of the world; a city rightly styled by one of England's greatest poets the "eldest child of liberty" that—

"Once did hold the gorgeous East in fee
And was the safeguard of the West;"

a city which has passed through all the perils and changes to which free institutions are always subject, and which will stand as a monument of political vicissitude and uncertainty through all time to come; a city which is now passing through some of the most remarkable fortunes ever connected with the history of any people—having been the first great representative in Europe of republican liberty; then handed over by the first Napoleon to the domination of Austria; and now received from Austria by the third Napoleon, to be handed back again, as we may hope and trust, to the dominion of liberty. A present of this sort from such a city to this country, as a token of remembrance for Abraham Lincoln, may well be received by us with special expressions of appreciation and regard.

Sir, I offer this resolution, which I trust will be adopted unanimously:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring) That Congress accept the portrait of Abraham Lincoln, presented by Signor Salviati, of the city of Venice, with thanks to the donor, and that the portrait be placed for safe custody in the Library of Congress.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

COURTS OF WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

The House resumed the consideration of business on the Speaker's table, the first business being Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 438) entitled "An act in relation to the courts of Washington Territory."

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

On page 1, line five, strike out "the" after "that" and insert in lieu thereof "each."

In the same line strike out "judges" and insert "judge."

On the same page, in line seven, strike out "the" after "in" and insert "his."

Amend the title by inserting, after the word "relation," the words "to the appointment of clerks for."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the amendments be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF THE REVENUE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 780,) entitled "An act to protect the revenue, and for other purposes."

Mr. MORRILL. Several of the amendments to this bill are important, while others are merely verbal. I move that the House non-concur in all the amendments, and ask the appointment of a committee of conference.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It is not necessary, I suppose, that all these amendments should be read; but there is one striking out the ninth section of the bill which I think ought to be concurred in; and as I shall ask a separate vote on it. I request that it may be reported.

The Clerk read the following amendment of the Senate:

Strike out the ninth section of the bill, as follows: *And be it further enacted, That in determining the dutiable value of imported merchandise there shall be added to the cost, or to the actual wholesale price or general market value at the time of exportation in the principal markets of the country from whence the same shall have been imported into the United States, the cost of transportation, shipment, and transhipment, with all the expenses included from the place of growth, production, or manufacture, whether by land or water, to the vessel in which shipment is made to the United States; the value of the sack, box, or covering of any kind in which such goods are contained; commission at the usual rates, but in no case less than two and a half per cent.; brokerage, export duty, and all other actual or usual charges for putting up, preparing, and packing for transportation or shipment. And all charges of a general character incurred in the purchase of a general invoice shall be distributed pro rata among all parts of such invoice; and every part thereof charged with duties based on value shall be advanced according to its proportion, and all wines or other articles paying specific duties by grades shall be graded and pay duty according to the actual value so determined: *Provided, That all additions made to the entered value of merchandise for charges shall be regarded as part of the actual value of such merchandise, and if such addition shall exceed by ten per cent. the value so declared in the entry, in addition to the duties imposed by law there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of twenty per cent. on such value: *Provided, That the duty shall in no case be assessed upon an amount less than the invoice or entered value.

Mr. MORRILL. I trust the House will consent to non-concur in all the amendments of the Senate. I do not consider the matter of any great importance; but it seems to me that the best way would be to allow the whole subject to go to the committee of conference.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If we non-concur in the amendment of the Senate to strike out the ninth section, of course the managers of the conference on the part of the House would feel bound to insist on the retention of that section. I think it ought to be stricken out. It provides for a general increase of duty on imported goods. It is really an indirect way of revising the tariff. On many articles the increase of duty will be considerable. I ask the House to concur in this amendment, inasmuch as the gentleman from Vermont says it is unimportant and he does not care about it. I want to place it beyond doubt.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman from Iowa is mistaken if he supposes this will have the effect of making a great difference in the tariff. It is not true in relation to some articles that the duty will be considerable. To be sure it would add a little on wool, and on other articles not subject to specific duties. However, as I have already said, it is not a section about which I feel tenacious, but I hope the House will non-concur in all the amendments of the Senate and let the whole subject be referred to the committee of conference.

Mr. WENTWORTH. As the gentleman from Vermont has alluded to the subject of wool we may as well have the whole story. The understanding was that this should be a compromise tariff. We were to send nothing over to the Senate which they could object to; but, sir, no sooner was this bill over there than this class of men who are constantly crying for protection for themselves and careless of the destruction of others went over to that body and acted with that ferocity with which they have always hunted down the producers of the West. In this you have an explanation of the whole matter. The Senate were willing to strike out the ninth section, to which allusion has been made; and I call the attention of our agricultural friends to the fact that the time has come when we should strike for our freedom from these manufacturers. If protection be a good thing, let the wool-growers have a share of it.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I am not one of those who see an intrigue covered up in every proposition presented to my mind, and therefore I do not see under this small amount of meal any very large-sized cat. [Laughter.] It seems to me the purpose of the committee was a plain one, and one not at all complicated by ulterior purposes. The fact was this: in different countries, from which products are shipped to the United States, different practices prevail. Some men go far into the interior and buy to ship. Sometimes they buy at the dock at a foreign port. Sometimes they buy before the port charges are paid, and sometimes they buy afterward. They buy under all these conditions and in all these different situations, and the question naturally arises when the duty shall be laid, whether on the price of the article two hundred miles in the interior, or one hundred miles, or at the port, or if at the port, before the charges are paid or afterward? Shall it include transportation or exclude it? We wanted to get some uniform rule as to the conditions under which the duties should be levied on these different articles. If, when it got to the Senate, it fell among thieves who expected to find something else in it, we, of course, are not to blame for that. I am willing it should go to the committee of conference. I do not think the House will be frightened or aroused to a great pitch of animosity if it should give some measure of protection to some classes of our interests, because I think the House by a very large majority has already shown its willingness to give them protection. I hope it will go to the conference committee and be a part of the whole plan before them.

Mr. MORRILL. I demand the previous question.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. MORRILL. I withdraw it for that purpose.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. My objection to sending this section to the committee of conference is that it places in the hands of that committee the entire subject of a tariff. Here we are at the close of the session, and as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WENTWORTH] says, the western interests have been cheated time and time again in these tariff acts, and we may be most desperately cheated during this session. Now, sir, let it go out entirely, so that the subject shall not be sent to a committee of conference.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not understand what the gentleman from Iowa means by saying that the West has been cheated.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Quoting the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MORRILL. I think you are the responsible indorser.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Very well; if the gentleman insists upon it I will become responsible, and I will tell the gentleman what I mean by it. I mean that in the arrangement of the tariff laws of this country the western interests have not received that share of protection which other interests have received.

Mr. MORRILL. If they have not received that share of protection it is simply because they have not as much of manufactures of iron, copper, cotton, and wool. They have the same identical protection on whatever they produce.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. We have different interests.

Mr. MORRILL. Another point raised by the gentleman from Illinois. What he stated in relation to the arrangement of this bill in our committee was true in so far as this, that we agreed not to report anything that was a disputable matter. And so far as this bill goes the ninth section does somewhat increase perhaps the foreign cost of iron because it adds to the amount of the expense, even getting it from the wharf on board the vessel. It would increase to the same extent the cost of wool. But we gave no equivalent at all to manufacturers. It was found when it came from the Senate that there was one matter that it would interfere with very essentially, and that was coarse ingrain three-ply carpets, made up of very long, coarse wool, costing less than twelve cents a pound. An agent of the manufacturers came to the Finance Committee of the Senate and represented the facts. I do not understand that there was anything unfair about it. The fact would be if it was made to cost above twelve cents per pound it would double the duties. I suppose it was for this reason that the Senate struck out this section. I think it would be much better for the wool-grower that this section should remain in and a compromise should be made on that class of wool which we never have produced and which we probably never shall produce. If we should allow that particular class of wool to be exempt from the operation of the ninth section I suppose the Senate would be very willing to allow the section to remain. For one, representing a large class of wool-growers as I do, I would be in favor of such a compromise as that rather than lose the section. But at the same time, as the Senate has postponed the general tariff bill, I am not very tenacious about it. I suppose very likely this section will have to be given up. The whole subject of the tariff would not be opened by the committee of conference. They cannot consider any subjects but such as are in the bill, and if they should bring back anything else it would be against all parliamentary law.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. They could agree with various amendments.

Mr. MORRILL. But they must be pertinent.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Pertinent to the subject of the bill which relates to duties.

Mr. MORRILL. Certain things would be pertinent and others not. The gentleman from Iowa knows very well that in a committee of conference we cannot have all we ask on the part of either House. Both must give up something. That is the usual practice.

Mr. WRIGHT. I inquire what the manufacturers give up on their side by way of compromise.

Mr. MORRILL. Nothing that I am aware of.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I call the attention of the House to the fact that it has passed this section twice. It was in our original tariff bill, and it was discussed here and adopted. The Senate postponed that bill. It was afterward put in the next bill which passed the House, and went to the Senate; and now when it appears that the Senate has stricken it out, are we to back down without meeting the issue and say we will not talk about it? I hope the House will refuse to concur in the Senate's amendment. I think the section is an exceedingly important one, and I should be very sorry that it should be given up. As the subject of the tariff appears to have been postponed for this session this will afford a little relief in some cases. I trust, therefore, that the House will refuse to concur in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. I move the previous question on the motion to non-concur, and ask a committee of conference on all the amendments of the Senate excepting that in relation to the striking out of the ninth section, upon which a separate vote seems to be desired.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof Mr. MORRILL's motion was agreed to.

The question recurred upon concurring with the Senate in striking out the ninth section of the bill.

The question was put, and there were—ayes 48, noes 48.

The SPEAKER voted in the negative.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 50, nays 58, not voting 76; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Baker, Bergen, Bromwell, Cobb, Cullom, Dawes, Deftrees, Donnelly, Driggs, Eggleston, Eldridge, Eliot, Farquhar, Ferry, Finck, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Hogan, Ingersoll, Julian, Kasson, Kerr, Kuykendall, Le Blond, Loan, Marshall, Moulton, Niblack, Nicholson, Noell, Orth, Paine, Price, Radford, Alexander H. Rice, Ritter, Ross, Shanklin, Stigroaves, Strouse, Taber, Nelson Taylor, Trimble, Wentworth, Whaley, James F. Wilson, Windom, Winfield, and Wright—50.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Barker, Baxter, Bidwell, Bingham, Boyer, Brommell, Buckland, Reader W. Clarke, Conkling, Davis, Delano, Dixon, Garfield, Hart, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Hulburt, Jenckes, Johnson, Kelley, Ketcham, Koontz, Laffin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Marston, McKee, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Patterson, Perham, William L. Randall, Raymond, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Scofield, Shellabarger, Spalding, Stevens, Stokes, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Welker, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, and Woodbridge—58.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Beaman, Benjamin, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Bundy, Chanler, Sidney Clarke, Cook, Culver, Darling, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Dodge, Dumont, Eckley, Farnsworth, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Hayes, Henderson, Hill, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Humphrey, Jones, Kelso, Longyear, Lynch, Marvin, Maynard, McClurg, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, Morris, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Pomeroy, Samuel J. Randall, Rogers, Schenck, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stillwell, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trowbridge, Unson, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, and William B. Washburn—76.

So the amendment of the Senate was not concurred in.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were non-concurred in; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WAR CLAIMS OF MASSACHUSETTS.

The next business in order was the consideration of the joint resolution of the Senate No. 121, providing for the examination of the accounts of the State of Massachusetts for moneys expended during the war for coast defenses. The joint resolution was returned from the Senate, the Senate non-concurring in the amendment of the House.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the House recede from its amendment. The only question is whether these accounts shall be audited and settled by a commission or by the Secretary of War. It is not worth while to contend with the Senate upon such a point, and I move the previous question on my motion.

Mr. ROSS. I move to lay the whole subject upon the table.

Mr. DAWES. I trust the accounts of the State of Massachusetts will not be treated differently from those of other States. The reason why the Senate non-concurred in this amendment was because all the accounts of other States had been referred to commissions.

The question was taken on Mr. Ross's motion, and it was disagreed to.

So the House refused to lay the subject upon the table.

The question recurred upon Mr. DAWES's motion, that the House recede from its amendment; and being put, the said motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion to recede was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LOUISIANA AND CALIFORNIA DISTRICT COURTS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the disagreement of the Senate to the amendments of the House to Senate bill No. 179, in relation to the district courts of the United States in the States of California and Louisiana.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the House insist upon its amendments to the bill of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the House insisted upon its amendments; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 149) for the relief of Daniel Winslow;

An act (S. No. 164) for the relief of Alois Klaus;

An act (S. No. 285) granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley railroad, and its extension to Red river;

An act (S. No. 297) for the relief of the owners of the British vessel Magicienne;

An act (S. No. 352) granting to A. Sutro the right of way and granting other privileges to aid in the construction of a draining and exploring tunnel to the Comstock lode, in the State of Nevada;

An act (S. No. 361) to authorize W. J. Sibley and others, trustees, to sell and convey lot No. 9, in square No. 76, in the city of Washington;

An act (S. No. 374) for the relief of James P. Johnson;

An act (S. No. 382) to change the place of holding court in the northern district of Georgia;

An act (S. No. 385) for the relief of Thomas W. Stevens;

An act (S. No. 414) to regulate the times and manner of holding elections for Senators in Congress;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 39) to refer the claim of the administrator of Richard W. Meade, deceased, to the Court of Claims;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 79) to authorize the purchase for the Library of Congress of the law library of James L. Pettigru, of South Carolina; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 93) providing for the appointment of a commissioner to examine and report upon certain claims of the State of Iowa.

CALIFORNIA VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. HIGBY. I ask unanimous consent of the House to submit the following resolution for consideration at this time:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to inform the House why the California volunteers in the United States service during the late rebellion, stationed and doing service in the Territories of Arizona, New Mexico, and Utah, were mustered out and discharged from service in said Territories, and what, if any, transportation was furnished to each of said soldiers to enable him to return to his home in California.

Mr. ANCONA. I think the Committee on Military Affairs already has all the information required on that subject.

Mr. HIGBY. It will do no harm to have this information. I think the resolution had better be passed.

Mr. ANCONA. I will not object. The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HIGBY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. DAVIS asked and obtained leave of absence for himself for the remainder of the session, after to-morrow night.

Mr. HOGAN asked and obtained leave of absence for his colleague, Mr. NOELL, for the remainder of the session.

Mr. BAKER asked and obtained leave of absence for his colleague, Mr. THORNTON, for the remainder of the session.

SUFFRAGE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution for consideration at this time:

Whereas the Committee for the District of Columbia of this House was instructed, on the 29th day of January, 1866, as follows, to wit: "Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be instructed to report an amendment to the election laws of the District of Columbia, excluding from the privilege of suffrage within said District all persons who have voluntarily borne arms against the United States, or accepted office from the rebels during the late rebellion." And whereas the said committee have omitted or neglected to affirmatively respond to the imperative instructions of this House: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee for the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, again instructed to report to this House without delay, as instructed by said resolution.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object.

NAVIGATION OF NEWARK BAY, ETC.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be requested to appoint a suitable officer, whose duty it shall be to proceed to Newark, in the State of New Jersey, and examine into the condition of the navigation of Newark bay and the navigation of the mouths of the Passaic and Hackensack rivers, and whether the same needs improvement, and report the result of such examination to this House on the first Monday in December next.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I object.

And then, on motion of Mr. ALLISON, (at ten o'clock p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. NIBLACK: The memorial of John Hicks, late a private in company D, fifty-eighth regiment Indiana volunteers, praying a pension.

By Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts: The petitions of T. R. Peale, and 28 others, and James A. Hardie, and 8 others, for a public park for the cities of Georgetown and Washington.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, July 25, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.

On motion of Mr. POMEROY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday was dispensed with.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHEENSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 101) for the relief of certain officers of the Army.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had receded from its amendment to the joint resolution (S. R. No. 121) providing for the examination of the accounts of the State of Massachusetts for money expended during the war for coast defense.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. No. 179) in relation to the district courts of the United States for the States of California and Louisiana.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That Congress accepts the portrait of Abraham Lincoln, presented by Signor Salvati, of the city of Venice, with thanks to the donor, and that the portrait be placed for safe custody in the Library of Congress.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 149) for the relief of Daniel Winslow;

A bill (S. No. 164) for the relief of Alois Klaus;

A bill (S. No. 285) granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley railroad and its extension to Red river;

A bill (S. No. 297) for the relief of the owners of the British vessel Magicienne;

A bill (S. No. 352) granting to A. Sutro the right of way and granting other privileges to aid in the construction of a draining and exploring tunnel to the Comstock lode, in the State of Nevada;

A bill (S. No. 361) to authorize W. J. Sibley and others, trustees, to sell and convey lot No. 9, in square No. 76, in the city of Washington;

A bill (S. No. 374) for the relief of James P. Johnson;

A bill (S. No. 382) to change the place of holding court in the northern district of Georgia;

A bill (S. No. 385) for the relief of Thomas W. Stevens;

A bill (S. No. 414) to regulate the times and manner of holding elections for Senators in Congress;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 39) to refer the claim of the administrator of Richard W. Meade, deceased, to the Court of Claims;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 19) to authorize the purchase for the Library of Congress of the law library of James L. Pettigru, of South Carolina; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 93) providing for the appointment of a commission to examine and report upon certain claims of the State of Iowa.

SENATE CONTINGENT FUND.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Senate, communicating, in obedience to law, a detailed statement of the payments from the contingent fund of the Senate for the year ending December 3, 1865; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

SENATOR FROM KANSAS.

Mr. POMEROY presented the credentials of Hon. EDMUND G. ROSS, appointed a Senator by the Governor of the State of Kansas, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Hon. James H. Lane, until the next meeting of the Legislature of that State.

The credentials were read, the oaths prescribed by law were administered by the President pro tempore to Mr. Ross, and he took his seat in the Senate.

SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE.

Mr. SHERMAN presented the credentials of Hon. JOSEPH S. FOWLER, chosen a Senator by the Legislature of the State of Tennessee, for the term of six years commencing on the 4th day of March, 1866.

The credentials were read, the oaths prescribed by law were administered to Mr. FOWLER, and he took his seat in the Senate.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution to print the Agricultural Report, have instructed me to report it back with an amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate ten thousand extra copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1865, with the accompanying documents.

The amendment of the Committee on Printing was, in line two, to strike out "ten" and insert "seventeen," and at the end of the resolution to add, "and three thousand extra copies of the same for the use of the Department of Agriculture;" so that the resolution will read:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate seventeen thousand extra copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1865, with the accompanying documents, and three thousand extra copies of the same for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was adopted.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to call up the resolution from the House of Representatives, now upon the table, fixing the day of adjournment for to-day. It should be acted upon this morning, I believe. I move to take it up.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, which was passed by the House of Representatives on the 18th instant:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to close the present session by adjourning their respective Houses on the 25th day of July, at twelve o'clock meridian.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to strike out "the 25th" and insert "the 27th." To-day is the 25th, I believe.

Mr. SUMNER. Why not say Monday?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will make a motion for the 27th and Senators, if they choose to do so, can move to amend the motion. I will also include in my motion to strike out the words "at twelve o'clock meridian." It may be necessary to go a little beyond that time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves to amend the resolution by striking out "25th" and inserting "27th," and also by striking out after the word "July" the words "at twelve o'clock meridian;" so that the resolution will read:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to close the present session by adjourning their respective Houses on the 27th day of July.

Mr. SUMNER. I move to amend the amendment by substituting the 30th. That will be Monday.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to observe that I moved to strike out the words "at twelve o'clock meridian" for the reason that I thought it very doubtful whether we should be able to get through by that time. I know in the former practice here when a day has been fixed for an adjournment it has been considered that the day lasts, if necessary, until the next day at noon. Now, if you insert the hour, the adjournment must be at that hour. When we adjourn the second session, the Congress expires on the 3d or 4th of March at twelve o'clock, and the two Houses must be adjourned when that hour arrives; but, according to my recollection, when we fix a day of adjournment for the first session it has not been the custom to fix the hour. I suppose if the hour was fixed, when that hour arrived it would be necessary to carry the order into effect. I think it would be rather dangerous to fix Friday at twelve o'clock meridian, because we may not be quite finished by that time. But if it is necessary to fix the hour, I think perhaps another day might be better. I should like to inquire of experienced Senators whether it is absolutely necessary. I think the Chair will be able to inform the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Constitution, every other session, fixes the day of adjournment on the 4th of March. No hour is fixed. Sometimes it has been continued until the close of the session on that day. That has been the established precedent, and therefore it is not necessary, in the order, to fix the hour, because the Constitution, which provides for the adjournment every other session, does not fix the hour. It fixes the day, and the day is construed to mean until the termination of the session of that day. I think the Senator from Maine is correct; and if the hour is not fixed we shall have the benefit of Friday's session. As a matter of course, when the business is done a resolution is usually sent from one House to the other, asking if there is any further business, even where the hour is fixed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the impression of the Chair that the practice has been uniform to fix the hour for the adjournment at the long session, the Constitution fixing it at the short session.

Mr. FESSENDEN. My recollection about it is, that we fix simply the day.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is usual to fix the hour, the Chair says. The precedent may be that way; but I do not think there is any necessity for it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think we have within my experience, on more than one occasion, gone over from the day fixed in fact to the next day at noon before we adjourned, because the business was not finished, and it was absolutely necessary to continue the session.

Mr. SUMNER. I think that is always at the close of the short session.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No; at the short session we must adjourn at a particular time, because the Constitution adjourns us.

Mr. TRUMBULL. But we may adjourn a short session before that time.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I know we may.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We have not always sat at the short session until twelve o'clock of the 4th of March.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I never knew it otherwise. I never knew an adjournment until twelve o'clock arrived on the 4th of March; that is when the Congress expires, and of course it must adjourn then.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think it has not always been so.

Mr. SUMNER. If we adjourn on Monday at twelve o'clock, that will allow time for the enrolling of the bills.

Mr. FESSENDEN. They can be enrolled before that.

Mr. SUMNER. There is always a great pressure of that kind at the end of the session, and taking till Monday will enable us also to finish a great deal of business that is pending. I hope that we may yet take up the bankrupt bill. I do not despair of that. I hope my friend from Vermont will not let the bankrupt bill go over this session. I will ask him if he proposes to abandon the bankrupt bill during the remainder of this session. If we adjourn on Friday, that will be equivalent to an abandonment of the bankrupt bill. If we sit here until Monday or later, we may take up that bill and proceed with it to an end. I do not think we ought to adjourn until we have finished that bill.

Mr. POLAND. I supposed that the vote which was taken the other day on the question of taking up the bankrupt bill and laying that motion on the table was regarded as final for this session; but still I should be very glad to have the bill passed and very willing to remain here long enough to have it passed, if that is the sense of the Senate.

Mr. GRIMES. If we agree to adjourn on Monday or Friday or Saturday, the appropriation bill now pending will drag its slow length along for three days; and if we agree to adjourn to-morrow at twelve o'clock the bill will be passed, and it will be in just as perfect a shape when we pass it and all of our other business will be just as well disposed of as if we sat here for a week. I am in favor, instead of lengthening the time, of shortening it.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not see how we can tell at this moment whether we can adjourn on Friday or not. There are some bills that it is more important to pass than it is to adjourn, I am sure, and particularly the one which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WADE] has given us notice of, for the admission of Nebraska, and I think we ought not to adjourn until that is passed. There are some measures pending of such public importance that I do not think we can justify ourselves in going away until they are disposed of, and we do not know at this moment whether we can pass them or not by that time. I of course shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNESS. With my observation of the business of the Senate, it is clear to me that Monday would be the best day to fix. I think we can get through by that time. It will leave sufficient time intervening to get up all the important business. Whether the bankrupt bill shall be included in that or not will be for the Senate to determine. There is another appropriation bill in addition to the one that is now pending to be considered; and I cannot agree to the argument of the honorable Senator from Iowa that no matter how short a time we fix, the business will be equally well done. If that be the case, we might adjourn at noon to-day or to-morrow.

Mr. GRIMES. I did not say so, in the first place.

Mr. CONNESS. Then I misunderstood the Senator. I hope that the amendment will be adopted. I think Monday will be a good time to adjourn.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hardly think that we can get through to-morrow, as suggested by my friend from Iowa. In addition to the miscellaneous appropriation bill, which is not yet finished, there is a deficiency bill coming from the House of Representatives which it is necessary to act upon, and the House of Representatives have disagreed to our amendments to the revenue bill, and there has to be a conference on that. Those, in my judgment, are all the measures that are absolutely necessary, because they are all that come from the Committee on Finance. What others there may be it is for others to say. But those are all in the shape of appropriation bills that it is, I think, absolutely essential to pass before we adjourn. Perhaps we can get through on Friday. I was disposed to fix Friday on the supposition that if we did not get through by noon on that day, our session on Friday, being fixed generally, would last until we adjourned. I am informed by the Chief Clerk that an hour has always been fixed at the long session. If that is so, I suppose that is the ordinary rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The recollection of the Chair is that the hour has always been fixed, but it has frequently been the practice of the two Houses, by a concurrent resolution, to protract from hour to hour, sometimes for several times, the length of the session.

Mr. TRUMBULL. When the hour is fixed, my recollection is we have often postponed the hour by a concurrent resolution from one House to the other. I think it might as well be left at twelve o'clock, and if there is occasion, when that hour is nearly arrived, for prolonging the session, we can do it by a concurrent resolution.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will vary my motion so as not to strike out the words "at twelve o'clock meridian," and then it is for the Senate to decide whether Friday is the proper day for an adjournment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment striking out "the 27th" and inserting "the 30th."

Mr. WADE. I do not believe that we can do the business that is most pressing before us sooner than by Monday at twelve o'clock. There are two bills that I am charged with, which I have been anxious to get up for more than six weeks: the one for the admission of the State of Colorado, and the other for the admission of Nebraska. The Senators elected from those States are here. The admission of a State is as important business as any other. When a State has prepared to come into the Union on our own invitation, and has sent her representatives here from a great distance, we ought not to snub them and send them back without the question being acted upon.

I hope, sir, that no childish impatience will impel us to adjourn, leaving this important business undone. I am as anxious to go as anybody else; but I would rather stay here than to leave the most important business undone or hurry it through without its being done as well as it can be done. My better opinion is that we ought not to adjourn at all. That was the almost uniform sentiment of the Senate itself two months ago, that from the peculiar condition in which the country was at this time, the great council of the nation ought not to abandon its post now and surrender all its best interests into hands that most of us believe to be hostile to them. I think, sir, we ought to act as the guardians of the country, which the people have sent us here to be, especially in the peculiar circumstances in which we are placed.

When all the branches of the Government are harmonious, all acting alike, all consenting to the same great principles, we can leave the country in the guardianship of the President of the United States; but there is an almost universal apprehension, as I learn from a great number of correspondents that I have, that there is danger to the country if Congress abandons its post and leaves now. I do not say there is anything in this; but I say I cannot conceal from myself the fact that, from the great number of letters I receive from intelligent sources all over the country, there is a universal apprehension that something is to take place detrimental to the country whenever we leave our posts, for which reason my counsel is not to leave our posts at all; but if the Senate will adjourn, let us postpone it to such a time that we can get through with the most important business on hand. I want sufficient time to get through with all the business that I am charged with. It is but a little; but I deem it as important as anything else. The financial business is nearly brought to a close, we are told. That is important, and the most important perhaps of any business; but it is not all the business of the Senate, and other committees ought to be consulted about the business that belongs to them, and which is of interest, as well as the Finance Committee. We have been at work on their business for a long time to the exclusion of almost everything else; and because they are almost through I do not think that is a reason why we should abandon everything else. I hope, at all events, that we shall not fix a day short of Monday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment striking out "the 27th" and inserting "the 30th."

Mr. SUMNER and Mr. WADE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 15, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Chandler, Conness, Creswell, Harris, Howard, Howe, McDougall, Nye, Pomeroy, Ross, Sumner, Wade, Williams, and Wilson—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Norton, Poland, Ramsey, Riddle, Sherman, Sprague, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Willey—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Clark, Cragin, Dixon, Fowler, Guthrie, Saulsbury, Stewart, Wright, and Yates—10.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FESSENDEN. As the hour of adjournment is now fixed at twelve o'clock meridian, and the two Houses must be adjourned at that time, I doubt whether we can finish up by Friday. I suppose we could do it sometime in the course of the night or next morning, but all these bills must go to committees of conference and, necessarily, that will take some time; and I doubt very much whether we can get through before Saturday. That is my opinion about it.

Mr. JOHNSON. You had better say Saturday at twelve o'clock.

Mr. FESSENDEN. For that reason I will change my motion, and say "the 28th, at twelve o'clock meridian."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so modified, by inserting "the 28th" instead of "the 27th."

Mr. SUMNER. Before that is adopted I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the business that is before it. The Senator from Iowa has told us that the appropriation bill now under discussion could be disposed of in a short time as well as in a long time. Now, sir, there are at this moment pending on that bill some of the most important propositions that Congress has ever been called to entertain—propositions which admit of much discussion, which, indeed, require much discussion for their proper elucidation. I might mention several propositions, any one of which in the ordinary course of business would occupy a full week; and yet we are expected to take a dozen such propositions right off, with hardly any discussion, with no time for reflection, but close the whole bill up suddenly, almost without a word.

Sir, I do not think that is the proper way of prosecuting such important business. I do not think the Senate is just to itself or just to the country. I think we ought to stay here until all this important business is thoroughly considered and finally acted on. Now, that clearly cannot be done at the time proposed. I regret, therefore, that such a proposition is brought forward. If I could have my way, I would postpone the adjournment much further than in the motion that I made, and which has already been voted down. I think we ought to stay here much longer. Indeed, we ought to stay here until some important measures now pending before the Senate have been disposed of.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What are they?

Mr. SUMNER. There is the bankrupt bill for one. That ought to be taken up and considered. Then the various propositions that have been made on this miscellaneous appropriation bill ought to be carefully considered, much more carefully considered than they have been. For instance, last evening we had suddenly moved upon us one of the most important bills of the session, the equalization of the bounties. It was discussed very briefly, impatiently, certainly without reaching the merits of the question. I think that no one who was here last night imagines that that measure had any adequate discussion. There was a vote upon it. I do not know whether that vote can be regarded as definitive or not. Probably it addressed itself to the particular condition of the proposition at the time, having been already amended on the motion of the Senator from Iowa, so that many persons who were favorably disposed to the original bounties bill probably became disaffected to it, and then the question came up on a proposition to attach it to an appropriation bill. That bill, therefore, has not been considered on its merits. I merely refer to it as one of the measures pending before us. Then there is the other proposition, involving millions of money, of charity to the people in Louisiana and Mississippi, in order to restore their levees. That proposition ought not to be acted upon hastily or impatiently. I think, therefore, we ought to stay, I would say indefinitely, in order to consider these questions; and though I am against the propositions which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WADE] announces so earnestly that he is determined to press, I am for giving him full time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine to strike out "the 25th," and to insert "the 28th."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I call for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution as amended.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am sorry that the Senator from Maine changed his proposition. If we are going to adjourn at all, we might as well adjourn on Friday as on Saturday, the last day of the week. Unless Congress proposes to sit here indefinitely, as suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts, we can get through with all the necessary business to be done by Friday noon as well as Saturday noon, which brings us to the close of the week. I am sorry he has changed it. I should prefer voting for it as the Senator first proposed it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It was my individual opinion that we could not very well get through before Saturday. If Senators differed with me on that point they could have voted otherwise. I made that alteration on my own suggestion because I doubted very much whether we could dispose of our business by Friday at twelve o'clock. If the Senate are of opinion that they can do so, I suppose it is not too late to reconsider the amendment.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 29, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Clark, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Guthrie, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane, McDougall, Morgan, Morrill, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Poland, Ramsey, Riddle, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Van Winkle, and Willey—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Creswell, Grimes, Harris, Howard, Howe, Pomeroy, Ross, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, Williams, and Wilson—13.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Cragin, Dixon, Fowler, Saulsbury, Wright, and Yates—8.

So the resolution, as amended, was adopted.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. WADE. I now move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 447, for the admission of Nebraska into the Union.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reports from committees are first in order.

Mr. GRIMES, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of the North American Ressel Company of New York city, praying for an appropriation by Congress to aid in the erection of a monument at the national capital to the memory of Joseph Ressel, the inventor of the screw in steam navigation, reported that the committee be discharged from the further consideration thereof and that the petition be postponed indefinitely.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. The same committee, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 448) to credit sea service to the officers of the Navy who have served during the war to suppress the rebellion, who may have resigned prior to the rebellion, have instructed me to report it adversely and to ask that it be indefinitely postponed. As the committee understand it, all that is provided for in the bill is already accomplished by the law as it now stands. I therefore move its indefinite postponement.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 450) to further regulate the printing of public documents and the purchase of paper for the public printing; which was read and passed to a second reading.

Mr. HENDRICKS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a petition of citizens of New Orleans, Louisiana, praying for relief in the matter of certain assessments made upon them by order of Major General B. F. Butler in August, 1862, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred a petition of officers and seamen formerly in service in the Mississippi squadron, praying that they may be allowed prize money on captures made by them, have directed me to ask to be discharged from its further consideration. I will state that I was requested by the committee to prepare a written report on this subject, but in the pressure of business it has been impossible for me to do so.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills and joint resolution, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (H. R. No. 794) for the relief of Francis Colgen;

A bill (H. R. No. 797) for the relief of Daniel Lucas;

A bill (H. R. No. 798) for the relief of Quincy A. May;

A bill (H. R. No. 800) for the relief of Marion M. Buxton; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 194) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to pay to Charles M. Pott a pension of fifteen dollars per month.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 449) authorizing special juries in the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 406) for the removal of causes in certain cases from State courts, to report it back without amendment and recommend its passage; and as this is a bill of some importance to suitors, I ask that it may be considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent to consider the bill on the day it is reported.

Mr. WADE. I must object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, it lies over under the rule.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 792) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish transportation to discharged soldiers to whom artificial limbs are furnished by the Government, to report it back without amendment; and as this is a bill of but three or four lines, I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. WADE. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill cannot be considered on the day it is reported.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I hope that that bill—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not debatable. The objection of any Senator carries it over.

Mr. RAMSEY. The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom was referred a joint resolution (H. R. No. 198) authorizing the transmission through the mails, free of postage, of certain certificates by the adjutant general of New Jersey, have directed me to report it back without amendment; and I ask for its immediate consideration. It is a very simple bill, providing for the transmission through the mails of certain certificates issued to soldiers in the State of New Jersey, to which there can be no objection.

Mr. WADE. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, it lies over under the rule.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 755) amendatory of an act to amend an act entitled "An act relating to habeas corpus, and regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases," approved May 11, 1866, have instructed me to report it without amendment, and recommend its passage, and not to ask for its present consideration. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will not be considered. [Laughter.]

APPROVAL OF BILLS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. MOORE, his Secretary, announced that the President had approved and signed on the 23d instant an act (S. No. 343) to quiet land titles in California. On the 24th instant he approved and signed an act (S. No. 357) to aid in the construction of telegraph lines, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes. And he this day approved and signed an act (S. No. 269) to define the number and regulate the appointment of officers in the Navy, and for other purposes.

COMMITTEE ON VENTILATION.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the select committee upon the ventilation and sanitary condition of the Senate wing of the Capitol be continued for the next session of Congress.

Mr. WADE. Let it lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution lies over under the rule.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I offer the following resolution, upon which I desire action at the present time, if there is no objection:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia be instructed to report to the Senate for its action some appropriate bill or amendment for the allowance of additional bounties to soldiers in the recent war who entered the military service in 1861 and 1862, and in the early part of 1863, and it shall be in order for said committee to report at any time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent to consider the resolution at the present time.

Mr. WADE. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution lies over.

ADMISSION OF NEBRASKA.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move to call up the resolution offered by me yesterday, with a view of referring it to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, the motion of the Senator from Ohio is before the Senate, to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 447.

Mr. RAMSEY. Does that require unanimous consent? [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not. It requires a majority of the members present. But the Chair is advised that no such bill has been reported to the Senate.

Several SENATORS. It was reported yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. CHANDLER] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration—

Mr. WADE. What has become of my bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no such bill reported.

Mr. WADE. It was reported yesterday. I made the report yesterday.

Mr. POMEROY. It was reported at the evening session.

Mr. WADE. Yes, sir; reported at the evening session yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is only advised at present that no such bill has been reported.

Mr. POMEROY. It was reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can be corrected if it is a mistake.

Mr. WADE. It is the bill for the admission of Nebraska into the Union, and it has been reported, and the whole Senate knows it has been reported back.

Mr. CRESWELL. I have a distinct recollection of it.

Mr. POMEROY. I was occupying the chair temporarily, and I recollect that the bill was reported.

Mr. CRESWELL. The Senator from Ohio endeavored to call up the bill, but it was objected that it had not been reported, and thereupon he immediately reported it to the Senate and the matter went over.

Mr. GRIMES. I remember the circumstance, and I move that the Journal be ordered to be corrected so as to recognize that fact.

Mr. SPRAGUE. If it is in order, while the Journal is being corrected, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House joint resolution No. 150.

Mr. CHANDLER. I believe I have a motion before the body which I will ask to have considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Ohio is at present undisposed of, the question whether the bill has been reported or not being undetermined.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Ohio give way to allow me to make this motion while the Journal is being corrected?

Mr. WADE. If I were to yield now, I should lose my right to the floor entirely. You can dispose of your matter in a moment some other time. I have only got two or three minutes of the morning hour, and I will hold them if I can. The motion is now to correct the Journal according to the understanding of the whole Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the Journal of yesterday's proceedings be corrected so as to show the fact that the bill named by the Senator from Ohio was reported by him.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I will inquire whether the bill is in the possession of the Clerk. That will determine the fact whether it was actually reported or not, and the Journal can be corrected on that fact being shown.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that there is no bill of that description on the files of the Senate.

Mr. HOWE. I think I remember how this mistake occurred. Just before the expiration of the morning hour yesterday the Senator from Ohio moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of that bill, and he held the bill in his hand. It then occurred to him that he had not reported the bill, and he then asked leave to make the report, and that the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration. It was two minutes to one o'clock. In the mean time the Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] interposed a motion to reconsider the vote passing a bill in which I was interested, and I appealed to the Senator from Ohio to waive his motion and allow the motion to reconsider to be taken up at once. The Senator remarked that there were but a few minutes to one o'clock left, and one o'clock arrived while we were discussing that matter.

Mr. POMEROY. It was reported in the evening session.

Mr. WADE. The Senator from Kansas was in the chair, and I have no doubt recollects, as I do, that I rose to call the bill up and the objection was made that the report had not been made. I immediately reported it. I said, "I will make the report now," and I did make it; and so everybody about here understands it. There is no mistake about it; and I gave notice that I should take the earliest opportunity to call it up.

Mr. SUMNER. I think I can confirm what the Senator from Ohio says, and I can add something to it, that I rather think the report in the Globe will show that I objected to the consideration of the bill. I think the Senator will remember that he proposed to press the consideration at once when he made his report, and I said, "Not to-day; I object." I am sure of that incident; and I mention it in order to complete the testimony with regard to what occurred yesterday.

Mr. WADE. Is there anything in the Globe on the subject?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I find in the Globe this:

"Mr. WADE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 447) for the admission of the State of Nebraska into the Union; I move that it read twice by its title."

"Mr. WADE. I move that the bill, together with the constitution of the State of Nebraska, which I now present, be referred to the Committee on Territories."

"The motion was agreed to."

Mr. WADE. That is what occurred on Monday night. I reported it back after that.

Mr. SUMNER. At the same time, I would like to say that I hope the bill will not be proceeded with to-day. It seems to me we should not take up a measure of such importance in these hurried hours.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the morning hour has expired.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. WADE. I hope the Senate will at all events postpone other business long enough to have this mistake corrected, so that the bill can be got up the next time the motion is made.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think there can be a particle of doubt as to the fact that my colleague reported that bill. I remember distinctly that he reported it and tried to get the Senate to act upon it. Just at that moment the morning hour expired, and I insisted on going on with the pending appropriation bill. I made the remark at the time that when we got those bills through I would help him to pass his bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. This does not seem to me to be a debatable question. The Senator from Ohio says he reported the bill, and of course he did. We have nothing to do but correct the Journal.

The motion to correct the Journal was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. Has the bill been printed?

Mr. WADE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the order of the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. With the permission of the Senate, before calling up the unfinished business, the Chair will lay before the Senate certain House bills for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 719) to punish certain crimes in relation to the public securities and currency, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; and the bill (H. R. No. 761) authorizing the reimbursement to the Territory of Nebraska of certain expenses incurred in repelling Indian hostilities, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Territories.

PORTRAIT OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That Congress accepts the portrait of Abraham Lincoln presented by Signor Salvati, of the city of Venice, with thanks to the donor, and that the portrait be placed for safe custody in the Library of Congress.

Mr. SUMNER. I move the concurrence of the Senate in that resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM CROSWELL.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 354) for the relief of William Crosswell, which was to add at the end of the bill the following words: "to be paid out of the naval pension fund."

Mr. GRIMES. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

COURTS IN CALIFORNIA AND LOUISIANA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business of yesterday is House bill No. 737, the civil appropriation bill.

Mr. HOWARD. I have an amendment to offer to that bill.

Mr. CONNESS. With the leave of the Senator, I should like to get action on an amendment of the House to a Senate bill. It will only take a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It requires unanimous consent, another measure being before the Senate. No objection being interposed, the message of the House will be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Resolved, That the House insist on their amendment to the bill of the Senate (S. No. 179) in relation to the district courts of the United States in the States of California and Louisiana.

Mr. CONNESS. This bill abolishes one of the districts in the State of California and one in the State of Louisiana, and the House amendment proposes, as the whole State of Louisiana is to be one district, to increase the salary of the district judge there to $4,500, and they insist on their amendment. I think in all probability that the amendment was right; the salary should be increased, as increased duties will have to be performed. Therefore I move that the Senate recede from their disagreement to the House amendment and agree to the same.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope this will not be done. The Committee on the Judiciary have reported a bill in relation to the salaries of all district judges, and I believe in that bill the salary of this district judge is fixed at precisely the sum fixed by the House. What I desire is, that that bill shall be acted upon, and that there shall be a uniform and regular system of salaries for the judges, so as not to be raising the salary of one judge until we are ready to adjust them in all cases. I think that the Senate bill should be acted upon, and that this gentleman should wait until the salaries of the other judges are raised. If we cannot act upon it at this session, let him wait until December. I am opposed to acting upon individual cases in reference to the increase of salaries. We have perfected a bill with some care in reference to the salaries of all the district judges in the United States, this judge with others, and I think we should wait until that bill is acted on.

Mr. SHERMAN. How did this bill interpose?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent, and can be proceeded with only by unanimous consent.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope it will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It proposes to increase the salary of a judge, and I think it should go to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the bill and amendment be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONNESS. Does the Senator know the course the bill has taken?

Mr. SHERMAN. I heard the statement of the Senator from California. I do not think this bill ought to stand in the way of the appropriation bill. Let it be put out of the way.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the Senator will have patience for an instant.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit the motion; or if the bill can only be considered by unanimous consent, I object to it, if it is not too late to object. I did not hear it when the bill was taken up.

Mr. CONNESS. This is not the first time that the Senator has objected while—

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not want to be lectured by the Senator from California.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Order must be observed. In the opinion of the Chair, this bill is before the Senate simply by common consent and liable to be laid aside at any time on an objection. Is the further consideration of this bill objected to?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do object; and I hope when I am transacting the public business that the Senator will not interpose these measures.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, it will be laid aside.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 387) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending 30th June, 1867, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 780) to protect the revenue, and for other purposes, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JAMES A. GARFIELD of Ohio, Mr. JAMES K. MOOREHEAD of Pennsylvania, and Mr. JOHN HOGAN of Missouri, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. No. 138) to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ROBERT C. SCHENCK of Ohio, Mr. HALBERT E. PAINE of Wisconsin, and Mr. SYDENHAM E. ANCONA of Pennsylvania, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 804) to regulate the appointment of clerks and commissioners of bail in the circuit or district courts of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 32) to extend the jurisdiction of commissioners of the circuit courts of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 92) to ascertain the practicability of having a steamboat navigation from the Chesapeake bay, at the mouth of the Susquehanna river, to Lake Ontario, in the State of New York;

A bill (H. R. No. 468) to provide for the suits, judgments, and business of the United States provisional court for the State of Louisiana;

A bill (H. R. No. 667) to prevent officers of the Navy from being deprived of their regular promotion on account of wounds received in battle, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 802) to incorporate the National Farm School;

A bill (H. R. No. 803) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the trustees of the Female Orphan Asylum in Georgetown and the Washington City Orphan Asylum in the District of Columbia," passed May 24, 1823;

A bill (H. R. No. 584) for the relief of William Joslin;

A bill (H. R. No. 604) to define and punish certain crimes therein named; and

A bill (H. R. No. 805) to restore the possession of lands confiscated by the authorities of the States lately in rebellion.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 224) granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of a southern branch of the Union Pacific railway and telegraph from Fort Riley, Kansas, to Fort Smith, Arkansas;

A bill (S. No. 281) to authorize the Chesapeake Bay and Potomac River Tidewater Canal Company to enter the District of Columbia and extend their canal to the Anacostia river at any point above Benning's bridge;

A bill (S. No. 358) granting a pension to Mrs. Nancy A. Stocks;

A bill (S. No. 366) granting a pension to Abraham Lausing;

A bill (S. No. 367) to extend the time of letters-patent issued to Thaddeus Hyatt;

A bill (S. No. 376) granting a pension to Drusey A. Layman;

A bill (S. No. 390) granting a pension to John Pyle;

A bill (S. No. 398) for the relief of W. B. Kelley;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 31) manifesting the sense of Congress toward the officers and seamen of the vessels, and others, engaged in the rescue of the officers and soldiers of the Army, the passengers, and the officers and crew of the steamship San Francisco from perishing with the wreck of that vessel;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 82) to provide for codifying the laws relating to the customs;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 84) authorizing the payment of certain claims against the late Territory of Nevada;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 111) for the relief of Sergeant Milton McKinnon;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 121) providing for the examination of the accounts of the State of Massachusetts for moneys expended during the war for coast defense;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 125) granting the right of way through military reserves to the Union Pacific Railroad Company and its branches;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 126) to authorize the use of certain plates of the United States exploring expedition by the Navy Department;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 132) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and settle the accounts of Caleb T. Fay and William Y. Patch, late assessor and collector of internal revenue at San Francisco;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 139) for the benefit of the Illinois Soldiers' College and Military Academy;

A bill (H. R. No. 438) in relation to the appointment of clerks of courts in Washington Territory;

A bill (H. R. No. 728) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue certificates of registry, enrollment, and license to certain vessels;

A bill (H. R. No. 772) to authorize the issue of certain bonds in denominations greater than $1,000;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 101) for the relief of certain officers of the Army; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 176) amendatory of a joint resolution entitled "A resolution respecting bounties to colored soldiers, and the pensions, bounties, and allowances to their heirs," approved June 15, 1866.

PROTECTION OF THE REVENUE.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 780) to protect the revenue, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House; and

On motion of Mr. FESSENDEN, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. FESSENDEN, Mr. HOWARD, and Mr. HENDERSON the conferees on the part of the Senate.

MILITARY PEACE ESTABLISHMENT.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 138) to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States, disagreed to by the House of Representatives; and

On motion of Mr. WILSON, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the said bill, disagreed to by the House, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. WILSON, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. NESMITH.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 787) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOWARD. I offer the following amendment, in pursuance of a recommendation of the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to come in as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That there is hereby appropriated for the payment of the traveling expenses of the members of the first regiment of Michigan cavalry from the place in Utah Territory where they were mustered out of service, in the year 1866, to the place of their enrollment, a sum sufficient to allow to each member $325, deducting therefrom the amount paid to each for commutation of travel, pay, and subsistence by the Government when thus mustered out, and that the accounts be settled and paid under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The amount called for by this amendment will not exceed $207 to each soldier.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask my friend if it is reported from the Military Committee.

Mr. HOWARD. I so remarked when I presented the amendment. The ground of the claim is this: the first regiment of Michigan cavalry were taken to Utah at or about the close of the war. They were there detained about six months, if I am rightly informed, beyond the period of their enlistment. They were then very improperly informed by their commanding officer that unless they consented to be mustered out of the service at or near Salt Lake City they would be detained in the service for two months longer, the consequence of which was that all, or nearly all of them, consented to be mustered out there and were paid off there in the usual way. They found themselves at a very great distance from their homes, which were in Michigan, where they enlisted, and the amount of traveling pay they received upon being mustered out was entirely insufficient to pay their expenses in traveling home. They ought not to have been detained in the service beyond the period of their enlistment, and they ought not to have been mustered out in Utah where they were actually mustered out. The whole proceeding seems to have been an imposition upon this excellent regiment of cavalry. Many of the boys mustered out at that remote place, spent all the money which they received for travel and pay there, and some of them were almost obliged to beg their way home again. I think it is a matter of simple justice to indemnify them for the losses which they were thus compelled to sustain in consequence of the proceedings on the part of the officer. I have here a very brief report in manuscript of the Committee on Military Affairs which I will send to the Chair to be read, if it is called for. ["No!" "No!"]

Mr. CONNESS. The case presented by the honorable Senator is not the only case of this kind, and without desiring to oppose this one, I think all such cases should be settled together.

Mr. HOWARD. It is too late now.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator replies that it is too late. It is not too late. It would be manifestly improper to make this appropriation and then refuse to make an appropriation for the soldiers of other States who were served in like manner. Several regiments of the volunteers of California have been mustered out in the same improper manner in Utah, in Arizona, and in New Mexico, and in traveling homeward they have experienced the most sore and severe distress. I have letters now in my possession and continue to receive them on this subject. On making representations to the War Department no cure could be administered there. The representations made by the commanding officers who resorted to these modes of mustering out the men and these systems of deception were conclusive to the War Department, and they would do nothing. I suggest, therefore, to the Senator not to press this proposition at this time, but let the matter go over and let all these cases be settled at once.

Mr. HOWARD. Whenever any other case of this kind shall arise, I shall be entirely willing to grant similar relief; but I hope this amendment will not be embarrassed by other cases.

Mr. CONNESS. They exist now.

Mr. HOWARD. There appears to have been no application thus far, so far as I am advised, on the part of other soldiers.

Mr. CONNESS. Yes, sir; there have been.

Mr. HOWARD. In this case, the proceedings are perfectly regular.

Mr. STEWART. I think there will be no great difficulty in amending the amendment, so as to apply it to all the cases of those who were thus mustered out at that time. I have received many letters on this subject. There were several hundred men from Nevada and California mustered out and left in Utah without transportation home. Utah is a very expensive place, and some of them really suffered, and did not have the means to get away. I received a letter a few days ago from a soldier who was left there. I suggest an amendment to the amendment, so that it shall cover all the soldiers who were in Utah and mustered out under those circumstances.

Mr. NESMITH. This is a very peculiar case, and as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs I had occasion to investigate the subject when it was before the committee. It was the only case of the kind that was presented. If other cases exist, as the Senator from California and the Senator from Nevada state, and as doubtless do exist, it seems to me they should have been presented to the consideration of the committee as this case was. The facts in this case, I apprehend, will vary very much from the facts in the cases to which they allude.

The facts in this case are substantially these: this regiment was marched to Utah and was kept there for some time after the expiration of its term of service. The evidence submitted to the committee went to show that in February last, in the dead of winter, the regiment was paraded, and the proposition was made to them whether they would consent to be mustered out at that point, Fort Bridger, or

Salt Lake, or whether they would prefer to be retained two months more beyond their time, and be marched back to the frontier. The men had become tired of the service. They had served for some time over their term of enlistment, and they supposed that in any event their transportation would be paid to the frontier. Upon this proposition being submitted to them, the majority of them came to the conclusion that they would prefer to be mustered out, under the impression that they were to be transported back to the place of enlistment. When the paymaster came to pay them off, he paid them commutation at six cents a mile from Fort Bridger to the place of enlistment. There were no means of their getting back in small squads. Their road was through a dense wilderness, full of hostile Indians, with no subsistence on the route, no hotels or places where they could be accommodated; the traveling exceedingly bad and no steamboat or railroad line or facility of that kind for traveling. They received $118 70 a piece to pay their commutation from Salt Lake City and Fort Bridger back to Michigan, where they were mustered in; while the stage fare, the only mode of traveling by that road was $300 from Salt Lake to the Missouri frontier, leaving them there out of pocket the difference between $118 70 and the mere stage fare, to say nothing of their subsistence, and then entirely destitute of funds to transport themselves from Atchison, in Kansas, to their homes in Michigan.

Ordinarily I should be opposed to giving any additional compensation beyond that allowed by law to troops for returning home; but as I stated before, there are peculiarities about this case which deserve consideration. It was a very great hardship, I think, to leave men destitute in the middle of a wilderness country, and in the dead of winter, under such circumstances. Why, sir, if those men had undertaken to make the march on foot—the only mode they had of making it except by stage-coach—the commutation which they were allowed of $118 70 would not have been sufficient to pay for their meals on the route, even if there were facilities for obtaining them, allowing that they marched twenty miles a day for the distance of twelve hundred miles. Those who got to the frontiers were in a very destitute condition, and arrived there without any means to pay their transportation back to their homes. There was great suffering among the men. They had behaved gallantly during the war. They were a fine regiment. They had served over their time without any complaint. They were marched twelve hundred miles beyond the frontiers after the expiration of their term of service; and I think all the circumstances taken together make it the strongest possible case, and I believe the Government should remunerate them. This amendment only gives them the difference between $118 70 and $325. I do not believe that the allowance of $325 would take them home. That allowance would only take them to Atchison, in Kansas, and leave them to pay their expenses from there home; but the appropriation is limited to $325, and I trust it will be granted as a matter of justice to these gallant men who served the country so willingly and uncomplainingly. I passed through the country when they were there on duty. They were behaving well; they were the best soldiers I saw in the country. I think, as a matter of justice to these gallant men, that the Government should make them this compensation for the amount they were deprived of by its own unjust decision.

Mr. GRIMES. How much is the amount altogether?

Mr. NESMITH. I do not know what the aggregate amount is. It will amount, I believe, to $217,560. I have not got it exactly.

Mr. STEWART. I do not wish to throw any obstruction in the way of this amendment, because I think the claim is entirely just. I think it was wrong to muster out any soldiers at Salt Lake without furnishing them transportation from there to their homes; but that was done to the soldiers from Nevada and California. They were mustered out there. There was great complaint about it. It took more than all the pay they got and all that they could possibly save to get back home. The fare is exceedingly high if they go by means of public conveyance; and they could not march it for a month or six weeks after they were mustered out.

Mr. NESMITH. I will state that in this case the evidence was taken by the Military Committee, fully considered, and a report made on it; and I think that similar cases should be submitted to the committee for examination before an appropriation is made.

Mr. GRIMES. Did it appear before the Committee on Military Affairs that these men desired to be mustered out there?

Mr. NESMITH. It appeared that when they were paraded and the alternative presented to them of being mustered out then, or retained two months beyond their time and then marched to the frontier, they selected to be mustered out, under the impression that their expenses would be paid back to the frontier. When they came to be paid they saw there was a trick in it, and they found that they had been deceived.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SHERMAN. As this will set the example for many other cases of this kind, I call for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. According to the statement made by the Senator from Oregon, this amendment involves an immediate appropriation of $270,000.

Mr. NESMITH. I would not undertake to state the exact amount.

Mr. SHERMAN. At any rate it is $325 for each soldier of the regiment; and if the regiment contained nearly a thousand men it would be in the neighborhood of what he states it to be. Now, we are told that there are other regiments in the same predicament. It seems they chose to be discharged in the dead of winter, in a remote region, the Government offering to transport them home two months later and give them two months' additional pay. I am not prepared to enter into the merits of such a claim as this; but I ask the Senate whether it has been sufficiently considered and discussed in the Senate to establish a precedent of this kind, which will undoubtedly lead to other claims of the same sort, which cannot be rejected if this should be adopted. I trust, therefore, the Senate will detach this proposition from this bill. Let it be considered purely as a military measure in a separate bill. This is an appropriation bill for sundry civil expenses of the Government. It is now proposed to make it pay the expense of transportation of the military service. If that is done, then the title of the bill is incongruous; it has no connection with the bill itself or the character of the appropriations provided for by it. I trust that the Senate will at this stage of the session keep off all these extraneous matters. There will be no trouble in the Senator getting up a separate bill for this claim, and discussing and passing it as a separate proposition.

Mr. CHANDLER. This appropriation has been recommended by General Sherman and all the officers acquainted with the facts of the case. Those men are in a destitute condition for want of these means. As this is the only chance we shall have of doing justice to these brave men, who served all of them four years, and some five years, during the war, and did more gallant fighting, perhaps, than any other cavalry regiment, I hope this little, simple act of justice will be done them now, in the last hours of the session, on this bill.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll on the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON (who had at first voted in the affirmative) said: I should like to know what is the amount this amendment will take out of the Treasury. I was under the impression, from the statement made by the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. HOWARD,] that it would be only some seventeen or eighteen hundred dollars; but I understand now that it is nearly three hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. CHANDLER. Oh, no; no such sum. It is a very small regiment. I do not know the precise amount.

Mr. HOWARD. The amendment will give to each soldier $325, less the amount he received at the time he was mustered out, not more than $207 to each soldier.

Mr. CHANDLER. It was a very small regiment; I think perhaps not more than three hundred men, all told.

Mr. JOHNSON. I beg leave to change my vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Connors, Creswell, Davis, Harris, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Lane, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Nye, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Wade, Wilson, and Yates—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Clark, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Guthrie, Henderson, Johnson, Kirkwood, Morgan, Sherman, Van Winkle, and Williams—16.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Cowan, Cragin, Dixon, Fowler, Norton, Poland, Riddle, Saulsbury, Trumbull, Willey, and Wright—12.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move to amend the bill on page 2, after line twenty-seven, by adding the following:

Provided, That the building shall be constructed in accordance with the plan prescribed by the joint resolution of Congress, as exemplified in the construction of the south wing.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Secretary to read the whole clause as it will stand if amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

For completion of north wing of Treasury extension, and grading and fencing grounds, $300,000: Provided, That the building shall be constructed in accordance with the plan prescribed in the joint resolution of Congress, as exemplified in the construction of the south wing.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, this building, which is one of the most superb on the face of the earth, was planned after much deliberation. The plans were accepted, after much deliberation, by a committee of both Houses of Congress, and the plans were certified by the chairmen of the two Committees on Public Buildings and Grounds. The building in its progress has been varied in several instances from that plan, and every departure has been to its injury. Every Senator will recollect the face of the building toward the President's House. On the roof, instead of a balustrade, which the most untrained eye can see is necessary to the finish of it, there is a row of tin or galvanized iron leaves, which I will venture to say no person ever saw before or since upon any other building. This was as much a violation of the act of Congress as it was a violation of all the rules of architecture and good taste. I am credibly informed that when that hideous deformity was put upon the roof, the balustrade, according to the plan adopted by Congress and by which those entrusted with the construction of the building were bound, was upon the ground, the stone cut and paid for; and it has now been put around the sides of the inclosure that protect the basement of the building. I ought to say that the present architect of the building is in no degree responsible for these and some other deformities. He is an exceedingly competent and intelligent gentleman in his profession, and he has told me that he considered those departures from the original plan a great mistake and a great defect; and he proposes to build it as this amendment requires; but nobody knows how long he will be there.

Mr. MORRILL. I should like to ask the Senator by whose authority the change was made.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know by whose authority it was done. I think it was in violation of the law of Congress; but it was done; and I wish to have some protection against any further alterations.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no doubt it was done by the architect.

Mr. ANTHONY. Every architect thinks as a matter of course that he must do something to show that his predecessor did not know anything about his business. That is the reason why we have this room constructed exactly upon the principle of a hot-house, merely because the subsequent architect thought that he must discard the plans of his predecessor. I have already said that I design no reflection upon the present architect, who is, I think, a very competent person, and who entirely agrees with me on this subject, although I did not mention to him that I should propose the amendment. My only object is to protect the building from barbarous violations of taste. If the present plan is not the best one, it can be altered by the same authority that ordained it; but it should not be altered by any less authority.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have one other amendment I should like to propose; and that is on page 22, line five hundred and twenty-one, to strike out the word "brick" and insert the word "granite;" so that the clause will read:

For the purpose of erecting on the public land adjacent to the Treasury Department, a fire-proof granite building to afford additional room for the Treasury Department, $200,000.

All the public buildings that have been erected lately have been erected of the most substantial materials; but here is a building to be erected adjoining the Treasury building and for the purposes of the Treasury Department, and it ought to be in the same style and the same character. It should be of enduring materials and should be built of granite.

Mr. GRIMES. Is that for the printing office?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; for the Treasury Department?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is to be a printing office. I will state that the plans and specifications for this building submitted to us contemplate a modest building, rather out of the view of the Treasury building, for the purpose of the Treasury printing. The plans are that it be in brick, and the Department prefer that it be made of brick; and to require them to build it of granite, it seems to me, would be a very unreasonable requirement simply because granite is a better material.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would strike out brick and let them build it as they choose.

Mr. SHERMAN. They must build it according to the plans and specifications.

Mr. GRIMES. The best way would be to strike it all out.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would rather strike it all out if it is considered too expensive to build it as it ought to be built, and let us wait until we can build it to correspond with the present building.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state that there was some doubt about this matter in committee, and the honorable Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. GUTHRIE,] who takes great pride in the supervision of the Treasury extension, it having been commenced while he was Secretary, went up there and examined the plans and the site, and he became satisfied that not only the site proposed, but the plans and the material designated, were the best that could be used.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will bow to his decision.

Mr. GUTHRIE. The advantage of making this building of brick is that it can be built within the year, and they want it at once for the printing establishment. It would be a great convenience and advantage to them to have it. They will then have ample room. By building it of brick, they will get the building this year; but they will not get it for three years if it is built of granite.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the amendment to be withdrawn.

Mr. ANTHONY. I thought the ground of opposition to my motion was economy; but if it is put merely on the ground of time, we have done without this addition for a great while, and I suggest whether it would not be better to have a proper building, such as we want, if it takes a little longer time to build it.

Mr. GUTHRIE. It is in that square across the street.

Mr. ANTHONY. Across Fifteenth street?

Mr. GUTHRIE. Yes; it is to be built on the public ground across the street from the south front.

Mr. ANTHONY. The clause reads, "for the purpose of erecting on the public land adjacent to the Treasury Department, a fire-proof building," &c. I thought it was to be adjoining the Treasury Department.

Mr. SHERMAN. We have some public ground over there.

Mr. GUTHRIE. It is to be built across the street from the south front.

Mr. ANTHONY. Across that private street, where the sheds are?

Mr. GUTHRIE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILSON. I ask if the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island is withdrawn.

Mr. ANTHONY. No, sir; I think we may as well take a vote upon it.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILSON. I offer the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the sum of $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in the erection of a suitable building for the accommodation of the bureau of the War Department not now located in the Northwest Executive Building.

I have a letter from the Secretary of War, covering also a letter from the Quartermaster General, making the estimates for this building.

Mr. GRIMES. Where do you propose to build it?

Mr. WILSON. The proposition is to extend Winder's building for the purposes of the quartermaster's department. They now occupy a building that they have taken possession of, but which they will be compelled to leave in a very short time. They have in that department nearly two thousand million dollars of vouchers and papers. It is very important that those papers should be in a fire-proof building. At the present time some of those papers are hardly in a safe condition, although the present building has been made as nearly fire-proof as possible; but they must leave that in a short time.

Mr. GRIMES. Where is that?

Mr. WILSON. Corcoran's building. They took possession of it and modified and changed it to accommodate the business of the department. It is now proposed to extend Winder's building. The plans and estimates are all set forth in the report of the Quartermaster General, which I hold in my hand, and which can be read if it is necessary.

Mr. SHERMAN. I never heard a word about this proposed building until to-day. There have been no specifications or plans submitted to the Committee on Finance of the Senate or the Committee of Ways and Means of the House. The proposition does not come within the rule which we have adopted. We have always required in our committee specific plans and drawings and estimates. I hope, therefore, that this matter will be postponed until the next session. It is a very ungracious way to legislate to the amount of $500,000, making contracts to that amount, without any more information than we now have on this subject. The only information we have is a mere letter of the Secretary of War.

Mr. WILSON. I will simply say in regard to the matter that these papers were sent here some time since, but they did not come to my committee. The other day I saw the Secretary of War, who stated to me that he was very anxious that some action should be had on this matter; that they could not hold the building they now occupy any length of time, and he supposed that the Committee on Military Affairs had the papers relating to it. On examination, it was found that we had no such papers, and we sent him word to that effect.

He has since sent in those papers, covering the estimates of the Quartermaster General, and stating what they intend to do. I ask the Secretary to read the letter of General Meigs.

The Secretary read as follows:

QUARTERMASTER GENERAL'S OFFICE,
WASHINGTON, D. C., April 12, 1866.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your request to prepare and submit a plan for "a suitable building for the various branches of the War Department, with an estimate of its approximate cost, and a suggestion as to a site therefor."

At some future time Congress will doubtless make provision for the erection of a building on Seventeenth street and Pennsylvania avenue, in style and construction to correspond in some degree with the Treasury building.

In the mean time, and during the construction of any such building, it is of importance to have a building in which the business of the War Department can be concentrated and its records placed in greater safety than is possible in the present condition of the Department, many branches of which are now scattered about the vicinity of Seventeenth street in combustible buildings.

The square between Seventeenth and Eighteenth and between F and G streets, being directly opposite to the War and Navy Departments, offers the greatest advantages for this purpose.

A portion of this square is now occupied by Winder's building, which is already the property of the Government.

This building cost, including the land, in 1854, about two hundred thousand dollars. The appropriation made by Congress authorized its purchase, provided the cost did not exceed that sum, and I remember that it was stated, at the time of purchase, that officers who examined it on the part of the Government placed its value at somewhat less than two hundred thousand dollars.

The records of the War Department, however, will show the exact sum paid for it.

Winder's building fronts on Seventeenth and F streets. It can be extended either to the north with a return on G street, or to the west, fronting on F street.

I transmit herewith a drawing of the square with plans for either of these extensions.

No. 1 being one hundred and fifty-six and a half feet front on Seventeenth street, and two hundred and ten on G street, would afford sixty-three thousand square feet of office floor if built four stories in height and uniform with Winder's building in construction, except that rolled iron beams should be used in place of cast-iron girders to support the floors. They are cheaper, and their manufacture has been established in this country since the erection of Winder's building.

No. 2 represents an extension on G street, occupying the whole south front of the square.

It would afford sixty-five thousand six hundred square feet of office floor in four stories.

The cost of construction of either of these buildings is estimated at about one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars.

The site of No. 1, it is supposed, would cost, 29,295 feet of land, at two dollars..... $58,590

The improvements thereon would cost probably..... 68,000

$126,590

The site of No. 2 would probably cost, land, 39,430 square feet, at one dollar..... $39,430

Improvements..... 15,000

$54,430

The estimates thus, for the extension north and its site, will be $300,000; the extension west, $230,000.

As a basis of comparison I may state that each of these buildings is of about the same capacity as Winder's building, including the addition thereto built by the Ordnance office in the court-yard.

The space of office floor, occupied and crowded at this time by the business of the Quartermaster General's office, is twenty-eight thousand feet. Either of the buildings shown in the plans would afford about sixty-three thousand feet of flooring.

When a sufficient building is constructed upon the site of the present War and Navy Departments, for the permanent use of those Departments, Winder's building will be valuable to the Government for some of the branches of the Government, which, as this country increases in wealth and population and influence, must certainly expand.

The accumulated records of the business of the War and Navy Departments need some safe fire-proof depository, and this building, if constructed, will in time afford such a hall of records.

I recommend that Congress be requested to authorize the purchase or condemnation of the site and the construction of an extension of Winder's building, according to the accompanying plans, either to the north or west, as may be determined by the Executive.

The right to choose between the two sites will have a favorable effect upon the price of the site, and of the buildings to be removed.

It is to be understood that the estimates contemplate the construction of a plain brick and iron building, stuccoed, or covered with mastic, in the style of Winder's building, and without any elaborate or expensive finish.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. C. MEIGS,

Quartermaster General,
Brevet Major General U. S. A.

Hon. EDWIN M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

Mr. WILSON. If the Senator from Ohio objects to the large sum named in this amendment, I am willing to reduce it to $150,000 and let them commence the work with that, and at the next session we can appropriate what is necessary. We have got to provide them with a building. They cannot stay where they are now for any length of time.

Mr. SHERMAN. The objection I have is not the amount of the appropriation, because if we commence we shall have to appropriate the whole $500,000, but as a question of expediency. If it is absolutely necessary to build a new building for this bureau, I ask, is it proper for us to commit ourselves to this particular site by this appropriation at this time? The passing of this appropriation, under the estimates now submitted to us, would commit us to the purchase of this property. We have got to go into the market then with the knowledge on the part of the owners of this ground that we have decided upon that site. I think it would be much better not to make any appropriation at this session, but let them submit to us the offers of the owners of the property for this purpose. The rule adopted by the Committee on Finance, so far as we can control it, has been never to engage in the purchase of sites or the erection of new buildings until we have the title to the property or an offer for the property at a definite sum and then plans and estimates based upon the site; and then, for the first time, we make an appropriation. That was the case with the appropriation for the printing office at the Treasury Department. I trust, therefore, that this matter will go over until the next session. It is too large a sum to be put upon this bill at this period of the session without consideration. It has never been considered by any committee, except a casual consideration by the Military Committee within the last few days. It was never sent to the Committee on Finance or to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; and I trust, therefore, it will not be put on this bill until we have further information.

Mr. WILSON. I will not press this amendment against the wishes of the Senator. The subject was called to our attention yesterday morning or the day before yesterday for the first time, and last evening we got this report. We have certainly not thoroughly examined the matter; but the Secretary of War was very earnest about it, and I saw the Quartermaster General this morning, who thought it very important that some action should be had at once; for of course they cannot retain the building they now have for any length of time.

Mr. GRIMES. I have no doubt in the world that there ought to be a new War Department, and I am glad the attention of the Senate has been called to the subject. Although I am not in favor of the proposition submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts in the shape in which it stands, for I do not believe we ought to erect a building on the ground proposed in the amendment, yet I trust he will propose some other amendment to this bill, looking toward the selection or securing of ground for the erection of a proper building at the next session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the present amendment withdrawn?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir. I withdraw it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I propose the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the sum of $5,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the expense of continuing the index to the Senate list of private claims down to the present Congress, in pursuance of an order of the Senate dated March 16, 1866.

Mr. SHERMAN. What index is that?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will make a brief statement in regard to this matter.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask if it comes from any committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It does not.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I object. The rule requires that an amendment shall be reported by a committee.

Mr. POMEROY. It is reported in pursuance of a law. There is a law for it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I raise the question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is raised to the reception of this amendment on the ground that it does not come from a committee. The Chair understands the Senator from Oregon to say that it does not come from a committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It does not; but it is in pursuance of a resolution adopted by the Senate.

Mr. GRIMES. Not a law.

Mr. JOHNSON. A joint resolution, or a resolution of the Senate?

Mr. WILLIAMS. A resolution of the Senate. These men have been employed and have been at work three or four months. There is no way to pay them, and the work has got to stop unless an appropriation is made. That is all there is about it. There is no reason in the world why the appropriation should not be made.

Mr. SHERMAN. This matter was proposed to the Committee on Finance, but we concluded that as the clerks were paid during the year, they might as well make up this little index to the private claims during the recess of the Senate; and as we have considered it there I do not want it brought here.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was not present at the time it was considered in committee, but it is evident the facts were not known to the committee. In the first place, this work is not done by the clerks. Three other persons are employed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Under what resolution; under what authority, I should like to know?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have the resolution here.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to hear it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. On the 16th of March, 1866, this resolution was adopted by the Senate:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to cause the alphabetical list of private claims extending to the end of the Thirty-third Congress to be continued to the close of the last Congress and printed for the use of the Senate."

Pursuant to that resolution the Secretary of the Senate proceeded to employ certain persons to make this alphabetical list. Those persons have been engaged in that business now for two or three months. The work is partly completed, and this is simply an application that an appropriation be made to pay these clerks for this labor; and I am advised that heretofore this alphabetical list has been made in pursuance of similar resolutions which have been repeatedly followed by appropriations to meet the expenses.

Mr. SHERMAN. When was that resolution passed?

Mr. WILLIAMS. On the 16th of March, 1866. The Secretary, depending upon the resolution, has made this contract, employed these men; they have been at labor for two or three months; and now, unless an appropriation is made, they must be discharged, they must get nothing for the labor they have performed, and the work must stop. It seems to me, under such a resolution, there ought to be an appropriation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw my point of order. I find that the rule I referred to reads as follows:

"No amendment proposing additional appropriations shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session."

I suppose this resolution having been passed at this session, the case is brought within the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator withdraws his objection, the Chair has no decision to make; but he thinks the amendment is to provide for a private claim, and the rule declares that "no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation." This is a resolution merely, not a law.

Mr. SHERMAN. I insist upon the point of order. I do not think it ought to be acted on here. I do not think money ought to be appropriated here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, the amendment is not in order, it being for a private claim.

Mr. CONNESS. I am directed by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to offer this amendment, to be inserted after line four hundred and sixteen, on page 18:

To provide for a survey of the Isthmus of Darien, under the direction of the War Department, with a view to the construction of a ship-canal, in accordance with the report of the Superintendent of the Naval Observatory to the Navy Department, $40,000.

It will be remembered that in accordance with a resolution passed by the Senate calling upon the Superintendent of the Naval Observatory for a report of all the information, facts, data, together with the maps, charts, lines of level, &c., in possession of his office, relating to the various routes over the Isthmus, with a view to railroad and ship-canal communication, a report has been submitted by that officer, and is now ordered to be printed by the Senate. It will be on the desks of members, probably, before we adjourn. It is, perhaps, the most interesting paper that has ever been submitted to Congress. It involves a subject of the greatest possible interest, not only to the people of the United States, but to the commercial people of the world. It is now proposed further, as the necessity and propriety of a further survey is shown by the report, to authorize the War Department to depute some of our Army engineers and a party of men to make an additional survey across the Isthmus of Darien, to be commenced say next December. This point at which it is proposed to carry on the further work is a little south of the Isthmus of Panama or Porto Bello on this side of the continent. I submit in this connection and ask for the reading of a brief letter from the Superintendent of the Naval Observatory addressed to myself on the subject, and I ask the attention of the Senate while it is being read.

The Secretary read the following letter:

WASHINGTON, July 10, 1866.

DEAR SIR: I shall send in my report and the accompanying maps this evening or to-morrow morning, and I presume it will be transmitted to the Senate immediately.

Inclosed is a copy of a letter from General Grant to me, showing the very deep interest he takes in the subject. An appropriation of forty or fifty thousand dollars will enable the Government to put the surveying parties in the field at the beginning of the next season. I trust this small sum—small indeed when contrasted with the grandeur of the object—can be obtained. I hope to have the pleasure of seeing you in a few days.

Very respectfully and truly yours,

C. H. DAVIS,

Rear Admiral, Superintendent.

Hon. JOHN CONNESS,

United States Senate, Washington.

Mr. CONNESS. Now I submit the letter of General Grant on this subject. It will be observed that I have named the lowest sum spoken of in the letter of the Superintendent.

The Secretary read the following letter:

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES UNITED STATES,

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 7, 1866.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 3d of July, alluding to the interest which I have heretofore expressed in favor of a canal to connect the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, is received.

I firmly believe the scheme practicable, and if it is, there is no doubt but that in this age of enterprise the work will be done. I regard it as of vast political importance to this country that no European Government should hold such a work. For this reason I have endeavored for the last year to get such a thorough survey made by the Government of the United States through the territory of the Colombian Government as would fully determine whether such a project is feasible; not doubting but that on the presentation of such feasibility, American capital and an American company, under some treaty that could easily be arranged between the two Governments, would undertake it.

To carry out this project an appropriation by Congress, but what amount I could scarcely say, would be necessary.

At the instance of Captain Ammen, United States Navy, and myself, the Secretary of State has put himself in communication with the Colombian Government with the view of obtaining the authority to make a survey through their territory for the purpose of determining the practicability of an interoceanic canal.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

U. S. GRANT,

Lieutenant General.

Rear Admiral C. H. DAVIS, United States Navy.

Mr. CONNESS. Desiring to be able to present to the Senate, in the absence of the full report made by Admiral Davis on this subject, such a synopsis of the facts as would present the subject intelligently to the body, and not having time to examine the report myself, I called upon Admiral Davis to furnish such a synopsis. He has furnished a very brief one, and I will ask the Clerk to read it and then be done with the subject; and I beg the Senate to give its attention.

The Secretary read as follows:

"The object of the resolution to which the report is a reply, was to collect together and put in order all the existing information concerning this question of interoceanic communication between the Atlantic and the Pacific. This has never been done before in a satisfactory manner. It is true that several able and comprehensive papers on the subject have appeared among the Geographical Memoirs of England and France, but no one of them has been accompanied with a full set of charts and statistical data, and no one of them furnishes in itself the means of arriving at a definite and distinct idea of what has been done in each case, of what remains to be done in each case, and in what direction we are to turn our future efforts and investigations.

"It is unnecessary to enlarge upon the importance of this subject. No intelligent person who has paid even slight attention to it will fail to perceive that the construction of a practicable ship-canal through one of the American isthmuses would be attended with the most wonderful results in respect to the commerce and intercourse of the different nations of the globe.

"We are so situated, occupying a central position between Europe and Asia on the line of oceanic navigation, that we shall be more benefited by these results than any other people. The magnitude of the enterprise, its influence upon our national life and progress, and the exceeding importance, as I conceive, of keeping this undertaking in the hands and under the control of some one of the members of the American family of nations, all these considerations of themselves render it extremely desirable that the United States should prosecute to completion certain surveys and explorations which are pointed out in this report. But it is further to be said that this is a peculiarly favorable juncture for making such surveys; and in order to explain myself on this head I will offer a brief synopsis of the report.

"As many as twenty-six different routes have been proposed at various times by different persons for interoceanic communication either by canal or by railroad. All these routes are classified under a few general titles. Thus several routes across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec are discussed; so again of Honduras, Nicaragua, Panama, Darien, and the province of Chio. Now, in this report, each one of these isthmuses is taken up separately and treated at sufficient length to make its value and merits perfectly intelligible. In each case there is a map which gives, by inspection, heights, distances, summit levels, and, in most instances, topographical features and plans of construction, with minute details wherever such plans could be obtained. In this respect the report is so full that the reader has the means of forming an independent judgment, but to this end a careful study of the maps is necessary; and that being out of question at present, I shall only attempt to give you the most general conclusion.

"On each one of the isthmuses which I have enumerated there are circumstances and features which have attracted in a greater or less degree the attention of projectors, capitalists, and engineers; and of course the real feasibility of the project could only be revealed by an actual survey. I will cite a single example by way of illustration. In the State of Nicaragua, nature seems to have extended a helping hand by offering the aid of the river San Juan and the Central lakes, and thus diminishing by a natural water communication the territory to be pierced to one tenth of the whole length of the canal. Here, as in several other cases, attractive circumstances have led to accurate surveying operations on which we can build safe conclusions. These surveys supply a process of elimination by removing certain routes altogether from our further consideration, at least for the present, and thus narrowing down our field of operations. Thus, our reliable surveys of the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, Honduras, Nicaragua, Panama, and the upper waters of the Atrato exclude all these places for the present from our inquiry. We are satisfied that no ship-canal will be undertaken at present at either of these places, and, indeed, I may say, will ever be undertaken at either of these places until we are convinced that there is not a better site for a canal elsewhere. Now, a concurrence of favorable indications and of highly advantageous natural conditions points out one region as the proper field for our immediate labors; and that is the Isthmus of Darien east of a line joining Panama and Porto Bello and more particularly the three routes between Chopo and San Blas, between San Miguel and Port Escozes by the Savana, and between San Miguel and Uraba by the way of the Tuva. The report shows what has been done and what has been attempted on each one of these routes; it also shows what advantages these routes possess and what promise they give of affording a successful solution to our great problem.

It is for carrying out and completing the surveys in this direction, that I ask for an appropriation of $40,000, not doubting that those who hear me, as well as all educated gentlemen throughout the country, will regard this problem as Mr. Jefferson did, as "a vast desideratum for reasons political and philosophical."

Mr. SHERMAN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. SUMNER. I have not heard any objection to this proposition, although the Senator from Ohio called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator is willing, this session, to commence the construction of a ship-canal across the Isthmus of Darien, I think it is a question that he is sufficiently intelligent to answer for himself. It is in foreign territory, and we are to commence it without the aid and coöperation of any other country, when other countries are interested in the project as well as ourselves. If the survey is made, I suppose it is for the purpose of inducing the construction of a ship-canal by the national Government or by some American company. If the Senator is prepared to enter upon it, be it so. I wish simply the instruction of the Senate on the question.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I do not know whether that is a violation of our treaty stipulations with Great Britain, but it looks somewhat in that direction, if I understand it. We are under treaty obligations with Great Britain not to assume on the part of this Government to build certain routes between the two oceans or endeavor to control them, and we are under obligations with Great Britain to guaranty the neutrality of those routes. I do not know that I have any special objection, as a matter of scientific curiosity in the geography of the world, to spend a small sum of money in ascertaining the practicability of a route there, because it may be the basis, perhaps, of future negotiations with England to join with us in building a canal. But I will not occupy the time of the Senate.

Mr. CONNESS. There is no such question involved as has been suggested by the honorable Senator from Wisconsin; but on the contrary, the State Department has been already in negotiation with the Colombian Government to obtain, and have obtained, the privilege of sending an armed party there to make this survey, so that it is in accordance with the obligations of the Government and with its faith to foreign nations. A survey has already been made, demonstrating where the next is to be made; and the object is simply to demonstrate to the commercial world that this great work is practicable, and to that end $40,000 is asked that the work may be entered upon at the proper season for that country, which owing to its climate will be next December. It is not proposed, I will say to the Senator from Ohio who has charge of the bill, to commit the Government to the construction of this great work, but it is believed to be the duty of a Government that has such great interest in commerce as ours has, to make this demonstration when it can be done at so light a cost.

Mr. SUMNER. I think that the Senator from Wisconsin referred to what is known as the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, but I think if he will examine that carefully he will see that it is not applicable to this case. This is on the Panama route; it is a different line from that covered by that treaty. It is not embraced within the terms of what is known as the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

Mr. CONNESS. Not at all.

Mr. SUMNER. It is therefore to be taken separately by itself, on its own merits. I have had the advantage of cursorily examining the very able and interesting report made by Admiral Davis on this line. It is very learned and instructive, and develops the importance of this line to the commerce of the United States. I need not remind you that California is necessarily interested in this line, because this is the highway by which we reach that distant part of our own country; and I call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to that precise point. This is to increase and extend the facilities of communication with a part of our own country. It is true that unhappily we are obliged to go outside of our own borders in order to do this work, but I do not know that it becomes on that account any the less important.

If the Senate will reflect upon it a moment they will see not only its practical value but also its grandeur in a historical aspect. From the time of Charles V one of the aspirations of Spain, and indeed of all adventurers and navigators in these seas, has been to find what in that early time was called a gate through which they could pass through that isthmus into the other ocean. The proposition now is, not to find, but to make a gate by which we can pass from one ocean to the other.

I stated that it had a historic grandeur; it also has a practical value from the relations with the different parts of our own country. But, sir, I am admonished by the pressure of business that I ought not to occupy the time of the Senate. I content myself, therefore, with one additional remark. The proposition before you, as I understand, is simply to provide for the surveys. We do not venture beyond that. There is no appropriation for the work. We do not bind ourselves to the work. Here is an appropriation for surveys which, whether regarded in a practical or in a scientific or a historic light, will be of very great value. I, sir, shall gladly vote for it.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 22, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Buckalew, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Doolittle, Fowler, Howard, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Nye, Poland, Ramsey, Ross, Stewart, Sumner, Van Winkle, Wade, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Cowan, Fessenden, Grimes, Henderson, Howe, Lane, Morgan, Pomeroy, Riddle, Sherman, Sprague, Trumbull, and Willey—18.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brown, Cragin, Creswell, Davis, Dixon, Edmunds, Foster, Guthrie, Harris, Hendricks, Johnson, Kirkwood, Norton, Saulsbury, and Wright—15.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. I offer the following amendment, to be inserted after line ninety-five, on page 5:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to collect reliable statistical information concerning the gold and silver mines of the western States and Territories, which shall include the labor and capital employed, the product and the modes of working the same, and which information shall be reported to Congress at its next session, $15,000.

In this connection, I submit a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, which I ask to have read to the Senate.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 20, 1866.

SIR: I have the honor, in reply to your letter of the 16th instant, relative to the want of reliable information concerning the mineral resources of the Pacific States and Territories and the importance of supplying it, to say that this Department has long felt the want to which you refer, and concurring in your views as to the necessity of collecting full and reliable statistics upon the subject, and as to the means of effecting this object, I shall most cheerfully, within my appropriate sphere, coöperate with you in carrying your suggestions into effect. To this end, I respectfully recommend the adoption of a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint a commissioner, and appropriating such sum as may be necessary for compensation and necessary traveling expenses, or the incorporation of a like provision in one of the appropriation bills.

Very respectfully,

H. McCULLOCH,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. JOHN CONNESS, United States Senator.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should really like to ask the Senator whether it is worth while to put on all the loose legislation any gentleman may desire, if we ever expect to get through with the miscellaneous bill. It must be obvious that we never can pass the bill if we put on all these things; we shall have a quarrel with the House and lose the bill finally. I suppose it is in the power of the Senate to put on anything they please; but if we go on in this way and put on everything that Senators fail to get in any other shape standing by itself, there is no end, and we cannot get through the bill at all. We have now fixed a time for adjournment, and we may go on day after day precisely in this way until the budget of each Senator is exhausted. I hope this course will not be persisted in.

Mr. CONNESS. This amendment has been recommended with unanimity by the Committee on Mines and Mining. It is no new proposition. I supposed that no Senator would accept it more readily than the honorable Senator from Maine. I think that the Senator, when occupying the high position of Secretary of the Treasury, with so much distinction as he did, must have felt the importance of the information proposed to be collected. Indeed I know he did, for I remember very distinctly that in one of his annual reports (I have it not before me now) he confessed that so far as the mining interests, the productiveness, and the management of the mines of the great West were concerned, it was to the Department of which he was the head the terra incognita of the United States. He confessed that he did not understand it or know anything about it; and the present Secretary of the Treasury has again and again felt the necessity and the value of such information to that Department.

I cannot propose to occupy the time of the Senate by showing that this proposition is just; but it occurs to me that this ought not to be looked upon as loose legislation, or a mere call for the expenditure of money, but as a proposition to collect data of the most important kind to the Government for its uses with reference to its policies, to its measures, to taxation, to be intelligently applied. There are no statistics on this subject at the present time. It is time to begin to collect them. Why, sir, in the colony of Australia the British Government have already a system the most exact and comprehensive for the collection of information and statistics. I was very much surprised within the last year to find the elaborateness and completeness with which the English Government are proceeding there in this very direction. Within the last few years, I wish to say to the honorable Senator and the Senate, the Emperor of France has sent a commission into the States of California and Nevada, and kept them there for nearly an entire year investigating this whole subject, and the forthcoming report from that commission I have no doubt will be one of great interest and value. But in regard to our own country we have not taken the first step; we have not initiated the first proceeding to collect a single fact.

Mr. President, during the present session of Congress I was in receipt of a communication from the honorable Secretary of State, Mr. Seward, inclosing a letter from a distinguished English gentleman about to publish a book in the city of London in regard to the resources of our country; not Sir Morton Peto, I will say, but a very distinguished author. He had written to the State Department to be supplied with material which he could lay before the European world concerning the resources of the States and Territories lying west of the Rocky mountains. The Secretary of State inclosed the communication to myself and asked me to supply him with the information to furnish to this author. Of course I was not in possession of any. I referred him to the Interior Department; but I undertake to say, as I suggested to him, that there was very little there that was obtainable. This is an appropriation of a like amount with one that has been made for years to continue investigations from the Land Office, and which, at the suggestion of the honorable Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] and myself, has been remitted for the last two years because we believed, nay, we knew, there was no corresponding benefit from the outlay; and when that appropriation was proposed we so advised the Senate, and it has not recently been made. Now we propose to resume the collection of exact information and data upon a subject I think of such a degree of consequence that all will at once admit it.

Mr. GUTHRIE. I am inclined to vote for this amendment to the bill. I have felt myself in great difficulty and doubt about the question of these mines and what they are practically worth, and would be very willing to have at least one report on the subject, so that we may see if they really are what they are represented to be. I think it is an expenditure which the country is prepared to approve, and it is information that everybody desires.

Mr. NESMITH. Perhaps no question has been before Congress of more interest to the Pacific States and Territories than the measure proposed by the Senator from California. I am very glad that he and the committee of which he is chairman has brought the subject to the attention of the Senate. There is a vast mining region there, extending from the base of the Rocky mountains on this side to the Pacific ocean, and from our Mexican border to the forty-ninth parallel. Its development has been left entirely to private enterprise. There has been no regular system by which reports have been made in relation to it, as to its resources, its value, its productions, what has been derived from it, and what is likely to be derived from it. It is a source of very great revenue to the country and one upon which we must depend eventually for the precious metals to discharge our immense annual obligations, and I think there is no subject which comes within the purview of national legislation which should so much attract the attention of the Government, or which is so important as to get correct and reliable data relative to the great mining interests of that country. I trust that the amendment will be adopted and a commissioner be appointed, and that we shall have a thorough investigation on the subject and a report at the next session of Congress, so that we may have reliable information on a subject of such very great interest to the country.

Mr. STEWART. I have opposed the appropriations of $15,000 expended hitherto, because I could not see any good results from them; but I am satisfied that if this appropriation is made we shall have a report that will give some information, and I hope the appropriation will be made.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I would ask the Senator from California if he would permit an amendment to go upon his proposed amendment, that the commission which is to be appointed may be directed to turn their attention to the bonded warehouses? [Laughter.] If he will permit that I should like to move an amendment of that kind.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There was in the revenue bill a section which we struck out providing for a Bureau of Statistics in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury. If that had passed I think the statistics in relation to mining would be a part of it, but we concluded to strike it out. The mere obtaining of these statistics is of no more pressing importance just now than the obtaining of statistics in relation to matters of trade and other things. The striking out of that section of the revenue bill has been disagreed to on the part of the House, and it is very possible that the section may finally pass, but probably with some amendments. I do not see why this particular subject of mining statistics should be taken out of the general question of statistics as applicable to other things. I see no reason for putting this in here without putting in a great many other things. I do not exactly go the bonded warehouses, but statistics in regard to trade and agriculture and other matters ought to be provided for at the same time. I admit that the obtaining of these statistics is important; that I have no question of; but I doubt the policy and good sense of putting on to this bill where it does not properly belong an appropriation for obtaining these statistics, when we have refused in the Senate to pass any appropriation or make any provision for obtaining statistics upon other subjects.

Mr. CONNESS. I think I can explain that to the Senator.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not think the Senator can explain it to me, because I believe I understand it now so far as the position I take is concerned.

Mr. CONNESS. I am quite aware that I can throw no light on a subject that the Sena-ator has investigated, but I can give him a few words upon the course this question has taken. The section relating to statistics that is found in the revenue bill now pending between the two Houses, I think, arose and grew out of communications between the Secretary of the Treasury and myself in the early part of the winter. I called his attention in a letter addressed to him to the necessity and the public advantage of a central Bureau of Statistics near the Government which should embrace the three subjects of agriculture, mining, and manufactures. The honorable Senator from Rhode Island will perceive that in considering the subject the question of manufactures was not lost sight of. I believe that such a bureau could be established and conducted at a less public expenditure of means than the present Agricultural Bureau and be of infinite benefit to all three branches of industry; and I invited the Secretary to have a bill prepared with a view to that end. The result eventually was the addition of a long section to the revenue bill spoken of by the Senator from Maine, but which did not include in any respect statistics concerning the mines. There is a necessity for beginning the collection of statistics concerning the mines at an earlier day than you shall collect them for other branches of industry, for you have them already in regard to these branches; they are coming into your Government from commerce; they are coming into your Government for manufactures, as every single day progresses; but to begin to collect statistics on the subject of mines and mining agents will have to be employed, or a commissioner of great ability, and he must necessarily visit every mine and report upon it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. A job for somebody.

Mr. CONNESS. It is not intended, I wish to say, for any individual on earth. There is nothing in it or about it that participates of a job. I would despise the appropriation of money with such a view; but if Senators will remember for a single moment the importance to citizens in all the States of the Union who are investing in mines of collecting such statistical information as I have suggested, and laying it before the whole people in a financial report in an authoritative shape, I think they will concede that it is time to begin and also concede its value. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. STEWART. I will make a single remark in addition to what I have already said, inasmuch as the chairman of the Committee on Finance does not appreciate the importance of getting this information more than the importance of getting statistical information in regard to agriculture, manufactures, commerce, or anything else. Other nations do see an additional importance in statistical information on the subject, and they have taken some pains to ascertain what the mineral wealth of the United States is, for the purpose of predicating their financial operations upon that knowledge, they being in debt as we are now. We do not propose to send a commissioner to Europe to inform them in regard to our mines; the fact is, they can inform us. There is no part of the civilized world where there is more ignorance in regard to our mines than right here in Washington, where we are called on to legislate in regard to them.

I think it highly important that we should get reliable information in regard to the yield of the gold and silver mines and its probable continuance. It is necessary to our financial calculations. The value of our bonds may depend very much upon the probable yield of gold and silver. If it were reliably ascertained that there would be a continual increase of gold and silver, so that those metals would be cheap, so that we should have no difficulty in redeeming our bonds, it might have an important bearing upon the value of the bonds. I think authentic information with regard to the vast mineral wealth of this country will do more to strengthen our credit than anything else we can do. The only objection to the appropriations heretofore made was, that they did not produce any result. We think now this can be so directed as to produce valuable results. The Secretary of the Treasury, taking special interest in it with a view to our public credit, we think it can be so arranged as to get information that will be very gratifying to the people of the United States and to the national bond-holders, and will strengthen our credit considerably.

In this view, I think the small appropriation that is asked ought to be cheerfully granted. For some years a similar amount was appropriated without yielding any result; but now the Secretary of the Treasury thinks he can get a report, and I believe he can. I think when a report is made, and the people of the United States see the prospect of the yield of gold and silver upon which to predicate the payment of our debt, our credit will be very much strengthened.

Mr. McDUGALL. I desire to say one word. The importance of a complete knowledge of our resources in the precious metals should be understood by every Senator on the floor. It is a singular fact that France, Great Britain, Austria, and Russia, through their agents sent into our country, are now better possessed of our resources in mineral wealth than is the Government of the United States; they have bestowed pains to understand the value of the respective resources of the various portions of the world, and particularly in the precious metals. There is no work of authority to which we can now go to ascertain anything in detail as to what we may rely upon in regard to the development of the mining region and its capability of further development. This lies within the general range as promoting the general prosperity and enabling the Government to know what it can rely upon. The amount of the appropriation is trifling. It can be no job. It cannot more than pay the common, ordinary expenses of such an enterprise. If a person fond of science and fond of these inquiries and desirous of pursuing them can be employed at $15,000 to make these investigations and report to the Government, the Government will be a great gainer, and not only the Government, but the people generally throughout the United States. I trust the amendment will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADE. The special committee who were directed to equalize the payment of the employés of the Senate and House of Representatives have directed me to offer as an amendment the bill they reported on that subject.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to make a suggestion to my colleague which perhaps will be agreeable to him. The proposition to increase the pay of the employés of the House of Representatives has been put into what is called the deficiency bill, where this whole subject will come up. That bill is now before the Committee on Finance, and I suggest whether he had not better let this measure come up on that bill. The extra pay to employés of the House is already put upon that bill by the House of Representatives. It will lead to considerable discussion. I make the suggestion to save time, because the whole subject will all come up then.

Mr. WADE. I do not know when that will come up.

Mr. FESSENDEN. To-morrow, probably.

Mr. SHERMAN. It must come up. The question is on that bill now.

Mr. WADE. I have no choice which bill it is to be in; but I am directed to offer it to one of these bills. Perhaps that is the most appropriate for it as the House regulation is in that bill. I withdraw the amendment for the present, and will offer it on the other bill.

Mr. POMEROY. I am authorized by the Committee on the District of Columbia to move the following amendment, to come in on page 21, after line four hundred and ninety-four:

For the National Association for the relief of destitute colored women and children, incorporated under an act of Congress, approved February 14, 1863, $5,000, to be expended under the direction of the officers of the association.

I hold in my hand the annual report of the association in this District that have in charge the destitute colored women and children. This association was organized by an act of Congress approved February 14, 1863. It has hitherto been supported mainly by voluntary contributions. General Howard has made a report in reference to it, from which I will read a few extracts. The president of the association is Mrs. Benjamin F. Wade, the vice-president Mrs. George W. McLellan, the treasurer Mrs. Germond Crandell, and the secretary Miss Eliza Heacock. Among the executive committee appear the names of Mrs. Lyman Trumbull, Mrs. General O. O. Howard, Mrs. D. N. Cooley, and other ladies of the District. The trustees are Messrs. A. M. Gangewer, S. J. Bowen, and Charles King.

A report to General Howard, from the commissioner appointed by him, speaks of it as follows:

"In accordance with your directions I have carefully examined the conduct of the National Association, incorporated by act of Congress, approved February 14, 1863, for the relief of destitute colored women and children, and find it favorably situated, in good condition, saving much suffering, and serving also an excellent purpose in training for virtuous citizenship many outcast children. Sixty children are now in it."

That was true at the time of the report. There are more in it now. It goes on to state that the expenses monthly per capita are about $11 19, but the superintendent assures him that this amount can be reduced to about nine dollars per capita.

"They need," says this report to General Howard, "for annual expenditure not less than $10,000 to meet current expenses."

A few individuals have hitherto contributed the sum necessary. One gentleman from Birmingham, in England, sent £100. That is the only amount that I know of that has been contributed abroad. The commissioner further says:

"I believe the asylum deserves your indorsement, and should receive the favorable consideration of the charitable public."

This is signed by "John Eaton, jr., colonel and assistant commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau."

General Howard adds:

"I earnestly commend the Georgetown asylum, and hope our benevolent friends in the country will aid the trustees in putting it on a permanent basis."

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask the Senator from Kansas if this amendment is reported from a committee.

Mr. POMEROY. I stated in the beginning that I was authorized by the Committee on the District of Columbia to propose this amendment. I will only add—for I do not want to take up time—that this institution has been well conducted and has been very well supported during the war from voluntary contributions, but it is one of those cases that does not come exactly within the law authorizing the Freedmen's Bureau to make any expenditure. The persons for whom it makes provision are not refugees, they are not freedmen; they are children picked up by the wayside who are either orphans or worse than orphans. They are gathered into this institution and supported at the expense of charitable individuals. Our contributions during the war for sanitary and other purposes were so great and our appropriations by Congress so large, that the trustees thought they would, if they could, get along without asking any aid from Congress; but they have now asked, as the amendment shows, an appropriation of only one half of the current expenses this year, leaving the other half to be collected from charitable individuals. The two extremes of human life are in this institution, the very aged who are unable to care for themselves, and the very young who have no one to care for them. Very aged females occupy their time in taking care of the little ones. They are very useful in that regard, but they cannot earn a livelihood from their labor. I spent last Sabbath at the institution, and was deeply interested in the progress the little ones had made, and I think it strongly commends itself for a small appropriation of $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NYE. I am authorized by the Committee on Naval Affairs to report the following amendment:

And be it further enacted, That there shall be paid to Donohue, Ryan & Secor, builders of the iron-clad monitor Camanche, in accordance with the estimate and allowances, the sum of $179,993 80 upon the loss sustained by the parties named in the construction of the Camanche, and the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to pay the same.

Mr. SHERMAN. I raise the point of order that that is a private claim. It cannot be attached to an appropriation bill. It is not claimed to be in pursuance of law, but a mere private indemnity.

Mr. NYE. I think the Senator will see by looking at the law authorizing the construction of these iron-clads—

Mr. SHERMAN. I believe these points of order are settled without debate on the face of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CLARK in the chair.) They are settled without debate unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. SHERMAN. There can be no doubt it is a private claim.

Mr. NYE. I think there is very great doubt of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that it must be regarded as a private claim.

Mr. NYE. Then, with great respect to the opinion of the Chair, I propose to take the sense of the Senate upon that question.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well; let us have the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. NYE. Is that question debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Certainly.

Mr. NYE. I suppose the Senator from Ohio objects to this amendment under the thirtieth rule, which reads:

"No amendment proposing additional appropriations shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments; and no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation."

In February, 1862, a law was passed by Congress authorizing the Secretary of the Navy "to cause to be constructed, by contract or otherwise, as he shall deem best for the public service, not exceeding twenty iron-clad steam gunboats for the use of the Navy of the United States." I suppose that the law authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to construct these iron-clads carried with it the power to contract, superintend, and build them; and it authorized him and made it obligatory upon him to pay for them.

The Senator from Ohio will remember this case, I trust. Some weeks ago I had the honor to report a bill paying all these naval constructors twelve per cent. on the contract price for damages sustained. This claim is a claim that the Committees of both Houses on Naval Affairs and all parties concerned raised no possible objection to the justice of, but all admitted that it ought to be paid. The distinguished chairman of the Naval Committee, of which I have the honor to be an humble member, with all his scrutiny, said here upon the floor repeatedly of the Camanche, that there was no question but that this amount was honestly due, and ought to be paid to those who built her.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit the question as a matter of convenience, whether it is in order to debate the merits of a proposition on the mere question as to whether it is a private claim. I can stay here as well as other Senators; we have to pass this bill to-night if we mean to adjourn on Saturday; and I ask the Chair whether it is in order to discuss the merits of the claim, whether it is a just claim or not, on the question whether it is a private claim. That is the only point now before the Senate.

Mr. NYE. I merely suggested that point to show the justice of the claim and to appeal to the Senator from Ohio if there was here a mere question of technicality interposing to prevent justice being done to waive it. I hope the Senate will disregard a mere technicality that is disregarded on every appropriation bill every year, more or less. It is impossible that any claim, general in its character as it may be, does not inure to the benefit of individuals. These general appropriations are all, in one sense, to inure to the benefit of certain individuals.

Now, sir, the law authorizing the construction of a certain number of iron-clads—and it being a conceded fact that the Camanche was one of the twenty authorized to be constructed—it being agreed by the Department and by both committees to which the case has been referred that there is this amount due upon its construction, I insist upon it that this amendment is not to provide for a private claim within the sense of the thirtieth rule, so as to be excluded. It is to carry out the provision of the law of February, 1862, for I shall not be told by the Senator from Ohio, I trust, that it is not as much a part of the obligation to pay as it is to construct, and upon that I am willing to take the sense of the Senate for my rule and guide of action.

I ought to state one thing, perhaps, that the action on the general bill passed by the Senate and sent to the House has been deferred until next December. Now, I happen to know that this money thus justly due is crushing and grinding one of the worst men of this country to the very earth by the interest he is paying. It is utterly ruinous; and to defer this on a mere question of forced technicality I insist upon it is not fair. It will cost the Government no more, I suggest to the Senator from Ohio, to pay it here than it will at any other time. It is acknowledged to be due; the scrutiny of two committees has declared so; the Navy Department has declared so; and I trust that no little technicality here will so warp the judgment of the Senate as to say that these men shall be further and totally demolished upon a mere question of what I consider forced technicality.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose that in calling for the enforcement of the rules of the Senate I simply do my duty. Not to do it would be to create "confusion worse confounded." Here the rule of the Senate plainly denies to any one, even to a committee, to propose a private bill as an amendment to an appropriation bill, for the simple reason that while you are considering general appropriations for future expenditures you cannot stop to consider all the private claims that may have arisen in the past. The rule is founded upon the necessity of the case, upon common sense, and upon parliamentary law. The Chair has decided that this is a private claim. The Senator scarcely disputes that proposition; but he asks the Senate to overrule the decision, not that he disputes that the measure is a private claim, but because the claim is a just one. It is to avoid the discussion of that very question at this period of time on the appropriation bills that this rule is made; and we have no right, when the question is left to the Senate, to decide it by saying this is a just claim. The purpose of the rule is to exclude all private claims, whether just or unjust, simply because, while a general appropriation bill is pending, it is wrong as a matter of parliamentary principle to encumber that bill with private claims, whether just or unjust. That this is a private claim no man can question; and that is the only question submitted to us for our judicial opinion. It is money due to an individual for past services, whether just or unjust is not the question.

Mr. NYE. Under an existing law.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is money due to a private individual, past due. That is enough to make it a private claim. That is the only definition of a private claim. An appropriation is for future expenditures.

Mr. HOWE. Will the Senator allow me to inquire—I inquire for information—if this be money due to these individuals, is not this amendment offered with a view of carrying out the provisions of an existing law?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir.

Mr. HOWE. Then how is the money due?

Mr. SHERMAN. I say the question whether it is due or not cannot possibly arise, because if it is a private claim, even if the money is due it cannot be inserted here. The law to which the Senator refers provided that certain vessels should be built, and provided for the manner of building them. Every dollar the United States agreed to pay for those vessels has been paid, and the whole basis of the claim is that it is equitably due. It does not arise under an existing law; the only claim is that the vessel was built under a law. Every private claim that is presented in any shape or form to us arises under some existing law, because it all grows out of the service of the Government. Nearly all the private claims that are on your Calendar grow directly or indirectly out of existing laws. If the Senate will overrule the plain provisions of the thirtieth rule in order to put this private claim upon this bill, as a matter of course there is an end of all checks, and I shall not deem it my duty to interpose any further check.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is very disagreeable of course to differ with the Chair on a question of this sort, and I know the Chair will not be at all displeased or feel hurt if the Senate shall overrule his decision. Here is money that ought to be paid. Nobody questions it. Everybody said this claim was right when the bill was up. There was an appropriation to build certain ships; this ship was built, and there is not enough of money appropriated to pay it. It is built according to law and there is no appropriation to pay what everybody admits to be due. This is the claim that the Senator from New Hampshire now occupying the chair [Mr. CLARK] said was right when it was up. Everybody said so.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me to inquire whether this amount which is to be paid to these gentlemen is a sum due to them by contract, or a sum which ought to be paid to them in excess of what was agreed to be paid?

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is a sum due to them by contract, not the written contract, but it grows out of the fact that the Government took from them after they had finished the machinery the important part of that machinery and thereby they were delayed in their work, and now it is a quantum meruit instead of the stipulated price. The conduct of the Government was such as to raise that class of contract. I hope this claim will be allowed. It is a question of life or death. The vessel was swamped once and was a dreadful loss upon these parties, and now the question is whether we shall delay this thing and swamp in a financial way the parties who have rendered such good service to the Government. I hope it will be allowed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I understand the question now, it is whether the decision of the Chair shall stand as the judgment of the Senate, and it appears to me that that is purely an intellectual question. It has nothing to do with the admitted or claimed justice of these gentlemen's claim; but it is a question which we are bound to decide upon the law and the rule irrespective of what we desire shall be the result of it. It would not do for us, I take it, if we were sitting, as the Senator from New York [Mr. HARRIS] used to sit, as judges here on an appeal from some lower court, to have our wishes enter into the question of deciding what the law really is.

Now, the Senator from Indiana tells us that this is not a sum of money which is to be paid in pursuance of a contract made under the law authorizing the construction of these vessels, but that on account of some interference with that contract by the power of the Government a just claim in equity arose in favor of these gentlemen. I do not know that; but I do not doubt it, because the Senator says it is so. But the question recurs, not whether or not we ought to pay these people, but whether we can conscientiously decide that your decision, sir, is an error, merely because it happens to suit our wishes at this moment to accomplish a particular result. That is the question; and that being the question, it appears to me that we cannot hesitate to sustain the decision that the Chair has made; and if this claim be a just one, as it is represented, a bill to pay these gentlemen can be introduced and be passed in an hour by itself, if it be really true as is stated—and I have no reason to doubt it—that this is that species of claim.

Mr. CONNESS. This question assumes a very disagreeable attitude to Senators. I have understood the practice of the Senate usually to be when a question of this kind arises for the Chair to submit the question to the Senate and let the Senate decide whether the proposition presented is a private claim or not, and I hope, in that view of the case, that the Senator will withdraw his appeal from the decision of the Chair, and that the Chair will submit the question to the Senate in the ordinary way.

Mr. POMEROY. I was going to suggest that we may take the question in another way.

Mr. NYE. I will withdraw the appeal. All I desired was to have the sense of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair certainly has no desire to decide the point of order; but when a point is made it is the duty of the Chair to decide it, and he cannot have any question about it; but the Chair will submit the question to the Senate if Senators have any delicacy about it. The question is, Shall this amendment be received under the rule?

Mr. STEWART. I simply wish to remark that if there is any embarrassment in regard to the question of order, there can be no embarrassment with regard to the propriety of passing the measure. Before, when it came before the Senate, it was accompanied by a large number of other measures as to which we were not informed; but the chairman of the Naval Committee and every Senator who spoke concurred in the fact that this was a just claim and ought to be paid. Now, inasmuch as we are relieved from a great deal of embarrassment that may come at another time in a combination and omnibus bill to pay a number of claims, having an honest claim before us that we all concur in, it seems to me it should be received now with a good deal of favor by the Senate. It is the portion of the iron-clad bill which every one agreed ought to be passed; and that being the case, it is a hardship on them to postpone it to another session.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The same remark would apply to a hundred other cases of hardship. If there ever was a private claim in the world, this is one. It was submitted to the Senate originally as a private claim, on a petition, referred to a committee as a claim and a private claim merely. To be sure there were a good many others of the same kind; but its character cannot be possibly changed by that circumstance in any possible way. If the Senate, merely because it is in favor of a particular claim, is to hold that it is not a private claim, there will be no getting along at all with our appropriation bills. The Senate on the construction of a rule so clear in this case will only stultify itself by deciding that this is not a private claim. There is nothing else about it. It is in favor of a private party for a claim which has gone before a committee and been considered as a private claim.

Mr. HOWARD. I have no doubt there is a private claim; but it is not every private claim that is excluded from consideration by the thirtieth rule. The exception made to that rule in regard to private claims is in these words: "unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation." I think the question here is whether this case does not fall within the exception. What is this claim? It is a claim, as I understand it, presented by the contractors for compensation on account of the losses which they assert they have sustained in executing a contract with the Government, and by the action of the Government which has tended to prevent them from performing the contract as they were required to do by its letter.

Mr. SHERMAN. In the nature of unliquidated damages, I suppose.

Mr. HOWARD. No, sir. The claim arises under a contract which was entered into to carry out, in the language of the rule, "an existing law."

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the Government violated the contract by taking away the property. Then their conduct was contrary to law instead of under the law.

Mr. HOWARD. If these claimants have an equitable claim against the Government arising out of and under a contract which was entered into to carry out an existing statute, it seems to me that it is a private claim arising out of the provisions of an existing statute. I cannot confine the language of the rule to claims which are strictly legal claims, where there has been a quid pro quo, a legal, formal consideration; but it embraces by its very terms all claims, whether legal or equitable, and I understand that these claimants found their claim upon the equities of their case, and in that point of view I certainly can make no distinction between an equitable claim and a legal claim, both arising under a contract to carry out the provisions of an existing statute.

It is alleged that the failure of the contractors to perform their contract arose from the intervention of the Government itself, which prevented them from performing it in the mode and within the time required by their contract. If that be the case, then surely there must be an equity on the part of the claimants, arising out of their contract and out of the action of the Government itself. It seems to me; therefore, it will be giving this rule a very narrow and insufficient construction to confine it to cases which are stripped of every character of equity but resting solely upon a point of law. I cannot give it that narrow construction.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The construction that my honorable friend gives would be a very excellent one. This is a private claim, he admits, but under his construction it comes under the exception to the rule; being to carry out an existing law; and how does he proceed to do it? Why, there is no law for it; it is a mere equitable matter, for which the parties are obliged to come to Congress because there is no law, and therefore it arises under an existing law! That is his logic, stated in plain terms. This, he says, is a private claim. Nobody doubts that. Why is it not paid? Because there is no law for it. It is nothing but an equitable claim upon the Government.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the Senator allow me to inquire whether, in his opinion, the rule contemplates that there shall be a law to pay the claim?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will state the construction that has always been put upon it. It is that there must be a law admitting the thing itself, but where there has been no appropriation to meet the provisions of that law, an amendment is allowable.

Mr. TRUMBULL. For instance, where there is an officer provided for without an appropriation for his salary.

Mr. HOWARD. That is not a fair construction of the rule.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Where the law provides that the thing shall be done, but there has been no appropriation to do it, that is something arising out of an existing law. But here is a claim which has not a law to found itself upon, but is simply equitable in the strictest sense of the word, if anything. It surely cannot be received. The Senator from Michigan admits that there is no law to pay it, and yet he says it arises under an existing law. He will see at once that that cannot be.

Mr. HOWARD. The interpretation of the Senator from Maine seeks to interpolate into the language of the rule that which it does not contain, because he insists in the first place that the claim shall be a private claim; and, secondly, that there shall be a law requiring its payment. The language of the rule is that the character of the claim shall be to carry out the provisions of an existing law; that is, a statute that is in force.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Will the Senator refer me to the existing law which this amendment is to carry out?

Mr. HOWARD. The law which authorized and required the construction of these vessels, the law now in force so far as this contract is concerned.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The contract was made; and as this does not come under any law authorizing payment, it is necessary to pass a new appropriation, and therefore it is within the existing law.

Mr. HOWARD. That is the Senator's reductio ad absurdum; it does not arise from the rule or from my argument.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The case is simply this: here was a law which provided for the construction of vessels; the United States contracted with these parties to construct one of those vessels in a particular way and deliver it in a particular place; and when they were about to do that the authorities of the United States stepped in because they were the strongest, and took certain parts of that vessel and made use of them in another way. These gentlemen were not carrying out the provisions of an existing law when they yielded to the force of the Government any more than the men whose property was taken by quartermasters were carrying out the provisions of a law to carry on the war because they gave up their property to the Army—not a particle.

All that I rose to say was that the day before yesterday the Committee on Commerce undertook to get an amendment put on this identical bill which was precisely parallel to this, and the Chair ruled with the acquiescence and assent of the Senate, and with our acquiescence because we thought it to be correct, that it was not in order; and that case was this: an existing law required the construction of a lighthouse at Cape Canaveral, in Florida; the Light-House Board or the Secretary of the Treasury, whichever is the proper authority, entered into a contract with R. P. Parrott to build it; he went on in the execution of that contract until the war broke out, when the Department stopped it, so that he was unable to get the pay which he should have had under the contract. They recommended the claim to our consideration; it was perfectly just, and the Committee on Commerce offered it as an amendment to this bill; but the Chair ruled only the day before yesterday, with the acquiescence of the Senate, that that was a private claim, and not to be entertained as an amendment to this bill. Now, the Senate ought to be consistent with itself, however strong its wish may be to relieve these men.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Perhaps there may be another view taken of this subject in regard to the rule. There was a law passed for the construction of these iron-clads, and there was an appropriation made for their construction. There was then a law and a provision for payment, with the right to contract for their construction, with the right to alter the plans, with the right to make any changes, and the right to do it with the consent of the contractors, which immediately created an obligation on the Department and charged them just as much as the original contract made between the parties in writing. It is just as obligatory, and the money here claimed could have been paid out of the Treasury upon the warrant of the Secretary of the Treasury from the appropriation made for the construction of the iron-clads.

There was a law for the construction of iron-clads, and a general appropriation placed in the hands of the Secretary, and he was given a general discretion. He was authorized to charge the Treasury with the responsibility of his proceedings in their construction; and when he changed the plan of the vessel, or when he asked for a different thing to be done from that which the parties agreed to do, it was an addendum to the contract, just as binding as if it had been put in writing, with all the ceremonies of the Department. You can make no distinction between the contract, the result of these circumstances, and the written contract, so far as obligation is concerned.

Here, then, I say, is a contract with an appropriation. There were circumstances that charged the Government with a positive obligation. Why is that not an exception which takes it out of the rule relied upon by the chairman of the Committee on Finance?

Then, Mr. President, the question whether or not this matter shall be considered is a question for the Senate to determine by a majority vote. The Senate is not, and never has regarded itself bound by any technical question on such a subject. Measures of this kind, private bills, have often been placed upon appropriation bills, the Senate taking the responsibility of doing it, the Senate thinking that the circumstances justified it. Surely, if circumstances would justify such action in any case, this is that case. I trust, under all the circumstances, without raising mere technical questions, although I believe the technical point is in favor of the amendment, the Senate will allow it to be considered on this bill, it being the universal voice of the body that this is a just claim which should be paid, and a denial of this acknowledged justice will involve ruin to the parties claimant.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to ask the Senator who presented this amendment, which will involve an appropriation of $180,000, if the committee who examined it did not find that a part of the damages resulting to these individuals arose from the sinking of this vessel. Am I mistaken or not? I ask, did not a part of the damages which this amendment is intended to cover arise from the sinking of the vessel in the harbor of San Francisco?

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the Senator propounds his question to me, I will state what the fact was. The vessel was about completed and ready to be taken round to San Francisco, it being intended for service upon that coast. The Government had occasion to use the machinery in a vessel then at Port Royal or at Charleston, and took out of this vessel a very important portion of the machinery, thus increasing the cost of replacing it, because of the enhanced prices in the mean time, and delaying the shipping of the vessel until the stormy season. Then at the time the vessel went to the Pacific coast it encountered an extraordinary storm, being in the season when storms are likely to occur, and was sunk, and there was great cost in raising her. A portion of the cost was in raising and restoring the vessel after it got to the Pacific coast. A portion of it was because of the enhanced prices in the mean time.

Mr. HENDERSON. That was my recollection in reference to the damages that this amendment was intended to cover. The Senator from Michigan says that this claim grew out of an existing law. Now, it turns out that the larger portion of the claim does not grow out of a law but grows out of the sinking of the vessel. The damages, it seems, grew out of the storm; and if there be any law for the allowance, it must be the storm itself, for surely there is none other. It is not pretended that these parties have not been paid every dollar that the law authorized to be given for building the vessel. My remembrance is that the contract was made with these parties under an appropriation to cover the contract price, and every dollar of that has been paid. But they say that the Government did not comply with its part of the contract, and they now ask for damages that resulted from the sinking of their vessel in consequence of the failure of the Government to comply with its part of the contract.

The latter part of the thirtieth rule of the Senate is—

"No amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation."

What is the meaning of that? If a contract had been entered into a number of years ago to build the Capitol, for example, and appropriations were made from year to year, as was the case, in order to pay for the work that might be done during the year, this would be an existing law under which the work would go on, and an amendment might be offered making an appropriation to cover the work that might afterward be done. That is to say, the work is to be done from year to year, and the law is an existing law. Perhaps, in such a case, the appropriations, running through a series of years—fifteen or twenty years—would amount to many millions, but only a sufficient amount is appropriated each year to meet the work that may be done in the succeeding year.

When the bill for the relief of the iron-clad contractors was pending I took some part in the discussion. I did not remember the precise character of this particular claim, but it turns out as I supposed, and the facts are such as to make it unquestionably a private claim. The thirtieth rule was adopted for a good purpose. The Chair says that this proposition cannot be entertained under the rule; but Senators say, submit the question to the Senate and let us take a vote upon it, and if a majority wish to violate the rule of the Senate let them do so. Sir, that ought never to be done; and why? Are we, under a mere proposition to make an appropriation to pay a certain amount of money, to take up and consider the merits of this claim? I understand that an appropriation bill is not for the purpose of considering the merits of the claims that may be presented. An appropriation bill is intended to carry out the existing laws imposing obligations for carrying on the Government. By making an appropriation for this claim we admit its justice. I am not prepared to admit the justice of this claim, and I apprehend the Senate is not prepared to admit any such thing. I know it has been repeatedly said during the short discussion we have had about it—and surely that has been long enough—that all the Senate concurred in this claim. I apprehend not. It is said the committees have concurred in it. Sir, if this proposition is to be received, the door will be opened to consider all this iron-clad business. The Senator from Iowa, chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, did not admit the justice of this claim; but, as I understand, he only proposed to pay twelve per cent. upon the contract price.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Not upon this particular claim.

Mr. CONNESS. This was specially excepted from that rule. All of this claim is to be paid, and twelve per cent. of the others.

Mr. HENDERSON. Was not this claim in the original bill?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Yes, sir; but this claim was provided for in the original bill, by the consent of everybody, at its face.

Mr. HENDERSON. At any rate, I ask if the Senate is going to violate its rules? If we want to pay this claim, let us take it up on a separate bill and pass it; but it is certainly a private claim because it is founded on unliquidated damages. If this is not a private claim, there is nothing of that character.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I rise to make a suggestion to the Senate. I hope that by common consent it may be understood that a bill for this particular clause of the large omnibus bill which has been passed by the Senate for the relief of the iron-clad contractors will be at once introduced and passed through the Senate and sent to the other House. I recollect very well that when that question was up before, gentlemen upon the committee who examined the subject, and who were very critical in their objections to most of the claims comprised in that bill, conceded that this ought to be paid, and upon the face of that bill it was made an exception, or, at all events, it was provided for in a peculiar form. I am satisfied that the examination then given to the subject, both in committee and in the Senate, was sufficient to warrant us in assuming it as a just and a good claim. But, sir, it will not answer for us to put it on this bill. This precedent, if established, can be quoted during the remainder of the session, and I presume that if you are to apply the precedent to other cases which will be introduced you will have to extend the session. There are an innumerable number of claims floating through the two Houses of Congress, and the wisdom of the existing rule cannot be questioned by any member, whether he be recent in service or has prolonged experience. As this is a case of unusual merit, my suggestion would be that in order to prevent any possible violation of the rule or any question about the rule, the maintenance of which is indispensable to the purity of our legislation, and in fact to our having our legislation transacted in proper time toward the end of the session, the present amendment be withdrawn and that we provide for the case in a separate bill.

Mr. NYE. I withdraw the amendment with that understanding.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I offer this amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the sum of $2,000 is hereby appropriated to enable the Commissioner of Public Buildings to cause the chamber of the Supreme Court to be painted, and to make such needful repairs therein as the Chief Justice may deem necessary.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is a provision in regard to the Supreme Court room on the deficiency bill, which I shall report to-day.

Mr. TRUMBULL. For this same purpose?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Not precisely the same, but with reference to the same room.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I withdraw my amendment if it is provided for elsewhere.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not say it is provided for, but there is a provision there on the subject, and this would come in appropriately on that bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Very well; I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. STEWART. I offer this amendment, to come in on page 24, after line five hundred and sixty-four of section one:

For compensation of the surveyor general of Nevada, $3,000.

For compensation of clerks in his office, $5,000.
For office rent, messenger, furniture, books, fuel, stationery, and incidental expenses of the office, $3,000.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Does this come from the Land Office?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, sir. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands to offer this amendment, based on the recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I offer another amendment, to come in on page 25, after line five hundred and eighty-four of section one:

For compensation of the surveyor general of Montana, $3,000.

For compensation of the clerks in his office, $5,000.
For office rent, messenger, furniture, books, fuel, stationery, and incidental expenses of the office, $3,000.

I will state that these amounts are the estimates of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and I was instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to offer the amendment. A bill creating the office of surveyor general for Montana has passed both Houses, but has not yet been signed by the President. It is now pending before the President. Of course the appropriation will not be used unless the bill is signed.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is that the usual amount?

Mr. STEWART. It is the estimated amount.

Mr. JOHNSON. Eleven thousand dollars?

Mr. STEWART. This is for starting the office. There is $1,000 extra put in for fixing up the office. In other respects it is the usual estimate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRESWELL. I am instructed by the Committee on Agriculture to offer this amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That to enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to purchase for the use of the Department of Agriculture, from Townsend Glover, Esq., his collection of insects, birds, models of fruits, &c., as per his schedule thereof of May 15, 1866, the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope that will not be put on this bill.

Mr. CRESWELL. I desire to say a very few words in support of this proposition. This collection has been on exhibition for the benefit of the Agricultural Department for more than ten years past, and at the session of 1855-56 an appropriation of $10,000 was made to purchase but a portion of it, that portion of it which includes the birds.

Gentlemen seem to regard this appropriation as something entirely unworthy of the consideration of the Senate. On the contrary, I have a very different opinion. It is not a collection of two-headed calves and monstrosities generally, but it is a scientific collection, arranged with the utmost care after a protracted life of hard work. Mr. Glover is a gentleman of acknowledged high position as an entomologist. He is acting in that capacity in the employment of the Agricultural Department. He was for many years preceding his engagement there employed in the Agricultural College of Maryland. He has devoted all the active years of his life to making this collection, and it is of the utmost practical utility, in my estimation. He arranges all substances that come within the scope of his investigations in a manner that will lead to the dissemination of the most valuable information. For instance, he takes up the subject of flax; he collects every specimen grown in the United States or elsewhere; he arranges them according to their proper names, and then he accompanies each with a card giving all the information he has been able to collect upon the cultivation of flax, its application to certain climates, the effects of certain soil upon it; he then gives all the products from flax and all the practical uses to which it can be applied.

The object of his collection is that, upon application to the Department, any person who may desire information upon any subject can be immediately referred under his arrangement to the matter upon which he desires to become conversant, and can there find in a very few moments all the information which the Department has been able to collect on that subject.

During the last five or six years his collection has been of great use in that way, and gentlemen have derived from it certain information that they could not collect, perhaps, under years of labor elsewhere. His collection now occupies two rooms of the Agricultural Bureau. It is designed to form the nucleus of a grand museum of agricultural and economic subjects; and I think, with my limited knowledge of the question, that no more appropriate expenditure could be made with reference to that Department. It seems to me that it is only a modicum of what is due to the great interest of agriculture.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think we can hardly, at this period of the session, pass an appropriation to meet the convenience of every gentleman who has devoted his time and his talents and his tastes to a particular pursuit. This is one of them, and I do not know what occasion we have to appropriate $10,000 for this purpose. It strikes me as very singular that there is no proposition of any kind or description that the good nature of some Senator may not be prevailed upon to offer to the Senate, and in that way we spend a good deal of time. I really hope the Senate will not adopt this amendment.

Mr. CRESWELL. I claim a good deal of credit for being amiable, but I am sure that in offering this amendment the Senator will not find an instance of that. I offer it not for the convenience of Mr. Glover or any other scientific man, but I offer it with a view to the interests of the agriculture of the country.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was a member of the committee that authorized the amendment to be moved, and while I am not anxious that the Senate shall agree to it, and while from my relation to the bill I am rather inclined to keep it off this bill, I feel bound to state some facts that have come to my knowledge. Mr. Glover is a man who has devoted his life to the collection of specimens of fruit, birds, plants, and all the various branches of the different sciences connected with these subjects. He is a very learned man. He took the highest prize at the recent exhibition at Paris, the gold medal, which is now in the possession of the Government, because he being an employé of the Government could not hold it himself. He has a collection of specimens of fruit, birds, plants, &c., very beautifully and wonderfully arranged. He has spent a whole lifetime at it. For instance he takes the curculia in its various stages, shows how it is destroyed, what its effect is, and then he represents the fruit and shows how it is affected by it.

Mr. GRIMES. I desire to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture if this Mr. Townsend Glover has discovered any way by which the ravages of the curculia can be remedied.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If he has, let him take the prize which has been a standing offer for years, of £5,000, by the English agricultural societies.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope Senators will not go off at a tangent, because although Mr. Glover has not discovered everything he has discovered a great many things, and his collection is of great interest and immense value. An appropriation was made some years ago to buy this identical collection, I think about eight years ago.

Mr. CRESWELL. In 1855-56.

Mr. SHERMAN. Ten thousand dollars was then appropriated for the purchase of this collection which he had collected as a private citizen. He was then, however, in the employment of the Government, and was ordered by Mr. Mason, the Commissioner of Patents, on some other duty, and the money was misapplied, applied to different purposes. There is with the papers a letter of the Commissioner of Patents, and also a letter of Mr. Holloway, the late Commissioner, explaining the matter. This property has been in the custody of the Government and in the sole use of the Government from that time to this. It has been there in the office of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. GRIMES. What is the use of it?

Mr. SHERMAN. It has been of great use. As to whether it is prudent or wise for the Government to buy it, I leave every Senator to judge for himself. I have no doubt that if we pay this man $10,000 he will devote the whole of the $10,000 to the pursuit of this very business. That he has been a useful man, I do not think there can be any question about; a very useful man in his way.

Mr. GRIMES. These models of fruit are very pretty things to look at, but as I have been in the fruit business somewhat, I will state to the Senator from Ohio that they are of no possible use to a man from his region of country and mine.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, yes, they are.

Mr. GRIMES. I have had a little experience on that subject, and a good deal of observation. Take the Rhode Island greening and the Roxbury russet, which he has taken as a model from which to manufacture his specimens, raised in Connecticut or New York, and transplant them to Illinois and Iowa, and they become an autumn fruit, an altogether different kind of apple.

Mr. SHERMAN. This gentleman has specimens of fruit from all the different States; for instance, the Baldwin apple, which I raise a good many of. He has it from New England, he has it from Ohio, he has it from New York, he has it from Illinois, showing different specimens from different States, and showing where particular kinds of fruit succeed the best.

Mr. GRIMES. It is not possible for this gentleman to have these things so as to be of any use. The Senators from Illinois and Wisconsin will tell you that a fruit growing on the black prairie soil, one hundred yards from the same variety of fruit growing on the yellow timber soil, is altogether a different sort of fruit. They are various in the description of the tree and in the production of the fruit. What does Mr. Glover tell us about that? Does he give you any information by his models as to how one variety of fruit may be grown upon one character of soil and another grown upon another character of soil? He gives you merely the exterior outline of the fruit.

Sir, this Agricultural Bureau is altogether too great a thing to be run by a central government here at Washington, and we shall discover that after awhile. We must have these organizations in each State. The idea of one man here at Washington undertaking to tell the people of this country, extending as it does through so many parallels of latitude and longitude, what may be the particular description of fruits or cereals or of anything else adapted to a particular kind of soil or climate, is a great humbug, and this, I think, is a part of it.

Mr. CRESWELL. The difficulty that the Senator from Iowa states is precisely one that Mr. Glover wants to overcome. It is a part of his plan to keep specimens of all these fruits from the various soils and localities of the entire Union.

Mr. GRIMES. It is too big a business; it cannot be done.

Mr. CRESWELL. It can be done, and only done by the General Government, by some person here who has an opportunity to interchange views with gentlemen who represent all the States. He has, as the Senator from Ohio has stated, varieties of the Baldwin apple grown in almost every State of the Union; and upon the cards accompanying the specimens he says distinctly, this apple is valuable grown in certain localities and worthless grown in others; and persons who will consult him can at once ascertain where it is desirable and where not desirable to plant that variety. I am sure if this collection is purchased by the Government and he is allowed to continue his plan, very valuable information can be disseminated throughout the whole country in that way.

Mr. GRIMES. Just so long as the General Government here at Washington undertakes to control these things the State governments will not do it; but the moment we decline to do it here then your agricultural colleges in the various States will undertake to do precisely this character of services, and you will get such information as will be of value to the people of the respective States. Now, sir, when you say that Mr. Glover or Isaac Newton can tell me which is the best variety of fruit of the thousand kinds that are raised, to be raised on a river bottom land adjacent to a large body of water; what is the best on a small piece of bottom land where there is not much water; what is best on a piece of yellow clay land; what is best on a piece of black prairie land, and what is best on a piece of thin sandy land, it is more than anybody here can do. We must do it in the States. So long as the Federal Government arrogates to itself the power of concentrating all information here, so long the States will neglect to obtain that kind of information.

The amendment was rejected—ayes twelve, noes not counted.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer an amendment as an additional section, in which there is no appropriation:

And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the act to carry into effect the treaties between the United States and China, Japan, Siam, Persia, and other countries, giving certain judicial powers to ministers and consuls, or other functionaries of the United States in those countries, and for other purposes, approved June 22, 1860, shall extend to Egypt; and the consul general at Alexandria shall have the power provided by section twenty-two of such act for the consul general or consul residing at the capital of a country where there is no minister.

I move this amendment under the direction of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I moved it last year and the Senate adopted it on the appropriation bill which, it will be remembered, failed. The object is simply to extend certain powers to our consul general at Alexandria which he has not now under the existing law.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are plenty of bills to which this would be more germane.

Mr. SUMNER. I beg the Senator's pardon. There is no other bill to come forward where it can be offered.

Mr. SHERMAN. Why has it not been presented before?

Mr. SUMNER. My attention was called to it only yesterday.

Mr. SHERMAN. When you kept quiet so long, there would seem to be no haste for putting it here. It is legislative in its character, purely.

Mr. SUMNER. What is the character of half the propositions that have been voted on this bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. They were appropriations. This is the first one of this kind.

Mr. SUMNER. This was voted last year on the same appropriation bill. It is according to the usage of the Senate to make the appropriation bill the occasion of passing propositions like this which have been forgotten. My attention was called to this during this session for the first time yesterday.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY. I have waited a long time for an opportunity to offer one of the most meritorious amendments that has been presented to this bill. It is to insert on page 10, after line two hundred and eighteen:

For light-house at Grand Portage, mouth of Pigeon river, Minnesota, $6,000; subject to the approval of the Light-House Board as to the necessity of this light.

I will say in explanation of this amendment that the appropriation has been twice made; once in 1856 for a light at Grand Marie, on the north shore, and it was subsequently transferred in 1859 to Grand Portage, which is at the boundary line between the British possessions and the United States. The money, however, was not used, but lapsed into the Treasury, and it is necessary now, in order to go on with that light, that the appropriation be made.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is there any recommendation from the Light-House Board?

Mr. RAMSEY. I have a letter from the chief of the Light-House Board which I can send to the desk; and I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to move the appropriation.

Mr. GRIMES. Before acting on that, as it is almost half past four o'clock, I desire now to submit a motion, that at half past four o'clock the Senate take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will take this opportunity to present some House bills which are on the table, for the purpose of reference.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 32) to extend the jurisdiction of commissioners of the circuit courts of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (H. R. No. 92) to ascertain the practicability of having a steamboat navigation from the Chesapeake bay, at the mouth of the Susquehanna river, to Lake Ontario—to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (H. R. No. 468) to provide for the suits, judgments, and business of the United States provisional court for the State of Louisiana—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (H. R. No. 584) for the relief of William Joshua—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (H. R. No. 604) to define and punish certain crimes therein named—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (H. R. No. 667) to prevent officers of the Navy from being deprived of their regular promotion on account of wounds received in battle, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (H. R. No. 802) to incorporate the National Farm School—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

A bill (H. R. No. 803) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the trustees of the Female Orphan Asylum, in Georgetown, and the Washington City Orphan Asylum, in the District of Columbia," passed May 24, 1828—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

A bill (H. R. No. 804) to regulate the appointment of clerks and commissioners of bail in the circuit or district courts of the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (H. R. No. 805) to restore the possession of lands confiscated by the authorities of the States lately in rebellion—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

COURTS IN CALIFORNIA AND LOUISIANA.

The Senate, on motion of Mr. CONNESS, proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 179) in relation to the district courts of the United States in the State of California, disagreed to by the Senate and insisted upon by the House.

Mr. CONNESS. I move that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the House amendment. The Senator from New York has withdrawn his objection, and admits it to be right. The amendment has been read.

The motion was agreed to.

DONOHUE, RYAN, AND SECOR.

Mr. JOHNSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 141) for the relief of Donohue, Ryan & Secor, builders of the iron-clad monitor Camanche; which was read twice by its title and ordered to lie on the table.

DEFICIENCIES IN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FESSENDEN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 791) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. No. 89) to amend the acts relating to officers employed in the examination of imported merchandise in the district of New York, which were disagreed to by the Senate, had agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had appointed Mr. THOMAS D. ELIOT of Massachusetts, Mr. CHARLES O'NEILL of Pennsylvania, and Mr. WILLIAM RADFORD of New York, managers at the same on its part.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the resolution of the House fixing the day for the adjournment of the present session of Congress.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion of Mr. GRIMES, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. At half past four o'clock the doors were reopened, and the Senate took a recess till half past seven o'clock, p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

PETITIONS.

Mr. WILSON presented a petition of citizens of New Jersey, praying for an equalization of bounties of the soldiers who served in the late war; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom were referred three memorials of Norman Wiard, in relation to contracts for furnishing vessels to the War and Navy Departments, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

WEIGHING OF EXPORTS.

Mr. MORGAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 480) to provide for and to regulate the weighing of exports, and for other purposes, to report it back without amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that upon all weighable articles hereafter exported, upon which a drawback or return duty is allowed, and upon all weighable goods withdrawn from bonded warehouses for export, there shall be levied and collected, by the collectors of the several ports, three cents per hundred pounds, to be determined by the returns of the weighers.

The bill further proposes to abolish the office of measurer at the port of New York, and provides that the duties heretofore performed by them shall be performed by the weighers. The weighers at the port of New York are to receive an annual salary of $2,500; but the increase of compensation over and above their present salary is not to exceed, in any fiscal year, the amount of fees earned by them.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANN E. SMOOT.

Mr. GRIMES. There is a little bill that was in charge of the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. CRAGIN,] who is sick, which will take no time, and he wanted me to call it up. It is House bill No. 422. I move to proceed to its consideration.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 422) for the relief of Mrs. Ann E. Smoot, widow of Captain Joseph Smoot. It proposes to extend the benefit of the sixth section of an act to amend an act to promote the efficiency of the Navy, approved January 16, 1859, to Mrs. Ann E. Smoot, widow of the late Captain Joseph Smoot, of the United States Navy, and to direct the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to pay her the amount her husband was receiving at the time he was placed on the reserved list on furlough pay, to the date of his death, deducting therefrom whatever amount he may have received in the mean time on account of pay.

The Committee on Naval Affairs reported an amendment to the bill in lines nine and ten to strike out the words "amount her said husband was receiving" and in lieu thereof to insert "waiting orders pay of his rank which her said husband would be entitled to receive."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the bill read a third time. The bill was read the third time and passed.

CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution for the relief of the builders of the Camanche. It will only occupy a moment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object. I insist on the regular order of business.

Mr. McDUGALL. There will be no debate upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill (H. R. No. 737) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes, is now before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and the pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. RAMSEY,] on page 10, after line two hundred and eighteen, to insert:

For a light-house at Grand Portage, mouth of Pigeon river, Minnesota, $6,000, subject to the approval of the Light-House Board as to the necessity of this light.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope that will be passed over until the Senator comes in. He was giving some information about it at the time of the recess.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over for the present.

Mr. MORRILL. I call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the sixteenth page of this bill, where is this item, "to grade East Capitol street $3,000." I move to strike it out. There is some misapprehension about that, I presume. The Committee on the District of Columbia reported a bill to appropriate some $15,000 for grading East Capitol street and fencing Lincoln square at the end of that street, and it has been passed. This item ought to be stricken out, undoubtedly.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend on page 15 by striking out lines three hundred and forty-nine and three hundred and fifty, namely, "for taking care of the Circle on Pennsylvania avenue, $1,000." Unless the Finance Committee have information which I have not, I cannot understand how that can be possible.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is in the regular estimates.

Mr. MORRILL. But I cannot conceive that it is very regular. How taking care of the Circle, which is a little plat of ground entirely fenced in, should involve a cost of $1,000, seems inconceivable. I move to strike it out.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I call the attention of the committee, on the same page, to another item, in line three hundred and fifty three, "for removal of nuisances, $10,000." I move to strike out those words.

Mr. SHERMAN. This was the estimate of the Commissioner of Public Buildings and was allowed by the House of Representatives; was in the bill when it came from the House. I am not sufficiently informed about it. I think the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds ought to understand about this.

Mr. MORRILL. It is clear enough that somebody ought to be responsible for these improvements, and I am led to criticise this from the fact that I know there are a good many items in this bill which ought to have been submitted either to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds or to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move further to amend by striking out, on the same page, lines three hundred and forty-one, three hundred and forty-two, and three hundred and forty-three of section one, namely, "for repairs of Pennsylvania avenue, and sprinkling the same, and keeping it clean and free from dirt, $10,000." We make appropriations for that avenue, but they are always submitted either to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds or to the Committee on the District of Columbia. There are some specific appropriations here for Pennsylvania avenue, but it will be seen by reference to this item that it is impossible to tell what it is for. "For repairs of Pennsylvania avenue."

Mr. SHERMAN. The repairs of the pavement.

Mr. MORRILL. "And sprinkling the same, and keeping it clean and free from dirt, $10,000." We have been in the habit of cleaning it, but it is inconceivable that it is the duty of the Government to sprinkle this street when we have been to an expense of over three million dollars in bringing water here, and there is an abundant supply of water, and we have put down main pipes everywhere, and it is only to be let on. Now, that the Government should be called on to incur the expense of sprinkling the avenue it seems to me is absurd. I move to strike it out.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it ought not to be stricken out.

Mr. MORRILL. On the same page, lines three hundred and forty-four, three hundred and forty-five, and three hundred and forty-six, I find this item:

For public reservation No. 2 and Lafayette square, in addition to the sale of hay which may be raised on the former, $3,000.

If the Finance Committee have any information in relation to that, I will not move to strike it out; but it seems to me the very statement of the thing shows the absurdity of it. "For public reservation No. 2."

Mr. SHERMAN. It is the reservation east of the President's grounds.

Mr. MORRILL. "And Lafayette square, in addition to the sale of hay." It will be seen that there is an item of $500 for repairing the iron gates on Lafayette square, and then still further a specific appropriation, and then comes in this general appropriation, for the square, accompanied with the public reservation. It is impossible for anybody to know when we have got done appropriating, if appropriations can be made in this way, and these parties are not required to come before the proper committees and state specifically the necessity for these appropriations. I make these propositions as a whole for the purpose of calling the attention of the Committee on Finance to them, so that we may have some understanding how these appropriations are to be made and on what basis.

Mr. SHERMAN. The chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds is not here. He would probably be able to give the Senate more information on these matters.

Mr. MORRILL. These propositions should properly go before the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think not. There has been always since I have been a member of Congress an appropriation varying from $3,000 and upward for the repair of Pennsylvania avenue.

Mr. MORRILL. Sometimes much larger.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then there is here an appropriation for public reservation No. 2 and Lafayette square. Lafayette square is in front of the President's House, and reservation No. 2 is immediately east of it, and I have no doubt a considerable sum of money is required to keep it in repair. We generally have allowed these appropriations for public buildings and grounds to rest with the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and usually have added to them rather than taken away from them. I will state that all these appropriations are in the regular estimates submitted to us by the Commissioner of Public Buildings, and he is continually asking for an increase.

Mr. GRIMES. I have no doubt that is so; but I do not understand that the Commissioner of Public Buildings is the organ of the Senate, through whom the Committee on Finance should be informed.

Mr. SHERMAN. But these items come to us in the regular estimates from the Treasury Department. They are here in the printed estimates.

Mr. GRIMES. Then it results in this simply, that the Commissioner of Public Buildings, who makes this estimate, is the author of our legislation, inasmuch as whatever he does the Committee of Ways and Means and the Committee on Finance incorporate into their financial bills and pass through Congress.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Is it not so as to all our appropriations?

Mr. GRIMES. There are some things that are right patent before our eyes. I live near this Circle that we struck out an appropriation for. They asked an appropriation of $1,000 "to take care of the Circle." That is the language.

Mr. CONNESS. To take care it does not run off. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRIMES. I would undertake to take care of it certainly as well as it has ever been taken care of, for $100 a year. It is the Circle where the Washington monument is. In regard to Pennsylvania avenue, Congress has never appropriated any money to clean or to sprinkle it except just before the inauguration of the Washington statue, on the 22d of February, 1869, when we appropriated $200, and I guess that is the only time it ever was cleaned. We are gradually working in here, through the phraseology adopted in this clause, a recognition of the obligation of the Government to clean and to sprinkle it, when we have furnished an aqueduct that gives a bountiful supply of water, at an expense of $3,000,000. All they have to do is to put on the hose and sprinkle it themselves; and yet they have got an appropriation of $10,000 here to sprinkle it.

Mr. MORRILL. I will vary my motion so as to strike out after the word "avenue" the words "and sprinkling the same, and keeping it clean and free from dirt."

Mr. SHERMAN. Before these amendments are made I want to show the Senate that the Committee on Finance have pursued the ordinary course in regard to these appropriations. We first found them submitted to us in the Secretary of the Treasury's annual estimates. They are sent from the Commissioner of Public Buildings through the Interior Department to the Secretary of the Treasury, and are submitted to us in the annual printed estimates. All these estimates are indorsed by the Treasury Department and submitted to us in printed form. These estimates referred to by the Senator from Maine now were submitted to us in that way. As a matter of course they have the sanction of the executive department of the Government before they come to us. It is right and proper that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds or the Committee on the District of Columbia should exercise a supervision over these matters; but as a matter of course the Committee on Finance cannot go behind these appropriations made according to estimates unless some complaint is made. I am very glad to see the Senator take supervision of the subject.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be reported as modified.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was on page 15, in lines three hundred and forty-one and forty-two, to strike out the words "and sprinkling the same, and keep it clean and free from dirt;" so as to read, "for repairs of Pennsylvania avenue, $10,000."

Mr. MORRILL. Now, I move to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$5,000."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suggest that it is not probable that keeping it clean and sprinkling it would amount to as much as one half the appropriation. There is a good deal to be done on Pennsylvania avenue this year. I do not feel disposed to dispute the authority of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia if he has investigated it.

Mr. MORRILL. There are other specific appropriations made for it.

Mr. SHERMAN. What are they?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not find anywhere the estimate for taking care of the Circle.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move further to amend on the same page by striking out lines three hundred and thirty-nine and three hundred and forty, as follows:

For casual repairs of the Potomac, navy yard, and upper bridges, $6,000.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Why strike out that?

Mr. MORRILL. I will explain. This session, and within a month, on the application of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, the Committee on the District of Columbia reported a resolution appropriating $10,000 or $15,000, I am not sure which, but I think the latter sum, for repairs of the Potomac bridge, which was said to be ample. Now this provision here is "for casual repairs of the Potomac, navy-yard, and upper bridges." We have got an appropriation for the Potomac bridge on the eleventh page of this bill, where you appropriate, "to enable the Commissioner of Public Buildings to put in thorough repair the bridge across the Potomac at Little Falls, in accordance with the estimate of the engineer, $2,410." There is a specific appropriation for one of the bridges covered by the item I move to strike out, so that we have already had specific appropriations said to be ample for two of the three bridges here provided for.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This is a bill making appropriations for sundry civil expenses for the coming year. The specific appropriations alluded to are made for repairs actually necessary at the present time to put the bridges in order. There are four bridges that are provided for. We provided the sum estimated from actual examination to make the repairs absolutely necessary now. Then it is customary to provide a fund for the year for casual expenses that may occur in the way of injury to these bridges; there are four of them. If the sum appropriated is too large to provide for contingencies we can cut it down.

Mr. MORRILL. You have appropriated in this bill $5,000 for the navy-yard bridge besides this.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is absolutely necessary now.

Mr. MORRILL. What occurred to me was that if this is for the contingent expenses of the coming year, this Congress will be in session again, and ample time will be given.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But we are now making appropriations for the year 1867. We do not wait until the next session of Congress to do that. We bring in a deficiency bill if it becomes necessary, but we do not provide in advance for deficiency bills.

Mr. MORRILL. My ground is that all the specific appropriations necessary for these bridges have been made. The Commissioner has not been before either of the committees of the Senate that have the supervision of these matters. There is opportunity for him to do so at the next session, and before these repairs will be needed; and I submit to the Senate that it should be his duty to go before these committees and submit the estimates.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. On page 14, lines three hundred and nineteen, three hundred and twenty, and three hundred and twenty-one, I move to strike out "for the necessary expenses to be incurred in consequence of opening Sixth street west across the Mall, and in making fences, $2,000." That street is not open.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suspect it has been opened.

Mr. MORRILL. No, sir; it has been authorized, but not opened.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Authorized by whom?

Mr. MORRILL. Authorized by Congress two years ago. The street has been authorized to be opened. It is to be opened by the city. There are no expenses to be incurred by us until the street is made. I move to strike out the appropriation.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the city open it, who is to fence the public grounds?

Mr. MORRILL. We.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This is to meet, not the expense of opening, but the expense that is to follow the opening. We have authorized the opening of the street through the public grounds. If the city authorities open it, as I suppose they intend to do, we have got to meet certain expenses and provide for them in advance. This is an appropriation of $2,000 for that purpose. Why should that be struck out?

Mr. MORRILL. It should not, provided the city open the street, but the city are under no obligation to do it. They have been authorized to do it for two years, and have not taken the first step yet.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suppose this is put in because they have expressed their determination to open it. What steps they have taken in the matter I do not know.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no disposition to urge it.

Mr. BROWN. The money cannot be expended until the street is opened.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Certainly not.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was opposed to this item originally on the ground that we ought not to open Sixth street; but on looking at the law I found that its opening had already been provided for.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I agree to that; but we cannot help ourselves.

Mr. GRIMES. The law that authorized the street to be opened provided that it should not be opened until it was done with the assent of the Surgeon General of the United States Army, who was occupying a portion of the square through which the street would run, with the Armory hospital. I have looked at that street recently, and I do not see that those hospitals have been removed or that the buildings will be interfered with. I apprehend there is not much likelihood of their being removed before we assemble again in December at any rate. If the Committee on Finance are disposed to keep the clause in upon the supposition—for I understand they do not know anything about it—that the city may open the street, I am content. I desire to say, however, that the city did not seek to have the street opened; the law that was passed authorizing it to be opened was in the interest of a railroad company who desired to establish a street railroad down there. I was opposed to opening it; but Congress decided differently.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have no sort of objection to the clause being struck out personally, but I gave what I supposed to be the reason for the appropriation.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not think it is needed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is for the Senate to do what it pleases.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I call the attention of the committee to this item commencing at line three hundred, on page 18:

For purchase of trees and tree-boxes, to replace, when necessary, such as have been planted by the United States, to whitewash tree-boxes and fences, and to repair pavements in front of the public grounds, $3,000.

I have noticed for several years since I have been here that that is the usual appropriation. What is peculiar in it will be seen. In the first place, it cannot be supposed that $3,000 would be necessary every year as an appropriation for planting trees. We do not plant, probably, three thousand trees here each year on the public reservations.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is for several other things.

Mr. MORRILL. That is what I object to.

For purchase of trees and tree-boxes, to replace, when necessary, such as have been planted by the United States, to whitewash tree-boxes and fences, and to repair pavements in front of the public grounds, $3,000.

It is impossible to tell what is for pavements, what is for tree-boxes, and what is for whitewashing; and then in another part of this bill you appropriate $1,500 for whitewashing fences. I make no motion, of course; I am not certain that it is not proper; I know it has been the usual appropriation; but I call attention to it on the ground that I think the Commissioner of Public Buildings ought to send to some proper committee his estimates, and they should not come in in this way.

Now, I offer this amendment, to come in on page 18, after line four hundred and twenty-five:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the persons employed by the Committees on the District of Columbia of the two Houses of Congress, under the provisions of the joint resolution approved June 18, 1864, entitled "A resolution to provide for the revision of the laws of the District of Columbia," the compensation provided in said resolution, $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for that purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I offer another amendment to go in connection with that:

For the payment in part for the purchase of sites and the erection of school-houses in the county of Washington, in the District of Columbia, payable to the board of commissioners of primary schools of said county, the sum of $10,000.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have an explanation of that.

Mr. MORRILL. It will be seen by the amendment that it applies entirely to the country quarter of the District; and I will say, for the information of the Senate, what I think will astonish them, that in all that region of country which embraces the entire District outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown there never had been until within three years a school-house of any description, and there never had been a school maintained in that entire section of the District. In 1864 the people of that section of the District were authorized to establish and maintain primary schools, taxing themselves for the support and maintenance of the schools. They have built seven school-houses, and are erecting seven more, at a cost of $2,000 each. They have established seven schools for white children and five for colored children. The country quarter of this District has never had the benefit, I believe, of a single dollar's appropriation for any public object whatever.

As we had authorized these people to levy this tax on themselves, and they had gone forward in this spirit of enterprise and established these schools throughout the country quarter of the entire District, and incurred the large expense of some twenty-five or twenty-eight thousand dollars for these school-houses, which is to be assessed upon their polls and estate, it seemed to me that the Senate would, on these facts being called to its attention, be willing to aid them thus far, particularly as this District is entirely under the supervision and control of the Congress of the United States; and considering, moreover, that during the war there has been thrown into this District a floating population who are upon the hands of these people, more or less. I hope there will not be any opposition to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I offer this amendment to come in on page 20, after line four hundred and sixty:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to grant the superintendent of the Government Hospital for the Insane a leave of absence for six months to enable him to visit institutions for the insane in America and Europe, the salary of said superintendent to be continued in the mean time.

Mr. SHERMAN. Why is that?

Mr. MORRILL. The Secretary of the Interior addressed a note to the committee on the subject, saying that this officer had been a very faithful officer; his duties during the war had been particularly onerous; his health had been a good deal impaired; and he thought it but just to a faithful Government officer to let him go abroad at his own expense, his salary to be continued in the mean time, for a period not longer than six months. As another reason why the Government should be thus indulgent, this vacation will allow the superintendent to visit different institutions in other countries as well as in our own, and thus he will be better enabled to discharge the duties of his office on his return. The Secretary assures us in his letter that the institution will suffer no detriment in the hands of the assistant superintendent in the absence of the superintendent.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is just as well that this matter should be definitely understood. Dr.

Nichols, the superintendent, is a very valuable officer; none more so in his line. I give him credit for discharging his duties well and faithfully and most devotedly. I have no doubt he is perfectly competent to the management of the institution. He erected it, and has managed it with ability. But this is nothing more nor less than a proposition to give a public officer an opportunity to travel in Europe or elsewhere for six months at the expense of the Government, rendering no service; and we must have somebody in his place while he is gone. If Congress thinks it worth while to establish a precedent of that kind—we are establishing new precedents of all kinds nowadays—with reference to public officers, it should be properly understood.

If Dr. Nichols, the superintendent, was out of health, if he was a sick man, I should not hesitate. When I was in authority in a different place I took the responsibility of giving leave of absence for six months to one of the officers of my Department for the purpose of allowing him to go to Europe and see if he could reestablish his health. I allude to Professor Bache. Unfortunately he did not reestablish his health, and I am afraid we shall have his services but a very short time longer. In a similar case I would do the same again. I suppose the Secretary of the Interior has the same authority in this case, if he deems it proper to give leave of absence to the superintendent of the asylum, if the circumstances of the case are such as require it. I think the responsibility should be upon the head of the Department. He can exercise the power if he sees fit, he being responsible for the exercise of it. I see no reason why he should not take the responsibility that I took and that the head of a Department ought to be willing to take under proper circumstances. I think, therefore, this amendment is unnecessary. I believe it is unwise for Congress to begin to legislate in this direction with regard to public officers.

Mr. MORRILL. The view the committee took of it was that it was simply a proposition to allow a leave of absence. To be sure his salary is not suspended; but in the mean time I think it not unreasonable to suppose that the officer will be qualifying himself for a more satisfactory discharge of his duties on his return; so that the Government will lose nothing by the permission.

Mr. HENDRICKS. We need not give permission. Cannot the Secretary do it?

Mr. MORRILL. He thought not.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORRILL. I have one more amendment to offer, to come in on page 18, after line four hundred and twenty-nine:

For support of the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Association, $10,000.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have some explanation of that.

Mr. MORRILL. This is one of the class of charitable institutions of a private character to which I invited the attention of the Senate when they were about to make an appropriation to one of the class; and I have no hesitation in saying, from the examination the committee gave it, that it is as meritorious as any of its class; and in some sense it has a much higher merit than any of the class which have been presented to the Committee on the District of Columbia. It has a board of very high professional skill, and it deals with a class of cases which are in themselves a specialty, and which involve the very highest skill of the profession. Its title in the amendment sufficiently discloses the character of the institution. If any institution in the District of Columbia of a private character is entitled to consideration, either by its object or by the skill and care with which the institution is conducted and the high reputation and character of the persons under whose charge it is, this is the one above all the others that I have become acquainted with in the city of Washington. The appropriation is only $10,000.

Mr. FESSENDEN. My friend, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I believe, has succeeded in knocking off some four or five thousand dollars for sprinkling Pennsylvania avenue, &c., and I do not know how many $20,000 he has put on by way of showing how much more economical the Committee on the District of Columbia is than the Committee on Finance!

Mr. MORRILL. The balance is more than $10,000 in my favor. [Laughter.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. I offer an amendment to insert after the word "dollars," at the end of the sentence in line five hundred and twenty-three, page 22, making an appropriation for the erection of a fire-proof brick building for the Treasury Department, the following:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized to remove and sell at auction or otherwise, any portion of the presses, machinery, and apparatus employed in the Treasury building, which, from the diminution of the volume of business or otherwise, he may from time to time find to be no longer required.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADE. I renew the amendment on the bill that I offered some time ago, and withdrew for reasons which I need not mention now. It is to insert as additional sections the following:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That from and after the 4th day of March, 1865, the following salaries be paid to the different officers, clerks, messengers, and others receiving an annual salary or compensation in the service of the Senate, namely: Secretary of the Senate, $3,000; officer charged with disbursements of the Senate, $4,800; chief clerk, $3,200; principal legislative clerk, $3,000; principal executive clerk, $3,000; nine clerks in office of the Secretary of the Senate, $2,500; keeper of the stationery, $2,500; one temporary clerk, $1,800; messenger in stationery-room, $1,500; messenger in Secretary's office, $1,500; page in stationery-room, $1,000; page in Secretary's office, $1,000; Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper, $3,600; assistant doorkeeper, $2,160; clerk to Sergeant-at-Arms, $1,800; Postmaster to the Senate, $2,160; assistant postmaster, $1,740; two messengers in charge of mails, $1,440 each; two mail carriers, $1,200 each; superintendent of document-room, $2,100; two assistants in document-room, $1,500 each; superintendent of folding-room, $2,160; three acting assistant doorkeepers, $1,740 each; seventeen messengers, at $1,500 each; two messengers in lieu of superintendent and assistant superintendent of furnaces, who have been acting as messengers, $1,500 each; and nine laborers, at $2.50 per day each.

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the sum of money required by the provisions of the foregoing section be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the chief engineer of the heating and ventilating apparatus shall be paid $1,750; two assistant engineers, $1,500 each; captain of the Capital police, $2,175; lieutenant of the Capital police, $1,875; twenty-nine Capital policemen, $1,630 each; page to the Vice President, the same compensation as is paid to the other permanent pages of the Senate; one special policeman in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, $1,000; three laborers in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, $2.50 per day each; clerk of printing records of the Senate, $2,500; the public gardener, with the force employed under him, an additional increase of twenty-five per cent. to the compensation now received by them.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should like to know how much in the aggregate that will increase the appropriations.

Mr. WADE. I am not able to say what the aggregate of the proposed increase is. I do not know how much it will amount to. I have never summed it up. This proposition adds to all these employes about twenty-five per cent. on their present salaries, the object being, according to the instructions of the committee at the time they prepared it, to equalize the salaries of the Senate employes with those of the House. What we have added will vary but little from twenty-five per cent. on their present salaries, except perhaps in the case of the Sergeant-at-Arms, to whom we give a greater increase than that.

Now, Mr. President, if we go by the principle we have already laid down in this bill, if we increase our own salaries over sixty per cent., I think these employes might well be increased to the amount of twenty-five per cent. I cannot imagine what argument Senators will make, after voting to increase their own salaries to the amount of about sixty per cent. against increasing the salaries of the employes at least twenty-five per cent. I do not think there is anything extravagant in this proposition for the equalization of these salaries. The House came to a conclusion on the subject as to what they supposed their employes ought to have, and I believe they passed a resolution giving their employes the salaries which this amendment proposes to give the corresponding officers of the Senate. It is said, however, that what they undertook to do they were not authorized to do, and that it may be stricken out; but that will make no difference finally, if Congress should come to the conclusion that the increase was not unreasonable and that it was judicious to distribute it among their employes. I suppose if it was illegal when they fixed it, if it was so adjudged by us, we could make it legal, and it would not alter the proportion, and would not change the propriety of this bill.

I will say, however, that the special committee that was raised with directions to equalize the salaries of the Senate employes with those of the House, equalized upon the hypothesis that what the House had done was or would be made legal, and that it would stand as the judgment of the House that their salaries ought to be enhanced to that amount. It was upon that ground that we acted, without exercising any particular judgment as to what might be deemed right. In fact, there is no criterion by which you can measure the compensation of these employes. You will have to measure some by what they have heretofore received, with the additional expenses that everybody is put to at present; and it will be a matter of judgment in every one who is called upon to pass on such a question. I know of no exact criterion or any particular rule by which we can regulate the question. It seems to me, however, that the arrangement here is a judicious one. It does not alter materially the relation of the compensation of the employes except in the case of the Sergeant-at-Arms, who I know has received a very slender compensation for the services he has rendered. He has performed the duties that are performed by some three or four officers of the other House, and I believe their combined compensation would be something like eight thousand dollars per annum. I need not speak of his merits. Every gentleman knows with what faithfulness he has attended to his duties here; that he has always been at his place; that all the machinery under him has gone on, so far as I am able to judge, like perfect clock-work.

Mr. SUMNER. Who is that?

Mr. WADE. I am speaking of the Sergeant-at-Arms; and I will speak of some other gentlemen here, not particularly under him, that we have to deal with daily, who, I think, are entitled to our commendation for their constant, faithful attendance to their duties. I know of no reason why, if salaries are to be enhanced, there is anything unreasonable in the proposed salary of the Sergeant-at-Arms. His compensation by this proposition is made equal with that of the Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper of the House, $8,600 per annum. That is not a very extravagant salary, as things go here in Washington now. His entire time must be taken up with his duties here. He has but very little time to go anywhere else. During the vacation he is employed in making his purchases for the accommodation of the Senate Chamber and the other rooms in this wing, taking care of them, and superintending this great building. I believe he is occupied all the time; and I do not think the salary that we now propose to give him is an extravagant one.

I do not wish to go into particulars, for I could throw no additional light upon this subject if I were to do so. As I said before, I know of no particular criterion of compensation that you can fix upon that everybody can affirm is right or wrong. This is an increase to all these employes, and I believe they will be satisfied with it, of about twenty-five per cent. Although I have generally been opposed to increasing the compensation of employes, I see that there are very strong reasons why it should be done now. I do not think the expenses of living here were ever so high as they are at the present time. I know that these employes are not making a great deal of money by the compensation we give them. I think they are entitled to this increase. I do not think it will put them in a better position now than they were at the old prices that existed here some years ago. I believe that the compensation they received before the war, though much less in amount nominally, was much more valuable than this compensation will be if we increase it according to the proposition contained in this amendment.

Mr. SUMNER. The proposition of the Senator from Ohio is in many respects very complete, and yet, for a proposition which seems so complete, it is singularly defective. There is one class of the servants of the Senate that I find are absolutely ignored.

Mr. WADE. Who are they?

Mr. SUMNER. The clerks of committees.

Mr. WADE. We did not attempt to regulate the compensation of clerks of committees because there were resolutions pending on that subject, and because, also, the compensation of the clerks of committees of the Senate and the compensation of clerks of committees of the House was just the same; and therefore they are not mentioned here. There was a proposition then pending proposing to employ them during the year and give them a salary instead of a per diem. That class of employes we have left out, subject, however, to any regulations the Senate may think proper to make in regard to them.

Mr. SUMNER. What the Senator says explains his leaving this class out, but I cannot say that it justifies it. We understand now why he has left them out, but I must confess that I do not appreciate his reasons. Now, I find in the first section of this amendment a provision for "nine clerks in office of the Secretary of the Senate, $2,500 each." Mark that, if you please—" $2,500 each." I have no criticism to make upon it; I only wish to call attention to it. Then comes next "keeper of the stationery, $2,500." Then, "one temporary clerk, $1,800." Then next, "messenger in stationery room, $1,500." I merely call attention to these cases. The special committee have undertaken to provide for these cases; and I think we may well ask why they stopped there. Are the clerks of committees less important than all of those nine clerks in the office of the Secretary of the Senate who are to receive $2,500 each; less important than the keeper of the stationery, who is to receive $2,500; or than the temporary clerk mentioned at $1,800? I do not think so. I think that my colleague, who is chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, has a clerk who certainly deserves as much as any of the gentlemen who are protected by this bill. There is in the service of the committee with which I am connected a scholar, a thoroughly educated young man, who has come here to Washington from a distance expressly to discharge these duties, who deserves as much as any of the gentlemen to whom I have referred, and who are already protected by this bill.

I cannot enter into the discrimination which the Senator makes. I do not appreciate it. I believe if we are to protect the nine clerks in the office of the Secretary of the Senate and the others mentioned in this bill, we ought to complete our work by taking care of the clerks of committees. Now, with regard to those, there may be a difference. There are some, perhaps, who have very little to do. There are others who are constantly employed. I think they are employed fully as much as those that are already protected by this bill. Therefore, with a view to carry out what seems to me to be something omitted in this bill, and which I think my excellent friend would have introduced had it occurred to him, I propose to amend the amendment on page 2, line fourteen, by inserting after the word "each:"

Clerks of standing committees of the Senate, $1,850 per annum; and it shall hereafter be part of the duty of said clerks to direct and send off all documents published for distribution by order of the Senate.

Mr. WADE. The Senator speaks of my discriminating between these classes of employes. He did not understand the explanation I gave before. Our special committee did not take into consideration, as I told him, the compensation of these peculiar clerks, because we were directed to equalize the compensation of the employes of the Senate with that of the House employes; and we found that the compensation of these clerks was exactly the same in both bodies. We did not undertake to do anything with them, because our simple duty was to equalize the salaries. I told you the other day how we equalized them; that this was an increase of about twenty-five per cent.; but the increase to our clerks in some cases was more than that, because the House raised the salaries of their clerks twenty-five per cent., and many of their salaries were higher than those of our clerks previous to that, and we had to make the increase in some cases a little more than twenty-five per cent. in order to make them equal with the corresponding officers of the House; but we did not attempt to discriminate against this class of employes. I have only to say that there were propositions then pending before the body on the subject of these particular clerks.

I am not going to resist this amendment to the amendment. Let it be submitted to the judgment of the Senate to say whether it is reasonable or unreasonable. I know that many of these clerks of committees are gentlemen of acquirements, of talent, able to command large wages for their services anywhere. I know that while they are employed a considerable portion of the year here, as long as they are engaged in this business they cannot very well engage in anything else for the residue of the year. About all the compensation they can obtain is while they are employed here; and perhaps it would not be unreasonable to give them salaries that are suitable for that purpose, inasmuch as if their employment is not constant they can make little in that part of the year that they are not employed here.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think the honorable Senator from Massachusetts could hardly have understood the force of his own provision. In the first place, it is not true, as a general rule, that these gentlemen come here because their services are so absolutely necessary. As to the general run of these clerks you can get any number of them. A great many of them come here because it is very pleasant to spend the winter here during the session of Congress, and be paid for their services at the same time. The rule of their compensation has been fixed and acted upon for some years. Formerly, it used to be four dollars a day, during the session of Congress; but subsequently it was increased to six dollars.

With regard to three of the clerks of committees, the Senate came to the conclusion, after a full examination—for it was all revised by a committee of which I was a member some years ago—that they ought to be made permanent. With regard to the Committee on Finance, particularly, and nobody seems to dispute the necessity of it, it requires practice, experience, and a knowledge that cannot be obtained in one session, and it was necessary that the clerk should be in some degree permanent because of the services he is required to render. It is so in a very great measure with regard to the clerk of the Committee on Claims. That committee has a vast deal of business before it. The clerk is required to draw a great many reports, and he has to attend to a great many papers that occupy him ordinarily through the recess. I know with regard to one former clerk of that committee that he took pains, not being a lawyer by profession, to go and study law for a period of time in order to fit himself for the place; and he became a very valuable and able and competent clerk. It was necessary, I suppose every member of the Committee on Claims will bear me witness in saying—I was formerly a member of that committee myself—that the clerk of that committee should be permanent on account of the business done by it. With regard to the clerk of the Printing Committee, that is an office established by law. The chairman of the Committee on Printing can explain better than I can the duties that the clerk of his committee has to perform. He is employed necessarily pretty much the year round.

Mr. ANTHONY. His duties as clerk of the Committee on Printing are the smallest part of the duties that he has to perform. He has to prepare indexes and other things, and is compelled to remain here in the vacation.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This whole subject was very thoroughly discussed some years ago, and it was decided by the Senate that the business that those three clerks performed was such that it was absolutely necessary that they should be made permanent clerks at fixed salaries, and that the same reason did not apply to any other clerkship of a committee of the Senate. The duties of the clerks of committees are not so difficult to learn but what any young man of intelligence can perform them without any very great deal of scholarship.

It may be that the honorable Senator from Massachusetts has for clerk of the Committee on Foreign Relations an accomplished gentleman. We cannot afford to pay for the performance of those duties any more to a man because he is an accomplished gentleman and scholar than we can to anybody else who is competent to perform the duties. We cannot make that distinction. We do not pay for scholarship or accomplishments in a clerk; and the duties, as everybody knows, of the Committee on Foreign Relations are not so extensive that the clerk should be, necessarily, a permanent officer. A clerk for that committee can easily be found from one session of Congress to another; and so with regard to the other committees generally. Hence I have deemed it unwise to attempt to extend these salaries, because when you once attempt it, there is no knowing where you will end.

Now, my honorable friend proposes to make all the committee clerks permanent and give them a salary of $1,850. Take the clerk of the Committee on Agriculture; I do not suppose that he knows that he has anything to do from the beginning to the end of the year. Take the clerk to the Committee on Manufactures, which, I suppose, never meets at all. Take the clerk of the Committee on Revolutionary Claims. I have not heard of a bill being before that committee this session. There may have been one.

Mr. RAMSEY. We have considered a great many matters and reported upon them adversely, and thus saved large sums to the Treasury. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESSENDEN. Exactly; some few old claims reported upon adversely. The idea is ridiculous to establish permanent committee clerkships at $1,850, when they are mere sinecures now, except to the extent that the clerks do the necessary work of dispatching documents for the chairmen of the committees and, perhaps, others. That is substantially all the duty that a great many of them have to perform. The pay now is ample, and you can get any number of men that are perfectly competent to discharge the duties for the present pay.

Now, sir, from the way gentlemen seem to be going on with regard to salaries at the present time, I think it would be much more simple to try another plan; and that is, to decide (for that seems to be the principle) that if there is any surplus left in the Treasury, after paying the expenses absolutely necessary for carrying on the Government, it shall be divided up among the members of Congress and the clerks at the Capitol, clerks of committees, &c. That would be a much more simple way of disposing of it, and there would be just about as much principle in it as there is in the manner in which we seem to be going on in voting the public money. Sir, I cannot prevent it; I can only enter my protest against it and vote against it.

I have no doubt—I do not want to be unreasonable about it—that some of these salaries ought to be raised. I have no doubt, as I said the other day, that the salaries of some officers of the Senate ought to be increased. I think the simplest and best way is to have a system, fix it from beginning to end, and let it rest there. I never will consent, so far as I am individually concerned, to the style of managing these matters adopted by the House—that is, in the face of the law of the land to vote a percentage and then try to legalize it by putting the amount on an appropriation bill, and telling us, "Take that or not take the bill." I do not like that mode of legislation. I think, therefore, these things ought to be directed in the mode that my honorable friend from Ohio suggests—I do not say I agree with the bill, but in the mode he suggests—and by having a proper provision made. I understand the Committee on Contingent Expenses have with great care prepared a bill, which they think to be just and right, to be moved upon this. Perhaps that would be the best way of settling it. If that is the case, we can see what the whole is.

As to the idea of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, of putting up all the clerks of committees who do not remain here except during the session of Congress, a great many of whom have nothing in the world, or very little to do, except to wait upon the chairmen, the more just way, really, as the matter has gone, would be to say that every member of the Senate should have a clerk, to be paid out of the public Treasury, to dispatch his documents, &c. That would equalize it much better than it is equalized now.

Now, sir, if we are going to do this, let us do it with some understanding and with a due and proper discrimination; understand what duties are to be performed, and pay a reasonable sum according to the performance of those duties and the nature of them. My honorable friend from Massachusetts could not certainly have understood exactly what he was about in making so sweeping a provision as he has made in this case. I cannot agree with him that the quality of the man ought to make any difference in the amount of salary. We cannot afford to legislate in that way. Otherwise, my honorable friend would have a salary of $100,000, while I should only have $5,000. [Laughter.] The Government cannot afford to make those discriminations; and I should not like it either. [Laughter.]

Mr. SUMNER. I can assure the Senator from Maine that the Senator from Massachusetts was not quite as ignorant of what he undertook to speak about as the Senator imagines. I have in my hand the bill which is under consideration, and I find in that that the keeper of the stationery is to have $2,500. Then I find that the assistant doorkeeper is to have $2,160, and that the clerk to the Sergeant-at-Arms is to have $1,800. I find these provisions in this bill, and I say this is a bill which is to equalize the salaries of public servants here connected with the Senate. Does it equalize them when it undertakes to give these salaries and leave the clerks of committees with their present salaries? I say that it does not. I say that if you undertake to pay the keeper of the stationery $2,500, you cannot make a mistake if you give to any clerk of a committee of this body what I have proposed, $1,850.

The Senator from Maine says that many of these committees have very little to do; but it is perfectly well understood that the clerk of the committee represents to a certain extent, the labor of the chairman. He aids the chairman in his work; he is his private secretary; and I remember perfectly well when the system of clerks of committees was first established in this Chamber. When I first came here, I think there were only one or two committees that had clerks. Afterward the system was greatly extended, one by one, and it was always with the understanding that the clerk was needed by the chairman of the committee in the discharge of his public duties, in the copying of papers, in drawing bills and resolutions, and in aiding him in reports. He might not have work, perhaps, to do in the committee-room; but he was to accompany the chairman to his own home, and to be there his private secretary. That was the understanding when this system was inaugurated some twelve or fourteen years ago. If any one chooses to refer to the Globe, he will find those reasons assigned for its introduction. I remember them perfectly well, as they were expressed on this floor.

Now, sir, the system has gone on. Our committees are provided with clerks. They had not them at first. When I came into this Chamber there were only one or two that had clerks. Now all the committees have clerks; and the question is, whether we are going to degrade those servants of this Chamber below the keeper of the stationery, below the clerk of your Sergeant-at-Arms. I do not see how you can do it. I think, if you insist upon that degradation, you cannot pretend that your bill equalizes the compensation of the employés of the Senate.

I do not know that the clerks of committees may not, as the phrase is, be graded. There may be certain committees that may be justified in having a clerk who shall receive a higher compensation than another. I am not able to enter into that discrimination. In the motion that I have made, I have attributed to them all an equality. I went upon this idea, that if they were not all engaged to the same extent in committee services, they would be engaged equally in the service of the chairman of the committee, whom they would be aiding in the discharge of his public duties. It is on that account that I have made this motion. I make it in good faith, believing that if you are going to remodel these salaries and compensation, you ought not to neglect this other class. I believe that this other class is as deserving as the classes that are already protected by this bill.

Mr. YATES. Some of them are men of families.

Mr. SUMNER. Some of them, I am reminded by my friend, the Senator from Illinois, have families. That is not the case with all of them. I do not go into that. It is enough, however, that they are appointed as clerks of certain specified committees, and as such, it seems to me that they are entitled to an adequate compensation according to the scale adopted for other officers of the Senate. That is my argument, sir. I do not originate this proposition. I should not have thought of originating the proposition. I should have allowed the clerks to continue on their present pay; but you are now undertaking to remodel the compensation of all the employés of this Chamber, and as you are undertaking to do that, I insist that you shall not neglect a class that ought to be as well paid as any other.

I think the Senator from Maine rather disparages what is required of a clerk of a committee. He thinks that any one may come on, almost by the accident of a journey, and find a place here; that he may drift here as by high tide, and find himself in a committee-room and discharging those duties. That may be so; but I think that the duties of a clerk of a committee are in themselves important; and especially if he becomes attached to the chairman of the committee in that other capacity to which I have referred as his assistant and secretary, it is almost impossible to measure their importance, because he naturally enters into the labors of the Senator with whom he is associated; and, as I have already stated, when this system was originally commenced it was with a view to aid the chairmen by supplying to each a secretary.

Mr. HENDERSON. This whole matter was referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses, and we took the trouble to go to the Clerk of the House of Representatives and to the Secretary of the Senate and get the amount of compensation that is allowed by law to each employé, with the extra compensation allowed in the House of Representatives, and we have examined the whole contingent expense account of the Senate, and we have prepared a bill which we believe to be important. It has been reported, and is Senate bill No. 443. I hope the Senate will vote down the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts, so that we can offer that bill as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, or, rather, as a substitute for it. I intended to do so, but the Senator from Massachusetts got the floor ahead of me. That bill, I think, covers the whole question; and if any measure is to be adopted on this subject, my impression is that it is the best measure that can be adopted. It is the unanimous opinion of the Committee on Contingent Expenses that something of this sort ought to be done at once.

Mr. JOHNSON. Perhaps he will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. If the Senator from Massachusetts will withdraw his amendment for the time being, and allow me to offer this, he can renew his amendment afterwards. This bill covers the question of the clerks of all the standing committees.

Mr. SUMNER. I have looked over the proposition of the Senator, and I certainly do not think it practicable.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope, then, that the Senate will vote down the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask for the reading of the amendment to the amendment.

The Secretary again read it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The latter part of that amendment I like. As to the first part, I do not know whether the salary proposed would be too high or not. It has come to be the fact that the clerks of committees are clerks simply to the chairmen. Since the war every Senator has so much private matter to attend to here that it is almost impossible for him to get along unless he can hire a clerk. Now, if the practice or the law can be so changed that the clerks of the committees will be clerks for all the gentlemen of the committee, we shall get along very well; and that part of the proposition I like. I believe in view of the whole matter that I shall vote for it, because I think it introduces one desirable reform.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I desire simply to suggest that under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, the compensation of all the clerks of the committees of the Senate each alternate year, that is the year of the short session, will be over eighteen dollars per day. An amendment that leads to a result of that sort, I suppose, is scarcely to be indorsed by a majority of this body.

I will repeat what has been already stated by the Senator from Missouri, that the Committee on Contingent Expenses have reported a bill covering all the officers and employes of the Senate, and they have also drafted in blank a section which can be filled up by the House of Representatives, if that House choose, in connection with our proposition, and bearing throughout a somewhat similar character. We have also attempted to introduce some reforms and improvements in our present system of outlay as it obtains in the respective Houses of Congress.

For the present, on the motion made by the Senator from Massachusetts, I suppose the Senate will have no difficulty as to what decision is to be come to.

There is great inequality between the different committees as to the necessity for clerks, and a great inequality as to the amount of labor to be performed by clerks of committees. We have thought it most convenient and most proper to provide additional compensation to the clerks of committees by extending their time of service, paying them for one month after the expiration of our regular session. This will enable them to perform such duties as have been suggested by the Senator from Indiana, in sending off documents, to conclude and close up the business of their committee-rooms, and to get the matter which goes over in a state of order and preparation for the next session. However, I shall not discuss that point, as the amendment is not yet before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment moved by the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to offer Senate bill No. 443, with some few changes, which Senators can discover as the bill is being read, as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

The Secretary read the amendment to the amendment, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the first section of the amendment of Mr. WADE, and to insert:

That the officers and employes of the Senate, together with their compensation and pay for services shall be as follows:

A Secretary of the Senate, who shall be charged with the disbursement of the contingent fund of the Senate, $4,080 per annum; one chief clerk, $3,000; one principal clerk, $2,500; one principal executive clerk, $2,500; eight clerks $2,200 each; one purchasing agent of the Senate, $3,000; and one clerk at $1,800; and one messenger, at $1,200, for service under the purchasing agent, and to be appointed by him; two laborers, to be employed by the Secretary in his office, $2 50 per diem; one Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper, $3,000; one assistant doorkeeper, $2,200; one Postmaster, $2,200; one assistant postmaster and mail carrier, $1,750; two mail boys, $1,200 each; two messengers in charge of mails, $1,400 each; one superintendent of document-room, $1,400 each; one superintendent of folding-room, $1,800; one assistant superintendent of folding-room, $1,400; one chief engineer, for heating and ventilating apparatus, $1,700; three assistant engineers, $1,400 each per annum; six firemen and laborers at $2 50 per diem; ten laborers at $2 50 per diem; three acting assistant doorkeepers, $1,600 each; seventeen messengers, $1,400 each; one secretary to the Vice President, $1,750; one clerk of Committee on Finance, $1,850; one clerk of Committee on Claims, $1,850 per annum; two temporary clerks for the Secretary of the Senate, $150 per month each—clerks of the standing committees of the Senate not provided for, $6 per day each, during the sessions of the Senate, and for one month thereafter.

SEC. 1. And be it further enacted, That the purchasing agent of the Senate shall be elected as the Secretary of the Senate is now elected, but on the nomination of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses thereof. Such purchasing agent shall, within ten days after his election, take an oath that he will truly and faithfully discharge the duties of his office to the best of his knowledge and abilities, and shall also take the oath of loyalty required by law of Government officers, and within the time aforesaid he shall be required to execute a bond payable to the United States, with two or more securities, each possessing property valued in amount not less than the penalty of the bond, and to be approved by the Secretary of the Senate; such bond to be in the penal sum of $20,000, and conditioned that said agent will from year to year contract for all necessary printing, and cause to be purchased and procured, on the most reasonable terms he can obtain, for the use of the Senate, all stationery, furniture, wood, coal, ice, and other articles now authorized by law, and the orders of the Senate, or which may be hereafter so authorized, and that he will cause such articles to be delivered only on the written requisition of the proper officer or person authorized by law or the resolutions of the Senate to receive them. Said bond shall be filed with the Secretary of the Senate before said agent shall enter on the discharge of his duties.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said agent shall have the same power to advertise proposals for printing and for supplying necessary articles as the Secretary of the Senate now has by law, but all bids received by him, and all contracts made thereon, or which may be based on private purchase, shall be laid before the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses. Said agent shall also contract for the carrying of mails, documents, or other printed matter, and for all other carrying or transportation needed by the Senate, and no payment shall be made by the disbursing officers of the Senate on account of purchases or contracts of said agent until authorized by the committee controlling its contingent expenses.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the agent aforesaid shall make and keep in his office a complete record of all contracts made by him and of all articles purchased, from whom purchased, the price paid therefor, and also of the articles delivered to officers and members of the Senate, showing the quantity and value of articles delivered on the requisition of each; and at the beginning of each session of Congress he shall lay before the Senate a report, showing a detailed statement from his books of all the purchases and appropriations of property made by him. Said report shall show all printing contracted for, all stationery obtained, and the persons to whom delivered, the quantity of fuel purchased and used, all furniture purchased and for what purposes obtained, all expenditures for repairs and preservation of furniture, and all expenditures authorized for horses and hacks used in the service of the Senate, and all other items not herein specified; said statement to give the names of persons connected with each item of purchase and expenditure. Said agent shall, in each report, make an estimate of expenditures for the succeeding year, and shall recommend such measures for economy in the expenses of the Senate as he may deem proper.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I suggest whether it is worth while to read the next section, as it is merely an enumeration of the officers of the House, with no salaries fixed.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have no objection to dispensing with the reading of that section, but the following sections ought to be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the fifth section of the amendment to the amendment will be omitted.

The Secretary continued the reading of the amendment to the amendment, as follows:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the following shall be the officers in charge of the Library of Congress, and the compensation of each, to wit:

One Librarian, $2,500; three assistant librarians, $2,100 each; one assistant librarian, $1,800; one assistant librarian, authorized by act approved April 5, 1866, to provide for the transfer of the Smithsonian library, $1,200; one assistant librarian authorized by same act, $1,000; three messengers, in lieu of laborers now authorized, $900 per annum each.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That there shall be one superintendent of the botanical garden, with an annual salary of $1,400; four assistants to superintendent, with a salary of $900 per annum each; six laborers in the botanical garden, at two dollars per diem; public gardener, $1,400 per annum.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That no officer, clerk, agent, or other employe named in the foregoing sections of this act, and no officer or employe in any branch of the public service, whose salary, pay, or emolument may have been fixed by law or regulation, shall receive any extra allowance, pay, or compensation for the disbursement of public money, or for the performance of any other service whatever, unless such extra allowance, compensation, or pay be authorized by law. No allowance or compensation shall be made to any such clerk, agent, or employe for the discharge of duties which belong to any other clerk, agent, or employe in the same or any other department. And it shall not be lawful for either House of Congress to increase the salary, pay, or compensation of any clerk, officer, agent, or other person in its service or employment, or to authorize from any fund whatever, or in any manner, the payment of any such increase, or of any additional sum for extra services, or for services rendered outside of the prescribed duties of such persons; and the proper accounting officers of the Treasury and the disbursing officers of the Government shall in no case audit, pay, or allow any claim or demand presented for any such unauthorized increase of compensation or extra pay, nor unless an express appropriation therefor shall be first made by law.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the chairman of the Committee on Contingent Expenses will accept an amendment—I suppose his amendment cannot be amended but with his consent—

Mr. TRUMBULL. I understand this to be a substitute, which is amendable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The substitute is in the nature of an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. But may not the substitute be amended before it is adopted, or the original proposition either?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be in order first to amend the portion proposed to be stricken out, if that is the question of the Senator.

Mr. TRUMBULL. But can you not amend the substitute offered by the Senator from Missouri?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that that is an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then I will ask the Senator from Missouri whether he will accept a suggestion that I wish to make to him. In looking over this proposition as a whole, looking at the harmony of the system, it seems to me that the compensation provided for the assistant sergeant-at-arms and doorkeeper does not correspond with his position. I think it should be $2,500.

Mr. JOHNSON. What does he get now?

Mr. HENDERSON. Twenty-two hundred dollars by our bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri to make it $2,500. I think that will make the gradation correspond with the others.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand the other members of the committee are willing to consent to that. We thought that Mr. Bassett's position and his services demanded that compensation, and at one time agreed upon that sum, but reduced it to $2,200 because we were unwilling to make an increase in the case of a very meritorious officer, as we did not know how soon we might have one that was not quite so meritorious.

Mr. JOHNSON. You can reduce it again.

Mr. HENDERSON. But as Senators say, we can reduce it when the man does not suit well, I will accept that suggestion and change the amendment in line twenty of page 2 by striking out "two" where it last occurs and inserting "five;" so that it will read, "one assistant doorkeeper, $2,500."

Mr. BROWN. Do I understand that the substitute offered by colleague is now open to amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON. No; you may make a suggestion and he may adopt it.

Mr. BROWN. I might as well state now, then, what I propose to offer as an amendment. I like the character of his bill in some respects, and particularly those sections which set out the manner in which purchases shall be made for the use of the Senate, in which books shall be kept, and in which issues shall be made upon requisition. I think that is all very proper and very well set forth; but I think there is one defect in the bill; certainly it seems a defect to me; and that is, in creating another officer called the purchasing agent of the Senate. I see no reason for creating that office. The great object that we have in view is to separate the purchasing from the paying, and that can be done just as well without creating another officer called the purchasing agent as it can by that process, and the accounts can check each other just as perfectly without the addition of this office. Now, sir, I shall propose to strike out so much of section one as reads, "one purchasing agent of the Senate, $3,500."

Mr. HENDERSON. Three thousand dollars.

Mr. BROWN. It is $3,500 in the copy I have; and in the second section I shall move to strike out all after the word "that," in the first line, down to and including the word "will," in the fifteenth line, and to insert "the Sergeant-at-Arms shall be the purchasing agent of the Senate, and as such shall;" so that the section will read:

That the Sergeant-at-Arms shall be the purchasing agent of the Senate, and as such shall from year to year contract for all necessary printing, &c.

Putting him under all the regulations of this bill in regard to the contracts which he shall make, and devolving that duty upon him specifically. I think that will make an improvement to the bill. I think it will save just that much in useless expense, and, besides, afford all the check that is necessary between the two accounting officers of the Senate.

Mr. HENDERSON. If my colleague will examine this bill carefully, he will find that so far as the expenses are concerned, we have curtailed expenses.

Mr. BROWN. Well, I would curtail them still more.

Mr. HENDERSON. He will find that really we have fewer officers under this proposition than there were before. We have stricken off the stationery clerk. If he were left in, he would have to be paid according to the system adopted here for paying clerks, $2,200. We have stricken off the superintendent of the furnaces $1,700, and an assistant at $1,200, and two drivers of Senate carriages at $1,440 for both as now fixed, making $6,540 per annum. We appoint a purchasing agent at $3,000; a clerk at $1,800, and a messenger at $1,200, which makes just $6,000; saving $540 a year over the present system as it now stands. In addition to that, I may say that we get rid of several other messengers, pages, &c., making an actual saving of three or four thousand dollars more.

One word in regard to the bill that is now pending. The Senator from Ohio, I suppose with a view of having the Sergeant-at-Arms do this business of purchasing, proposes that there shall be a clerk to the Sergeant-at-Arms, which is a new office, and he fixes the salary at $1,800.

He proposes also to retain the stationery clerk at $2,500, and to give to the Secretary of the Senate an additional clerk. There are now but eight clerks in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, and he proposes nine, which is $2,500 more; making altogether an increase of $6,800; and the Senator's bill will cost the Government $800 more than the bill we now propose to substitute for it.

One word in regard to another point: it is a delicate question, and I dislike very much to refer to it. It is this—we might as well be plain about the matter—the Secretary of the Senate claims that, under the laws as they now stand, he is entitled to do this work, and you will recollect that under the act of 1842 the Secretary is required every year to report to the Senate a statement of the expenses from the contingent fund. The honorable Senator from Iowa, [Mr. GRIMES,] the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BOOKALEW,] and myself are upon the Committee on Contingent Expenses. We called upon the Secretary of the Senate to furnish us a report of the expenditures from the contingent fund, which has not been made since 1864. The law requires that these reports shall be made at the end of every year. We know but little about the contingent expenses of the Senate. If the Senate are to require us to pass upon the bills, I desire, as my colleague says, to have sections specifically setting forth the duty of every officer of the Senate. The Committee on Contingent Expenses are not particular who shall do this work, whether the Secretary of the Senate or Mr. Brown, the Sergeant-at-Arms, or a new officer to be appointed for the purpose. We do not care who does it, provided the officer gives a bond in a large sum. I have no doubt that either of these officers can do that; but we want him to give a bond, and we want him to keep books so that we can understand the exact condition of the contingent expense account every month, or every two weeks if we desire, during the year.

That is the wish of the committee; and I will state that it is useless to have a Committee on Contingent Expenses unless we can have these facts before us. Who is at fault about this thing, I do not know. The Secretary says he knows he is required by law to make this report; but he says, "I cannot make this report because I do not make the purchases; I do not know what Mr. Brown pays for articles; I cannot tell all the contracts that he makes; I know nothing with regard to them."

Mr. GRIMES. The Secretary is authorized by law to make them.

Mr. HENDERSON. The committee have had that matter under investigation. We examined it, and examined it with a great deal of care. Mr. Brown claims that he has the right to make purchases, and the Secretary of the Senate claims that he has the right to make purchases, and the Secretary insists that he must do it in order to comply with the law; and there is very considerable justice in his claim. We referred the matter to the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania to investigate it, and he reports to the committee that under the law as it now stands the Secretary of the Senate is entitled to make the purchases. That is the condition of affairs; and the majority of the committee have come to the conclusion that under the law the Secretary is entitled to make them. As I stated before, we do not care who makes these purchases. All that we desire is, that the officer making the purchases shall keep a set of books and that we shall know exactly what he pays for every article that he purchases, and that he shall be enabled at any and all times to tell us to whom he has distributed them. But, sir, I believe I cannot proceed. I shall not be able to speak in this storm.

[At this moment an unusually violent storm of hail and rain was raging. The pattering of the hail upon the glass roof rendered it impossible to proceed with business for some time.]

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I believe the question now is whether we shall change the roof or not. [Laughter.]

Mr. WADE. The amendment which I have offered contains no more offices, or but one more, I believe, than we have had in the Senate heretofore. It gives the Sergeant-at-Arms a clerk, and the reason was that as he performs his duties now, he is performing the duties of several officers. I have not examined the law to see whose duty it is to make these purchases; but I conclude, from the very fact that there is a dispute on that subject, and that it is claimed by both these officers, that the law is not very definite about it, and it is not very certain, perhaps, whose duty it is. There has never been a complete code on the subject of the duties of these employes that I know of; they are not very well specified; but their duties are well enough known by prescription and the manner in which they have been done heretofore. I do not think there is any great difficulty on that subject. I believe the Sergeant-at-Arms has made most of the purchases, and I am not aware that there has ever been any complaint about the manner in which the purchases have been made.

As to the keeping of the stationery-room, whose clerk this bill endeavors to dispense with, I believe I can truly say that the same force is now provided in that room that always has been there. I know that the Senator from Maine [Mr. FESSENDEN] the other day said he believed that under Mr. Clubb it was very different from what it is now; but I have made some inquiries upon that subject, and I find that it is the same now as it was then. Senators all know the officer who presides over that department, Mr. Jones. I believe there is no Senator who will say he is not an exceedingly faithful and obliging man. He attends to all the disbursements of money for Senators, I believe, and no man here has any fault to find in him. He is faithful, prompt, eager, ready always to perform his duties; and his duties take him out of that room a very considerable part of the time; but then he has clerks there and Mr. Clubb had clerks there, to deliver to Senators whatever they called for. If there is any fault in that regard, it is not so much in the manner that your clerks perform their duty, as in the fact that there is no limitation upon the powers of members of the Senate to get whatever they please there.

The Committee on Contingent Expenses say they want a rigid account kept, and that for everything you get you must give an order, or sign a receipt every time you go there. I believe this bill provides for that. It is a very good way for doing business, and if you want to be exact about it, it is all well enough; but the Senate of the United States did not believe originally that it was necessary for them to come down to these minute particulars that shopkeepers resort to in carrying on their business. It has been the habit of the Senate from the earliest times not to do that; and it was the habit of the House not to do it for a great many years; but they have finally changed their entire system of stationery, and instead of being furnished in kind, each member is furnished with a certain sum of money to select his own purchases with. I am not prepared to say that we ought not to adopt the same system; but until we do that it is idle to talk of reducing things to anything like an absolute certainty of account-keeping in that room. I do not believe that any Senator has ever abused the privilege he had of going there and getting whatever he wished to have. I never heard of any such thing, nor do I believe it. It is not insinuated on the other side: but it is said there is not that rigid account-keeping that would be desirable by those who administer upon those accounts. I have no doubt that is so; and the reason is because we have not got ourselves down to that rigid way of keeping these accounts.

I do not think we are prepared now to make a code on this subject at this late period of the session. I do not think this bill is prepared for it. It seems to me to be a very cumbersome thing. Here is a clerk for purchases to be established; and who is he? Why, sir, the committee will not trust even the Senate to appoint him. They preserve in their own hands the nomination of the man that is to be the clerk of purchases, and he is to be a new officer with an additional salary. If you are to change this system, I do not think this is necessary. I think that either the Secretary of the Senate or the Sergeant-at-Arms may do as they have done heretofore, make all these purchases and make them well, and be charged with the duty of doing it; and if gentlemen want them to give bond for the rigorous accountability of what they do, I have no objections to that. But I do not think we have time to go into all these things now. I think we ought to begin it earlier in the session and reduce it to a perfect system. I think it would be well to do so; but I do not think this bill does that any more than the amendment I have offered. It certainly does devolve the duty of making these purchases upon a new officer instead of the old officers who have been heretofore making them. If it is necessary, let us charge one of our present officers with this duty and then lay him under such responsibilities as you please; but at this stage of the session I do not think it is necessary to do this. All that is necessary to do now is to take the old employés, who know their places, whom we do not displace, where we leave no gaps, try no experiments, and go on in the way we have been going on heretofore during the session, and at the next session let the Committee on Contingent Expenses get up a perfect code, reduce it to a system, which they certainly have not done now.

The amendment that I have offered follows the old line of business, and barely undertakes to give an additional compensation to the employés as they formerly existed. I think it is the safest way now; and that if we undertake to get up a new system we shall not perfect it so that it will work well, and we shall not be perfectly sure that in skipping over or leaving out some of these officers their duties will be as well performed as they have been. I prefer the amendment that I have offered to this amendment, because I understand what I have done better. They have attempted to reduce it to a system, but it seems to me they have failed to perfect it.

Mr. GRIMES. Very much against my will I have been for the last three or four months a member of the Committee on Contingent Expenses, and I desire to state, in a word or two, why I assented to the introduction of the bill which has been proposed by the Senator from Missouri as a substitute for the proposition of the Senator from Ohio.

In the first place I understand that the office of Sergeant-at-Arms is as chief executive of this body. He is the head of the police of the Senate. His place is there, at the right hand of the President of the Senate, [pointing to the chair of the Sergeant-at-Arms,] and we used to see him there as regularly as we saw the President of the Senate in the Vice President's chair. We were in the habit of seeing him there; and I suppose the reason why we are not now in the habit of seeing him there is because he has encroached, as I undertake to say, upon the jurisdiction of other officers of the Senate, and drawn to himself an authority which was not exercised before he became the Sergeant-at-Arms.

I speak thus plainly because all these officers are my personal and political friends, and it is due to them and to myself that I should state what are my honest convictions upon the subject. I am satisfied from all the investigation that I have been able to make, that up to the last five years the Sergeant-at-Arms did not make purchases. That business was confided to the Secretary of the Senate. During the illness of Mr. Dickens, the former Secretary, the late Vice President gave the Sergeant-at-Arms, as I understand, authority, which he had no right to give, to make purchases; and out of that authority bestowed by Mr. Hamlin has grown the practice of making purchases on the part of the Sergeant-at-Arms. I do not say that there is an express, absolute declaration of statute saying that nobody shall make these purchases except the Secretary of the Senate; but such had been, as I am informed by those who are familiar with the practice, the invariable custom up to within the last four or five years.

But when I became a member of the Committee on Contingent Expenses I found that there were four or five different persons who made purchases, each of whom certified to the bills as being correct, and we were called upon to indorse and order the payment of those bills, certified to by four or five different persons. We found that the same kinds of articles were purchased; as an illustration we found that since the 1st of January there had been purchased by the Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate, and by the Secretary of the Senate, somewhere from seventy to ninety hair-brushes. I only allude to this one article as an evidence of the variety of articles purchased and the method in which they were purchased.

What was the remedy for such a condition of things as this? And mind you, Mr. President, our purchases are not made on such terms as you and I would make if we went to buy for our own individual purposes.

Mr. WILSON. Why not?

Mr. GRIMES. Because everybody who sells to the Government expects to get a larger percentage for whatever he sells to us than when he has a purchaser in a private individual I think that is the reason why.

Mr. WILSON. Cannot our agents buy as cheap as anybody else?

Mr. GRIMES. Well, I do not think they do. That is my opinion. Now, what was the remedy? The Committee on Contingent Expenses believed that it was their duty to furnish some remedy. They believed—and I think I was the first one that proposed it, and I therefore am willing to take all the responsibility in that connection—I believe that it was our interest to do exactly as I would do under similar circumstances. If I was the proprietor of a large institution like this, in which there was an expenditure of $300,000, or $400,000, or $500,000 a year, I should employ some one man to make all the purchases for me—some man in whom I could place implicit confidence, and not allow the purchases to be made by Tom, Dick, and Harry, and half a dozen agents of mine, some with express authority and some with no authority at all. The committee concurred with me in that opinion, and hence it is that we have proposed that there shall be one purchasing agent.

Now, I understand that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Brown] would change this provision which we recommend and allow these purchases to be made by the Sergeant-at-Arms, whose office was created for no such purpose; who has enough to do to look after the police of the Senate; who is required in some instances to leave this body entirely and go away in order to execute the processes of the Senate; sometimes to accompany committees of the body, and therefore cannot attend to business of this kind; and who ought not, under any circumstances, in my opinion, to be the man employed for the discharge of any such duty. His business is, as I say, as the executive officer of this body, and he should be occupying the seat which we have selected for him, and which his predecessors have occupied for the last seventy years.

I have not got the bill before me, and I am not able to go through it and analyze it, as the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Pennsylvania are far better able to do than I am. It will be observed that the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio, for which the proposition of the Senator from Missouri is a substitute, is based upon the House salaries. As an example, he proposes to give the Sergeant-at-Arms $3,600. There is not the slightest analogy between the organizations of the House and the Senate. The Sergeant-at-Arms in the House is the disbursing officer of the House. He keeps the money; he gives bonds; he pays the compensation and mileage of the members of the House; and hence it is that in the House of Representatives a larger compensation has been awarded to the Sergeant-at-Arms than probably would have been awarded to him if he had merely the authority to discharge the same kind of duties that are devolved by law upon the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate.

Mr. WADE. He has three or four clerks to assist him.

Mr. GRIMES. Very well; he is paid that extra compensation, this $600 additional for the responsibility of handling a million dollars of money, for the requirement which is imposed upon him of executing a bond, for the responsibility of having those very clerks, and being responsible to the House of Representatives for their good conduct and behavior.

So in regard to some of the clerks. The principal clerk in the House of Representatives is Mr. Barclay, an old employé, an excellent parliamentarian.

Mr. WADE. He is dead.

Mr. GRIMES. No, sir; he is not dead; I saw him to-night. He is alive and well. He is the man who wrote a book on parliamentary law. He has been employed in the House of Representatives for, I suppose, twenty-five or thirty years. They give him a larger compensation than they assign to any other officer of that description; and why? Because of the personal qualifications of the man. Now, it will be observed that the Senator from Ohio selects out our principal clerk, who is Mr. Smith, and attaches to him the same compensation that is attached to Mr. Barclay in the House. It may be that Mr. Smith is entitled to more than anybody else; but it may not be that he is as well qualified to discharge the duties of a clerk as somebody else is here. It appears, therefore—and I only allude to this to show the way in which the Senator from Ohio has drawn his bill—that in order to make it correspond with the House of Representatives, he takes the same titles and attaches the same salaries to the titles, without having regard to the principle upon which the House bill was drawn; and the House bill is drawn more in relation to the qualifications and characters of the employés of the House than to anything else.

Mr. President, I have no idea that the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is going to be adopted; among others, for the reason that was stated by the Senator from Ohio. The Senate will not be disposed to consider it at this late hour of the session, and there is a disinclination always in bodies of this description to make reforms. In my opinion, this is a very important and salutary reform, and will work vastly to the advantage of your contingent expenses. I believe that if the purchases for this Senate were concentrated in the hands of one man, and that a judicious man, a man who was not extravagant, a man who would manage the affairs of the Senate precisely as he would manage his own, there would be from fifty to seventy thousand dollars saved every two years. That is all I have to say.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Mr. President, I was somewhat surprised at a statement made by the Senator from Missouri in regard to the contingent expenses of the Senate. My attention has not been very specially turned to them; I have not been a member of the Committee on Contingent Expenses, and I am not familiar with the details of these matters; but I was astonished when the Senator from Missouri said, as I understood him, that we had no detailed account of the contingent expenses of the Senate; and I understood him that the Secretary of the Senate could not make a report because he did not purchase everything, that he did not know the cost of the articles that were purchased by the Sergeant-at-Arms, and it was impossible for him to make the report showing the facts. I believe I understood the Senator correctly.

Mr. HENDERSON. I stated that in investigating the law I found that it was the duty of the Secretary of the Senate at the beginning of every session to make a detailed report, the items of which the Senator will find in the statute I have just given him—the act of 1823, and subsequently the act of 1842.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have the statute, but I wish to know as to the statement of fact.

Mr. HENDERSON. I called on the Secretary of the Senate to know why no report had been made since 1864; and he stated to me that it was almost impossible for him to comply with the law. The report that was made in 1864 does not comply with that law by any means. He said that the purchasing had been usurped and taken out of his hands, and that he was unable to make the report as required by the law. The Senator can read the law to the Senate. I intended doing so.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not see any difficulty in making this report. The law of March 1, 1823, provides:

"That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, required to lay before the two Houses, respectively, at the commencement of each session of Congress, a table or statement showing the names and compensation of the clerks employed in their respective offices, and the names and compensation of the messengers of the respective Houses, together with the detailed statement of the items of expenditure of the contingent fund of the respective Houses for the next immediately preceding year; in which statement the disbursements shall be arranged under the following heads, to wit: first, printing; second, stationery, and distinguishing under this head the articles furnished for use of the members from those furnished for the offices of the Secretary and Clerk, and specifying the number of reams of each kind of paper; third, book-binding; fourth, fuel; fifth, newspapers, specifying under this head the amount of orders given at the preceding session, as well as the payments made; sixth, the post offices; seventh, the repairs and preservation of the furniture; eighth, services of messengers and horses; ninth, miscellaneous items not included under the preceding heads. Which statements shall exhibit also the several sums drawn by the said Secretary and Clerk, respectively, from the Treasury, and the balances, if any, remaining in their hands."

The subsequent law of 1846 provided:

"That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Senate, at the commencement of every regular session of Congress, to report to the Senate, and of the Clerk of the House of Representatives to report to the House, and of the head of each Department to report to Congress, a detailed statement of the manner in which the contingent fund for each House, and of their respective Departments, and for the bureaus and offices therein, has been expended, giving the names of every person to whom any portion thereof has been paid; and if for anything furnished, the quantity and price; and if for any services rendered, the nature of such service, and the time employed, and the particular occasion or cause, in brief, that rendered such services necessary."

There is more of the law; I will not read it all. That was the law. Under that law, I have here the printed report of 1864, which the Senator from Missouri says is the last one. It gives all these items. I cannot read it; there are some eighty-three pages of it. I open it on page 43, and I find on this page:

"B. L. Barker, services as clerk to the Committee on Manufactures, from April 14 to May 10, inclusive, twenty-seven days, at six dollars per day, $162."

I find on the same page:

"Two reams extra heavy note and ruled, to order, ten dollars. One ream letter, eight dollars."

Again:

"One pocket-wallet for money messenger, three dollars."

"Attendance as a witness before joint committee on the conduct of the war," &c.

"Hack hire for Committee on Enrolled Bills, nine dollars."

There are a variety of items which are extended, as I have said, through eighty pages. Now, sir, here is a report of everything purchased and what it cost. Here are the hair-brushes and the wisp-brooms. "Three wisp-brooms, sixty cents." All these items are here, and I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Contingent Expenses if every one of these bills, before it is paid, is not approved by the Committee on Contingent Expenses; whether the purchases made by the Sergeant-at-Arms are ever paid for by the disbursing officer until the bills receive the approval of that committee.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does the Senator want an answer now?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I understand that to be the fact, that they are always approved.

Mr. HENDERSON. I can state that accounts are brought before us, as the Senator from Iowa says, perhaps a purchase by Mr. Bassett, perhaps a purchase by Mr. Brown, perhaps a repair of furniture by the carpenter, and perhaps a purchase of furniture by somebody else. We do not know anything about them. We send for the officer; and he tells us that it was needed; and we are bound either to pay it or to reject the claim upon our knowledge of the matter, and it is a past transaction. In fact, accounts have come before us since I have been on the committee—and I have only been upon it for two months—of two or three years' standing, and it is utterly impossible for me to go back now to ascertain whether those accounts were just at that time or not. It resolves itself into this, that I am a mere recording clerk; I amount to nothing; and I think if that system is to be pursued the Senate had better abolish the Committee on Contingent Expenses. My idea is to know something about every transaction.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I merely wanted to know the fact whether the bills are approved by the Committee on Contingent Expenses before they are paid. Now, I understand they are. This is the important matter to be had in view—

Mr. SHERMAN. I served on that committee once, and I want the Senator from Missouri to say whether or not purchases are not always made before the accounts are submitted for approval, and the contract completed and the property delivered.

Mr. GRIMES. Certainly they are.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I understand all accounts pass through the Committee on Contingent Expenses; and the important matter to be observed is, that the same person shall not disburse and purchase. If you want a check, one person must buy and the other must pay the money. It will never do to put into the same hands the money to pay for the articles and the purchase of them; because if you have a dishonest officer—I hope we have no such officers; I am only speaking by way of illustration—he may give more than he ought to give for the article, and may in some way keep part of the money himself; but if he purchases the article and another third party pays for it, it requires collusion between them all; no money can go to the purchasing agent.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is just what we are aiming at now.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I understand, so far as the Sergeant-at-Arms is concerned, that he does not handle a dollar and never has handled a dollar of the public money. I was somewhat astonished, and I confess to a little feeling when the Senator from Iowa rose in his place a few moments ago and made this attack—I undertake to say unwarranted attack—upon the Sergeant-at-Arms. I have known that gentleman for a quarter of a century.

Mr. GRIMES. What attack?

Mr. TRUMBULL. You assaulted him here as not being in his place and not doing his duty.

Mr. GRIMES. I repeat that.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I say he does do his duty. I undertake to assert that he does his duty as faithfully as any officer I ever knew; and I undertake to say here to the Senator from Iowa that the assault was unjustified, uncalled for, and unwarranted by the fact. Sir, who is your Sergeant-at-Arms? I have known him for a quarter of a century; and he is as honest a man as any in this Chamber. He has never handled a dollar of the public money. He has no money to put in his own pocket. The purchases he makes are not paid for by him.

It is said that his duty is to be seated at the right hand of the President of the Senate. I deny it. It is no more his duty to be there than it would be the duty of a general of an army, instead of being in a position where he could take charge of the whole army, to march with a gun upon his shoulder, or than it would be the duty of a contractor with one hundred hands under him to take a shovel and go to shoveling dirt. It is his business, as the executive officer of the Senate, to see that the men employed under him do their duty. How many men has he under him? The Senator from Iowa probably knows; I do not; perhaps forty; and having charge of all your committee-rooms, having charge of all these pages, having charge of all these messengers, seeing that order is preserved throughout the building, seeing that all these persons discharge their duties, seeing that the messages sent out by Senators are attended to, and yet it is his duty to sit there! Sir, it is his duty to be in and out of the Chamber, to be about the building, to be wherever duty calls him; and the idea of his sitting there would, as a necessity, take from him the ability to superintend what was going on.

Sir, I can see through the bill. What favorite officer is it that the Senator from Iowa wants to make a purchasing agent, with a salary of $3,500?

Mr. HENDERSON. Three thousand dollars.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then it has been altered, for the printed bill before me gives him a salary of $3,500.

Mr. GRIMES. Who is it?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to know who it is, with a salary nearly double that of the Sergeant-at-Arms, the officer here who has discharged the duties of three or four men, who has purchased all the articles for your committee-rooms, purchased the articles that are furnished this room, purchased the articles connected with all this wing of the Capitol. He has not paid for them; but he has rendered the bills, which have been certified to by the Committee on Contingent Expenses, and paid by the disbursing officer.

Now, sir, why is such an assault made upon him? Why is he singled out here as not being in his place? Will the Senator from Iowa tell me why he is singled out here? Does not the Senator from Iowa see the Sergeant-at-Arms as often as he sees other officers of the Senate? Why is he held up before the country as neglecting his duties? Sir, I deny it. I say he is as faithful an officer as ever was Sergeant-at-Arms in any legislative body.

In regard to his purchases, I will say this much further of Mr. Brown: he is a gentleman of taste; a gentleman who always purchases a good article; and it is economy to purchase a good article. In furnishing chairs, carpets, and whatever else he is required to furnish, he gets a good article. That is characteristic of him. It is in keeping with the building which we occupy; it is proper; it is economy in the long run. Sir, I cannot sit here, I confess, and see the Senator from Iowa rise in his place and single out the Sergeant-at-Arms as neglecting his duty in this body when such duties have been devolved upon him as he has had to perform, charging him with usurping authority, and admitting, before he sat down, that under the direction of the Vice President the Sergeant-at-Arms had performed these duties. I have not examined the law; but from what the Senator says I understand it is very doubtful as to whose duty it is to make these various purchases; but one thing I know, that propriety requires that the same person who makes the disbursements should not make the purchases.

Now, sir, I think there are some very excellent features in the bill which the Senator from Missouri has reported; but I think there are some features in it that this Senate would never agree to. Let me read a section of this bill that the Senator from Missouri has introduced and which he is indorsing, and see how we shall get along. This purchasing agent, who is to have a salary almost twice as large as you ever gave the Sergeant-at-Arms, who has done all your purchasing and everything else—

Shall also contract for the carrying of mails, documents, or other printed matter, and for all other carrying or transportation needed by the Senate.

He is to let out a contract to bring up a mail to your house; to let out a contract for taking your documents to the post office. No articles are to be delivered except on a written requisition:

The articles to be delivered only on the written requisition of the proper officer or person authorized by law or the resolutions of the Senate to receive them.

Why, sir, if you should happen to want a pen or a sheet of paper, you must make a written requisition before you can get either. This is a very small business, in my judgment. The purchasing agent is to hire your hacks; he is to do all the business; and I believe a penalty is inflicted upon anybody else for doing any of it. You had better make your purchasing agent the Sergeant-at-Arms at once and let him do all the duty. Suppose a committee is ordered to go to the President to inquire whether he has any communication to the Senate; you must go and hunt up the purchasing agent and let him make a contract for a hack. Where would you find him? The Sergeant-at-Arms is forbidden to do it. You had better dispense with the Sergeant-at-Arms at once and call him a purchasing agent and let him do it.

Now, sir, I am for all proper checks and balances. I hope this bill will be so arranged that the same person shall not be purchaser and disbursing agent. Do not let the man who makes the purchases handle any money, but let the money come from some other party; and strike out of this bill all such provisions as this of making a contract for carrying the mails to Senators, and all such provisions as require a written requisition from a Senator. It is very likely that there have been abuses connected with the stationery-room. I have not inquired into it. Whether Senators have abused their privileges or not, I will not undertake to say; I do not know; but let an account be kept of every article that each Senator gets; let him be charged with it; let the account be seen; and if there is a disposition to draw improperly, I would limit the amount as they have done in the House of Representatives, so that no Senator should be permitted to take from the stationery-room more than a certain amount. But, sir, I would not clog it with this sort of a provision requiring a written requisition for every article that he got. I would not put in a provision here that this agent should contract for carrying the mail and for the hiring of a hack to take a committee to the Presidential Mansion.

Mr. HENDERSON. Let me ask the Senator, if he pleases, how the mail is now carried; whether it is not done by contract, and whether the law does not require it to be so done?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I suppose it is done under the direction of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. HENDERSON. How is it done?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I suppose he is paid a certain amount; I do not know how much; but I know he has control of it. I know it is sent around by messengers that are employed by the Sergeant-at-Arms, by one of our officers of whom we have control, and not a purchasing agent who is not under our control at all, a purchasing agent to be appointed by the Committee on Contingent Expenses of the Senate. The Senator from Iowa gets up here and charges usurpation on one of the officers of the Senate who cannot defend himself, and at the same time modestly asks the Senate of the United States to confirm his nomination of a purchasing agent! When did the Contingent Committee of the Senate become the executive of the Senate to nominate to us whom we should confirm? This bill provides that the Senate shall be permitted to elect a purchasing agent, provided they elect one that is nominated by the Senator from Iowa; and he talks about usurpation! Was there ever such a thing as that heard of before? I take it, the Senate is capable of electing its own purchasing agent, if it thinks best to have one. We should listen with very great respect to the gentlemen who have framed this bill, in making that selection, I have no doubt; we shall be very glad to hear from them as to who is the proper person; but the idea of putting it into a law that the Senate of the United States is merely to confirm or not the nominations of this committee is an anomaly in this body.

Sir, if I have been betrayed into making any excited remarks or saying more than I intended, it was because of an unjustifiable assault upon a friend of twenty-five years; and I will not sit still when an attack is made upon a faithful public servant which, in my judgment, is unwarranted and without excuse.

Mr. GRIMES. It is very well, Mr. President, that issues are not to be decided in the Senate of the United States by the positiveness of the man who addresses the body or by the volume of sound which proceeds from his lungs. If it were so I would acknowledge at once that the judgment should go against me in this case.

Sir, whom have I assaulted? When did I assault the Sergeant-at-Arms of this body? What did I say of him? Did I charge him with dishonesty? Is the Senator from Illinois correct in making such an issue or attempting to make such an issue as that with me? Have I charged him with usurpation? I said this: I said that during the sickness of Mr. Dickinson, as I understood, authority was given by the President of the Senate, without having any warrant of law to do it, however, conferring upon the Sergeant-at-Arms the power to make certain purchases, and that he has continued to make purchases since, and drawn to him and enlarged his jurisdiction. That is what I said. I said nothing more than that. I did say that his place was in that chair, at the right hand of the President; and when I gave that utterance I heard responses from all the Senators to the rear of me, the men who have been the longest in this body, both the Senators from Massachusetts, and others, and it has been a universal remark among the older members of this body, that the Sergeant-at-Arms was not performing his full duty in this regard.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have not heard it.

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator has not heard it, perhaps. The Senator was not the man whom they would approach. The Sergeant-at-Arms was brought here as the friend and henchman of the Senator from Illinois, from that State, and Senators did not choose to go to him and lay their charges against the Sergeant-at-Arms, or make any complaints against him to the Senator. But I have heard it. I have heard it on the floor of the Senate, since this discussion began, from both the Senators from Massachusetts. I say, sir, I have made no charges against the Sergeant-at-Arms. I said he was my personal and political friend, but I chose to speak frankly on this subject, and to say that I did not think he was performing his full duty to the Senate. He is the executive arm of this body. He is the chief of our police. His business is here, not down on Pennsylvania avenue or in Wall street making purchases for this body. The Sergeant-at-Arms never attempted to fulfill such duties until within the last few years. The Senator makes a great deal of sport of the bill that has been introduced. My colleagues on the committee will bear me witness that I was opposed to that provision that conferred on the Committee on Contingent Expenses the power to select this officer. They insisted that that power should be conferred upon the Committee on Contingent Expenses, and overruled me, and I consented to the proposition.

But the Senator says that this Contingent Expenses Committee have authority to make bargains by which the mails are to be delivered. Who delivers the mails now? Mr. Brown, the Sergeant-at-Arms; and how much does he get for it? Does the Senator suppose that it would be impossible for the Committee on Contingent Expenses to make arrangements with somebody to deliver the mails to Senators at a less price than Mr. Brown gets for the hire of his horses?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I did not say a word about the Committee on Contingent Expenses making a contract; I spoke of the agent making the contract.

Mr. GRIMES. Very well; the agent making the contract. Could not the agent selected by the Committee on Contingent Expenses make the contract just as readily as Mr. Brown, and upon just as favorable terms? Does the Senator from Illinois know that we have paid to Mr. Brown upward of six thousand dollars per annum for the use of horses, by which our mails are delivered—I have the bills upon my table—and that we pay a portion of the expense of keeping the horses besides?

I beg the Senator from Illinois to remember that this committee have given some slight attention to this subject. They have not any pique against Mr. Brown. They have desired to reconcile the difficulties that are existing between our various servants on this subject, and they thought that the safest and best way was to select a new man and confer upon him the authority to make these purchases. I should not have alluded to Mr. Brown if it had not been for the effort that I knew the Senator from Illinois was making through his friends here to confer upon him the exclusive power to make all the purchases for the Senate, and I did not think that that power should be united with the duties which he is called upon and should properly perform for the Senate. I say that we should have a man perfectly independent of the executive officer of this body; that a new man should be selected.

The Senator says that the Senator from Iowa wants to select some friend. I wish he would name him. I wish the Senator from Iowa had some friend to designate for the place, if such a place is to be created. I can tell the Senator that the name of no friend of mine ever entered into my mind. I am prepared, if this duty is conferred upon me as one of the members of the Contingent Expense Committee, to act perfectly independently, and to accept the man selected and nominated to me by the Senator from Illinois if he will present a man whom I believe to be worthy and capable of discharging the duties. There is no man from my State in this city or about it that I would consent to appoint to that place who I believe would desire to take it, or who would be likely to come; nor is there any man here who has been mentioned to me that I have the slightest desire to fill any such place.

Mr. President, I certainly—and I think I need not say it here—have had no feeling in this matter. I have had no desire to attack Mr. Brown. I have told Mr. Brown himself exactly what I thought about his occupying his place here. I have told him that it was not his business to be running over this city, or to be sitting up in the Sergeant-at-Arms's room. I told him that there were complaints against him because of his not occupying his seat in the Senate; that his predecessor was invariably to be found in it; and the Senator from Illinois knows it. I have been told by men who have been here for thirty and forty years about the Senate that that seat was no more frequently vacant than was the seat of the Presiding Officer of this body. I did desire that we should return to the old tradition on this subject; that the Sergeant-at-Arms should perform the duties that he was originally selected to perform; and I told Mr. Brown so. I have only repeated here in the presence of the Senate what I told to him privately in the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

I have no purpose to accomplish in connection with this subject. It has been an exceedingly disagreeable position for me to occupy on this Committee on Contingent Expenses. I think that my colleagues have found it about equally disagreeable, and I think my predecessor, the Senator from Maine [Mr. Morrill] found it about as disagreeable as we find it. There has been and is now a constant collision on this subject of purchases. We wanted to get rid of it. We did not know any better way to settle it than to appoint an agent to make these purchases. The committee disagreed—and I think I am permitted to say that—as to the manner in which this agent should be selected. I was overruled on that subject. I am prepared to act with the committee in their suggestion if the Senate see fit to adopt it.

Mr. YATES. Mr. President, I care not whether the Secretary of the Senate or the Sergeant-at-Arms makes the purchases. That is entirely immaterial to me. Let it be done as the law provides. Let either of these officers do it. All that I care about is, that in this discussion any question should arise as to the character or the integrity of the officer who has made the purchases; and upon that question I feel it to be my duty to bear my testimony to the high character of the Sergeant-at-Arms. I have known him myself for twenty-five years. A man of more spotless integrity and of a higher sense of honor does not live. He possesses a character for integrity as high as that of the gentleman from Iowa or any other gentleman here.

I simply rose for the purpose of saying that I care not who makes these purchases, but I do not wish it to be inferred from the debate, or from insinuations which have been made, that there can be any question as to the character for integrity of Mr. Brown. While I am up, however, I will say that if we cannot trust the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, if we cannot trust the Secretary of the Senate, those high officers of the body, and have no confidence in their integrity in the management of the affairs of the Senate and in the purchases that are to be made for the Senate, shall we trust a man who is not an officer of the Senate? Shall we go abroad for a purchasing agent? Shall we throw suspicion upon the character of those officers, and shall we intimate or insinuate that they cannot be trusted in the purchase of the articles which are necessary for the use of the Senate? Sir, I consider the establishment of a purchasing agent an imputation in itself, especially when it is the duty of the officer now, whether it be the Secretary of the Senate or the Sergeant-at-Arms, to purchase these articles without additional expense to the Senate.

Mr. GRIMES. Will the Senator permit me to suggest to him that the Sergeant-at-Arms and the Secretary are not the only ones who make purchases? There are three or four more. Everybody makes purchases for us, almost.

Mr. YATES. I understand that. There are certain particular qualifications which the purchaser of these articles should possess. He should be a business man, perhaps; but such a man is always employed by the Secretary of the Senate or by the Sergeant-at-Arms in making these purchases. He is simply a superintendent of this matter. Now, sir, an intimation or an insinuation may do a good deal of harm, as, for instance, that the Sergeant-at-Arms has purchased forty hair-brushes.

Mr. GRIMES. I said there had been purchased by four different parties about ninety. There were four different bills presented to us, running through the same months.

Mr. YATES. About ninety hair-brushes. That may seem very extravagant at first blush; and yet when we consider that every committee-room must be supplied, or ought to be supplied with a hair-brush, that the ante-rooms should be supplied with hair-brushes, that the bath-rooms should be supplied with hair-brushes, the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms, the post office and barber shop, &c., it will be seen that such an intimation may convey to the public mind an idea that there has been gross extravagance and a wasteful expenditure of the money of the people, when the officer has simply been discharging his duty faithfully, and buying no more articles than were necessary to the use of the various departments of the Senate.

For these and many other reasons, sir, I prefer the bill of the Senator from Ohio. I simply rose, however, to say here that the character of George T. Brown is above suspicion; that he is a man who sustains a high character and has a large influence in the State from which he comes; and I felt it my duty to say this much in his vindication, provided these charges are to be considered as assaults upon him.

Mr. SHERMAN. I believe that this amendment is proposed on the miscellaneous appropriation bill, which has been lost sight of to some extent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is one long bill offered as an amendment to the miscellaneous appropriation bill, and then another long bill offered as an amendment to that amendment. Now, sir, it is very important if we intend to pass the miscellaneous appropriation bill that it should be passed to-night. All the numerous amendments that have been acted upon by the Senate for several days past must be acted on in the House to-morrow or the next day. We adjourn on Saturday at noon. It is manifest, therefore, that this discussion ought to come to an end. My opinion is that neither of these bills ought to be attached to the appropriation bill, and that several other amendments put upon it ought to be stricken off in the Senate, so that this bill may be stripped a little and sent to the House of Representatives. I hope that we may now have a vote on this question, and that we may be able to pass the bill to-night. I am told by members of the House that the number of members is decreasing, and there may be a possibility of being without a quorum in the last stages of the session, a contingency that has happened several times. I hope, therefore, we may get through with the bill to-night.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I desire to say, somewhat in the same line of remark with the Senator from Ohio, that if the bill which has been reported by the special committee in regard to the Senate employes is put on this miscellaneous appropriation bill as an amendment, I shall feel it to be my duty as the chairman of the special committee, on the subject of the reorganization of the Interior Department to move the bill reported by that committee as an amendment. It is just as necessary that that should go in as this, indeed more necessary, if this kind of legislation is to be attached to the appropriation bills at the close of the session. I confess, for one, that I am entirely opposed to that mode of proceeding; I do not think it is right. These matters ought to be determined upon bills appropriately considered by themselves.

Mr. HENDERSON. I wish to say for the Committee on Contingent Expenses that we examined this measure with a great deal of care; we have presented it to the Senate; and if it is not adopted here it will not be adopted at all. I have nothing to do with any fight as to the character of Mr. Brown or any other officer. As a member of the Committee on Contingent Expenses I ask the Senate to discharge that committee from any further duty unless you adopt such laws that we can compel the officers to make reports to us so that we can know what we are doing, because I confess to the Senate that I do not know how your contingent fund is expended to-day.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. WADE] proposes an increase in the officers that the Committee on Contingent Expenses is not willing to grant; it is too large. He proposes to grant from fifteen to twenty per cent. more than we allow. His colleague [Mr. SHERMAN] says "Let us get rid of this thing." Does he not know that the House of Representatives have sent here another appropriation bill, which his Committee on Finance have been considering, in which they propose to pay all their clerks and employes twenty per cent. additional; and it will make no difference if that committee reports against it? Do you not know that the House of Representatives have increased the pay of their clerks and have been paying a large increase during the whole session, much beyond what we are paying here? You had the same controversy a few years ago; and in order to prevent the House from doing such things the Finance Committee secured the insertion, a year or two ago, of a clause in one of the appropriation bills, declaring that no amount should be drawn from the contingent fund of the House in order to pay their clerks. Now, what have the House done? They pay their clerks whatever they choose, not from the contingent fund but from the salary fund.

Mr. SHERMAN. They cannot do it.

Mr. HENDERSON. It has been done, and you cannot get the money back.

Mr. SHERMAN. But they now see the difficulty they are in: the accounting officers will not pass the accounts, and they ask us to make an appropriation.

Mr. HENDERSON. That very difficulty came up here once before, and the Senator knows very well, as I do, that the Senate had to yield.

Mr. TRUMBULL. And the Senator from Ohio recommended that we should yield.

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir, never. I would never have yielded on that matter until the Capitol crumbled.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I knew the Senate gave it up; I thought the Senator from Ohio had proposed to do so.

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir!

Mr. HENDERSON. The Capitol will crumble unless you agree to what the House has done, for you cannot get back the money from these men. Look at the compensation allowed to the House clerks. The chief clerk, whose pay by law is $2,160, has been receiving all the session at the rate of $3,000; the Journal clerk, whose legal salary is $2,500, they have been paying $3,200; the reading clerk, whose legal salary is $2,160, they have been paying $2,500; his assistant, who is entitled to $1,800 by law, they have been allowing $2,500; the tally clerk, whose legal allowance is $2,160, they have been paying $2,500; the assistant disbursing clerk, whose legal compensation is $1,800, they allow $2,500; and so on through the list which I have in my hand, certified by the Clerk of the House of Representatives. The Senator from Ohio knows he cannot get back that money paid to messengers and pages and others by the other House. Now, this proposition is not to make the salaries of the officers of our branch of Congress equal to theirs, but to elevate them somewhat, leaving a section for the House employes blank, for the House to fill up.

Mr. WADE. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Missouri, upon what principles does he increase the salaries? What percentage does he add?

Mr. HENDERSON. We did not adopt a percentage.

Mr. WADE. I have not compared the bills, but your compensation is as large as mine.

Mr. HENDERSON. Not by any means.

Mr. WADE. I have not compared them, but I understood it to be so.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have compared them.

Mr. WADE. What principle do you adopt?

Mr. HENDERSON. Here is the chief clerk, Mr. McDonald, whose services I know are worth all that the Senator proposes to give him; he puts it at $3,200; we put it at $3,000. He puts the principal legislative clerk at $3,000; we put it at $2,500. He puts the principal executive clerk at $3,100; we put it at $2,500, which is a difference, of course, of $600. He gives to the Secretary of the Senate nine clerks; we give him eight. He puts their compensation at $2,500; we put it at $2,200. That is the difference, and it runs clear through the bills.

Mr. WADE. That ninth clerk was because there had been a temporary clerk all the time, and we supposed he might as well be made permanent.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am not going to take up the time of the Senate. The House of Representatives have increased the pay of their clerks and we propose to increase ours, not so much as the House, but to give such compensation as we think ought to be paid to our clerks. It is a very reasonable compensation, and I am willing to grant it. Our bill is carefully prepared on that subject, because we had the officers of the two bodies before us, and we have compared the various duties critically and carefully, and if you are going to adopt any bill on the subject of increase, you might as well adopt this.

Now, in regard to the purchasing agent; we have drawn off the clerks and agents enough to make up for the purchasing agent. I have nothing to reflect against Mr. Brown, nothing to reflect against Mr. Forney, nothing to reflect against anybody; but if the Senate want me and the other members of this committee, or any other member of this committee, that may hereafter be appointed to be of any service to them in auditing claims, I beseech of them to do something upon this subject. I believe it is the duty of Mr. Forney now by law to make the purchases; the committee came to that conclusion, and we do not feel like taking it away from him and turning it over to Mr. Brown. I have no feeling against one or in favor of the other. I believe conscientiously the Secretary has the legal authority to do it; upon an examination that is my opinion, and I do not desire to take it away from him and turn it over to Mr. Brown.

Senators ought to be aware that there is a good deal of feeling about this matter. Mr. Forney gives as an excuse for neglecting to make his reports to us that he does not advertise these proposals. The Senator from Illinois I know can make a great deal of fun of a reported bill; he can say that this is parsimonious; but if he knew something about the contingent expenses of the Senate he would feel a little parsimonious, I apprehend. Let him take the last report made in 1864 and glance over it. I do not wish to comment upon it, and I do not intend to do so.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the amount?

Mr. HENDERSON. It is lying here before me; I have not footed up the figures; it would take me too many days to do it. I have not had an opportunity to do it. The honorable Senator from Illinois asks whether the Committee on Contingent Expenses cannot know what is going on. I want to say to the honorable Senator from Illinois that I do not know, I cannot know, and I will tell him why. The law which he just now read requires that in the purchase of stationery, for instance, the Secretary of the Senate shall advertise, and he shall purchase the stationery from the man who makes the lowest bid. Is there any member of the Contingent Expenses Committee that ever saw a bid? I ask the honorable Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] who used to be upon that committee. Did the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. Brown,] who served upon it, ever see one of them? I never saw one of them. I never saw a bid for any article.

Mr. JOHNSON. Are there no bids?

Mr. HENDERSON. We pay for the advertising, but I never saw the bids. I know nothing about them. We pay three or four hundred dollars for advertising every year, and I never saw one of the bids.

Mr. BROWN. I have seen bids.

Mr. HENDERSON. Where are they?

Mr. BROWN. I do not know where they are now.

Mr. HENDERSON. They are not there now. I have never seen one of them. The coal is purchased by Mr. Brown, and I have no doubt honestly purchased; I have never seen anything to the contrary; and he purchases the wood; but I never saw an advertisement for bids for those articles. I have audited the claims for advertising in the newspapers here, but I never saw a bid. Whether the bid accepted was the lowest or the highest bid, I do not know. Now, I beseech the Senate, if they have any use for a Contingent Expense Committee, to modify the law so as to make it the duty of those officers to report to us the amount of their purchases and how they expend the money. I know nothing about it, and no Senator in this body does know now. If you want to give the making of purchases to Mr. Brown, do so; if you want to give it to Mr. Forney, do so; all I ask is that you shall adopt some provisions of law which shall require them to report to the Contingent Expense Committee; so that we shall know what is going on.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think that is proper. There is no objection to that.

Mr. HENDERSON. If the Senator has no objection to that, let us adopt the measure I have offered. So far as the clerks are concerned, it is carefully graded.

Mr. BROWN. Adopt it with that amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have already demonstrated to the Senate that if you make a purchasing agent you diminish instead of increasing expenses. If Mr. Brown makes the purchases, he must have a clerk; if another man makes them, it only amounts to employing a clerk. Mr. Brown cannot make the purchases and make to us the reports we require without additional help, and every Senator knows it.

Mr. HOWE. On the question of cost, as I read the proposition submitted by the Senator from Missouri, it provides for a purchasing agent of the Senate with a salary of $3,000, with a clerk at $1,800, a messenger at $1,200, and a page at $750.

Mr. HENDERSON. Only three officers, the purchasing agent, a clerk, and a messenger; the rest is stricken off. We strike off the stationery clerk. We have stricken off the superintendent of the furnaces, and assistant superintendent, and various other officers. The Senator from Ohio proposes several clerks which we have stricken off. The cost is no more. If the Senate has any confidence in the committee, of course they can take the assurance of that committee that the cost is less. I state it upon my responsibility, I state it from an examination of the facts, that the cost under our bill is less than it is now. We have cut off various supernumerary officers, and we shall get along a great deal better. If you wish to put Mr. Brown under bonds and require of him to make these purchases and reports, if you wish to take it away from the Secretary, to whom it now lawfully belongs, be it so. I do not desire to make that difference between the two officers. I do not desire to reflect upon Mr. Forney. I know he has feeling about it. I do not desire to reflect on Mr. Brown; but we thought to avoid the difficulty by decreasing the expenses of the body and making an officer who would be responsible to this body under his bond.

Mr. BROWN. If my colleague will permit me, I will ask him right there how he makes it out that the striking out of a purchasing agent at $3,500 would not reduce the expenditure under his bill just that much. Suppose you devolve these duties on the Sergeant-at-Arms and strike out this additional pay of $3,500, does it not reduce the expense under your amendment just that much?

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the Senator tell me why this anxiety to have the Sergeant-at-Arms perform this duty when his duties, as the committee supposed, were to serve the processes of the body and to remain in the Senate?

Mr. BROWN. That is another question. We are talking about the question of expense now.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have stated again and again the offices that we have gotten rid of by virtue of this bill.

Mr. HOWE. Now, I wish the Senator to state once more what officers are got rid of who are now employed in making these purchases.

Mr. HENDERSON. We got rid of the stationery clerk, to begin with.

Mr. HOWE. He is not employed in making purchases.

Mr. HENDERSON. The stationery clerk does make purchases of stationery, as I understand, under the direction of the Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. HOWE. Very well. Now, what is the salary of the stationery clerk?

Mr. HENDERSON. The salary now is

$1,750, but of course if we retain him we have got to increase his salary with the rest of them.

Mr. HOWE. You get rid of $1,750.

Mr. HENDERSON. No, $2,200. If you retain this man you must increase his salary nearly in the neighborhood of the purchasing agent.

Mr. HOWE. What else?

Mr. HENDERSON. You get rid of the superintendent of furnaces.

Mr. HOWE. Is he engaged in making these purchases?

Mr. HENDERSON. Certainly not. I am not talking about the expense of the particular matter of purchases; I was speaking of the bill of the Senator from Ohio. He proposes to have an additional clerk to the Sergeant-at-Arms, and I tell the Senator now that if he devolves this matter on the Sergeant-at-Arms he must give him a clerk.

Mr. WADE. No doubt about it. He ought to have one.

Mr. HOWE. Let us treat this matter frankly. We somehow or other have the purchases made with the present force, and we do not employ the superintendent of the furnaces in making them—

Mr. HENDERSON. The committee instructed me to report this bill. They examined this subject carefully and they have reduced the expenses. They believe there ought to be a superintending officer for this business. That is the opinion of a standing committee that you have appointed to investigate this matter. I am not going into details; but if the Senate insist upon it I will do so. I am not going to discuss this subject of contingent expenses; but I say to the Senate that a standing committee of this body have investigated it and they believe that this ought to be done, that it is for the economy of the Senate; they believe that it is proper and necessary in order to bring economy into our expenses. That is what they have instructed me to do. The Senate have it before them and they can do as they please.

Mr. CONNESS. Mr. President—

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish my friend from California would allow me to say one word before he goes on.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator always speaks so well that I shall be glad to hear him.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not desire to speak, but I wish to point the attention of the Senate to the fact that it is now eleven o'clock, and if we expect to get through with the business of the session at the time we have fixed we must finish this bill to-night. At the rate we are going on we shall not get through with it. These matters have been fully discussed, and if everybody makes a speech about them we may just as well give it up first as last, and I do pray the Senate to have a little forbearance in the way of discussion of these matters and come to a vote upon the questions.

Mr. CONNESS. I suppose that speech is intended for me, in the main.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Not at all. It was not intended for the Senator, because he had not begun, but it was intended for the whole body, if the Senate will allow me to say so and not quarrel with me for saying it. If the Senate chooses to sit all night, so be it; but that must be the inevitable consequence at the rate we are going on with this bill.

Mr. CONNESS. I rose to make a speech, and I intend to make it. It will be a very short one. I shall make the one I rose to make notwithstanding the very good one we have heard from the Senator from Maine. [Laughter.] I rose to say that the Senator from Missouri should not complain and refuse to bring the details of the business of his committee into the Senate Chamber after he had already introduced combs and hair-brushes this evening. I think the details of that committee's business have been brought in here to too great an extent, and, for one, I rose to say that I was rather tired of it, and hoped we should get to voting.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Maine that that was the speech I rose to make. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is a very good speech. If you would only always make as good ones, you would do very well. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUCKALEW. I rise for the purpose of proposing a modification or two before the vote is taken, not to speak. On the fourth page of the amendment, in the twenty-second line, after the word "person," I move to insert "other than Senator."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The modification can be made by unanimous consent, no amendment being in order.

Mr. BUCKALEW. This amendment will narrow the requirement of a regular requisition for articles to the officers and other persons besides Senators. That was the leading design, of course, of this section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification will be made if no objection be interposed.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I suggest also to the chairman to omit the latter part of the third section commencing with the word "said," in the seventh line, authorizing this agent to employ horses and contract to carry the mails. The sum total of expenditure under that head is not very considerable, and although I agree with the Senator in the opinion that it might be well enough to bring that subject under the general purview of the section, it is not material, and as it is a matter of debate it had best be omitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That further amendment will be made if there be no objection. Is there any objection?

Mr. HENDERSON. I will make no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification is made.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I believe these were two of the main points of the amendment which were objected to by the Senator from Illinois, and upon which he made his speech. There remains no other particular feature which has elicited debate, except the provision in the first section by which we secure system and reform in the purchases of this body. When the committee made up their minds to suggest this change to the Senate they expected it to be opposed. No reform of the kind was ever introduced and carried without a contest; it is against the nature of things and against the experience of legislative bodies; but there are two facts which will arrest attention and ought to command votes; in the first place, that under the existing laws and the uniform practice of this Senate down until a very recent period the Secretary of this body was charged with these duties connected with purchases as well as with the disbursement of funds. I have in my table papers made out by our late Chief Clerk, Mr. Hickey, which demonstrate it, if anything can be demonstrated by argument and by an appeal to past facts. I have also here a letter from the late Vice President, whose verbal authority to the Sergeant-at-Arms was relied upon as the foundation of his habit of making purchases recently, in which he disclaimed altogether having, as the Presiding Officer of this body, vested in him any control over the subject, and in which he explains the circumstance upon which this pretension was founded. He states that upon some former occasion—his letter is here—he was spoken to by the Sergeant-at-Arms with reference to some changes in, I think, the galleries, and also in one of the rooms, and in reply to that officer he remarked that those things ought to be done and he would approve of them. If there was any authority, it was slight indeed, none in law, and if he gave any he withdrew it in this letter, which was written in September, 1861. However, sir, I will not go through with that.

I understand, then, the law to be—the former statutes are alluded to in the argument which I have mentioned—and the uniform practice of the Senate from the beginning until very recently has been, that the Secretary of this body is charged with this whole duty from beginning to end, all sorts of purchases. Now, then, the question with the Committee on Contingent Expenses, as dispute and debate had arisen is, what shall they do? If you leave it as it was, they must say hereafter, if they are brought to the strict point, and the Secretary of the Senate makes the point, that no purchases will be legal under the law and under the practice of the Senate except purchases made by the Secretary. That is where you leave the subject if you do not adopt our amendment.

I wish to add but one remark. I know the Senate is impatient, and I am very sorry to occupy their time; but I consider that as this subject was charged upon our committee by a special reference of the Senate, we are entitled to be heard so far as to understand the proposition which we have made.

These duties are extensive; these purchases are large; they are various things; they will occupy the whole time and attention and ability of a good officer. You cannot charge these duties upon our Secretary. He does not discharge them, he cannot discharge them. You cannot charge these duties upon the Sergeant-at-Arms. He is overcharged with employment now. He has thirty or forty officers under him, he attends to the post office, he has superintendence over the folding-room, over the document-room, and over the building generally, besides the furnaces and the ventilation of this building. His duties are of that character that they absorb his whole time and attention and withdraw him from our Chamber. I do not complain of his absence, because these duties are sufficient to occupy his whole time and attention. It would therefore be unwise and unreasonable, in my opinion, to charge upon him these whole duties relating to purchases. If we do not charge them upon him he will have to turn them over to another officer. I believe the amendment we have reported is a proper one, and therefore I shall vote for it.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I am very sorry to detain the Senate a moment; but as this is a bill to raise compensation, and it is also a bill under which if one person's compensation is raised others who perform like duties also claim to have their compensation raised, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that there are eight special and additional messengers who have performed duty the same as those provided for by law who are not paid, and whose compensation is not increased by the bill under consideration; and if it was in order I should deem it my duty to offer an amendment of this character:

Special or additional messengers of the Senate not provided for in this act shall receive twenty-five per cent. in addition to their present compensation.

I ask the Senator from Missouri to permit that amendment to go into his bill to provide for the eight additional messengers who have been appointed from session to session for many years. They are now upon duty here, and have been during this whole session.

Mr. HENDERSON. Where employed?

Mr. SPRAGUE. I do not know where; but the Sergeant-at-Arms says they are here. I have a memorandum. "The additional messengers are not affected by the bill of Mr. WADE or Mr. HENDERSON;" so that there are eight of these gentlemen who have served the Senate faithfully, as faithfully as any that are provided for in this bill, that do not, under the bill reported by the Committee on Contingent Expenses, receive compensation; and I hope, therefore, the Senator will permit this amendment to be made.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was not aware of the fact that there were any additional messengers. The committee undertook to define the number of these officers, so that we could get rid of a difficulty upon this subject. Wherever an officer wants to employ additional men somehow or other he finds authority, and we thought we would get rid of that thing and define the exact number of officers. We did not know that there were eight additional messengers, and we do not know where they are employed. If they are employed, I have no objection to increasing their compensation along with the others; and if the Senator will so modify his amendment as to say, "any messengers who may be employed under proper authority," I shall not object; but I do not know under what authority, and it seems he cannot tell me, these messengers were appointed. I know nothing about it. If they have been appointed, they ought to be paid.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I can only say that these additional messengers have been employed for a good many Congresses, if not by law, by precedent, not alone by the present Sergeant-at-Arms, but by his predecessor.

Mr. HENDERSON. I suggest to the Senator that he let it remain and we will inquire into it. We will take a vote now, and when the bill comes into the Senate, I will look into that matter and I will see Mr. Brown and see if there are additional messengers. I have no doubt we can confer and provide an amendment to meet the cases. Let my amendment be voted upon now as it is.

Mr. HOWE. I want to inquire, simply, if the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri shall be adopted as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, will this be subject to amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. It will in the Senate. The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be subject to amendment in the Senate, the Chair understands.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope we shall cut the knot by rejecting the whole. If we expect to get through with this bill at this session it is absolutely necessary that these subjects should not go upon it. The Senator from Wisconsin has given notice of what he will do if this goes on; other Senators probably will do similar things. It has already been suggested to me that the bill reorganizing the Treasury Department ought to go on this bill. We shall have, I suppose, then, the honorable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WILSON] with a bill reorganizing the War Department, with just as much sense, and then the State Department.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is on.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope it will be got off when we go into the Senate.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope it will stay on.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We will try, anyhow. Now, the question is, do the Senate mean to finish or pass the bill at this session? They have already begun to see and to feel, I think, the utter absurdity and folly of this kind of legislation. It begins with one Senator; he disapproves the principle, but he has something that must go on; another Senator disapproves the principle; he does not like it, but he has something that must go on, and so we load an appropriation bill down with these bills that could not pass, perhaps, in any other way, and make very bad legislation. This bill should go to the House to-morrow if we expect to pass it at all during this session; we have fixed the day of adjournment, and yet gentlemen persevere in putting on these bills. I really hope that the Senate will just vote down this and everything connected with it, and also vote down all other propositions of the kind if they expect to get through. I appeal to the majority, if you want to pass your appropriation bills during this session before we adjourn, just assume the position that you ought to assume and enforce the rules and understanding in regard to these bills and keep these extraneous matters off. I have, so far as I have had a chance to vote when I have been able to be here, voted against the whole of them, and I shall continue to do so, because experience has satisfied me of their utter impropriety and the embarrassment that arises from them. Here we are, nearly at midnight, discussing this matter, and every other thing that is offered will be discussed in the same way. Now, I beg Senators not to say that the chairman of the Committee on Finance is manifesting his usual temper on this matter;

he cannot stand anything at all. I think I have stood it quite respectably.

Mr. WADE. Well, just quit talking and we will all agree. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESSENDEN. If you will be agreed to what I propose, I will not only quit but I will engage to be good-natured for the rest of the evening. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Maine ought to be respected by the Senate. I desire to see a bill something like this pass, mainly to provide for the very efficient chief clerk here, who does the duties that are discharged in the House of Representatives by three clerks. But an appropriation bill ought to be an appropriation bill; it ought not to be a legislative bill; and although I am in favor of the bill of the Senator from Missouri, in its main features, I think it ought not to be attached to an appropriation bill. It ought to stand upon its merits; but if anything of the kind is to be passed, I think it is better than the bill of the Senator from Ohio, because it seems to be a well-considered measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is now on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. WADE.]

Mr. WADE. I wish barely to say that if we are to increase the compensation of these employes, we have got to take this measure or they do not get anything more this session.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The House employes will not get anything more.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I must offer the amendment I proposed.

Mr. FESSENDEN and others. Offer it in the Senate.

Mr. SPRAGUE. On page 3, after line thirty-eight, I move to insert:

The special or additional messengers of the Senate not provided for in this act shall receive twenty-five per cent. in addition to their present compensation.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SPRAGUE. That ought to be adopted if any.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Vote against the other.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WADE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I desire simply to state that the House have put a proposition for increasing the pay of their officers upon the deficiency bill which comes up after this; and if this question is to be raised anywhere, it ought to be there.

The question being taken by yeas and nays resulted—yeas 19, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Creswell, Howard, Howe, Lape, McDougall, Norton, Nye, Poland, Ramsey, Riddle, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wiley, Williams, and Yates—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Buckalew, Clark, Conness, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fessenden, Grimes, Guthrie, Henderson, Hendricks, Morgan, Nesmith, Pomeroy, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, and Wilson—20.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Cragin, Dixon, Foster, Fowler, Harris, Johnson, Kirkwood, Morrill, Saulsbury, and Wright—11.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. POLAND. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to propose a single amendment as an additional section:

SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That the solicitor of the court for the investigation of claims against the United States shall receive an annual salary of $4,500, and the deputy solicitor of said court shall receive an annual salary of $3,500, to be paid quarterly from the Treasury of the United States out of any money not otherwise appropriated.

This matter came before the Committee on the Judiciary and was very carefully examined, and we reported a bill on the subject, which, by direction of the committee, I was instructed to propose as an amendment herc. It raises the salary of the solicitor $1,000 and the salary of the deputy solicitor $1,000. I think the compensation is no more than they ought to have.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WADE. I offer this amendment, to come in after line one hundred and eighteen, on page 6:

For compensation to the consul at Quebec, in Canada, $1,500.

I am told that this item was omitted from the consular and diplomatic bill by a bare mistake in the House; and they want it put on here, as there is no other chance for it. It ought to be done.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator is right. A gentleman on the part of the House intended to have it inserted, but in making up the report of the committee it did not appear on the record of the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is it for the salary of this consul, fixed by law?

Mr. SUMNER. It is one of those consulates that had $1,500 during the war, and the salary has ceased.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is it reported from any committee? It is not in pursuance of law.

Mr. SUMNER. No; it is not in execution of any law.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then it is not in order.

Mr. SUMNER. It is to correct a mistake that was made. A gentleman on the part of the House brought it to the Senator from Ohio and myself, and said they wanted the mistake remedied.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The amendment is clearly out of order. It is not recommended by any committee, and it is not in pursuance of any law or treaty stipulation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If that be the case the amendment is not in order.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia to move the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the sum of $5,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the preservation of the harbor of Provincetown, Massachusetts, the same to be expended under the supervision of a commission or board of officers to be appointed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to know how the Military Committee got jurisdiction of that matter.

Mr. SPRAGUE. It was referred to them by petition from the Legislature of Massachusetts.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Military Committee?

Mr. SPRAGUE. Yes; and by them referred to the Secretary of War; and I hold in my hand his communication.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It should have gone on the river and harbor bill. We cannot put such items on this bill.

Mr. SPRAGUE. The Committee on Military Affairs referred this matter to me; but when the river and harbor bill was considered by the Senate I was necessarily absent, and I have had this amendment in my desk ever since.

The work is a very important one, one that affects the whole New England coasting trade in the same way that the Delaware breakwater affects the southern coasting trade. This will save the Government an immense sum of money, which otherwise it will be called on hereafter to appropriate, for it is to preserve a natural tongue of land from being washed by the water, and thereby save us from the necessity of very much larger appropriations.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It can well enough stand over till the next session.

Mr. SPRAGUE. If it is in order, I hope it will be put here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No question of order is raised on the proposed amendment.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I send to the desk to be read a communication from the engineer department on the subject.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Oh, do not have that long communication read. We take it for granted that you state the facts correctly.

Mr. SPRAGUE. If you will let the amendment go on the bill I shall not ask for the reading.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I cannot let it go.
Mr. SPRAGUE. Then I insist on the reading of the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

ENGINEER DEPARTMENT.

WASHINGTON, February 13, 1866.

SIR: In relation to the resolutions of the Legislature of Massachusetts in favor of an appropriation for the preservation of the harbor of Provincetown, &c., referred to this Department, I have to report that this harbor is of much importance to the commerce of the country, and particularly to our coasting trade. It bears the same relation to the northeastern trade that the Delaware breakwater does to the South and southwestern trade. It is a harbor of refuge, in which numerous vessels seek shelter and find security during adverse winds and gales in the passage around Cape Cod.

Its importance is greater from being free from drift ice and thoroughly land-locked. As a natural harbor it possesses all that has been obtained at the cost of nearly two million dollars in creating such a refuge at the entrance of Delaware bay. Such is its importance and value to the commerce of the country. Nature having provided it and the industry of our country having for years past greatly profited and benefited by the security it affords, its preservation and protection have been and continue to be recommended by this department to the fostering care of the national authorities.

Its preservation is mainly for commercial interests. To this end structures on the ocean side of the narrow neck of sand beach are advisable to prevent the ocean waves breaking across that neck and driving the sands into parts of the harbor now resorted to and valuable for the smaller class of coasting vessels as well as guarding against more enlarged encroachments from the ocean, and contraction of this valued natural roadstead.

The superintending engineer has presented an estimate for several operations that he considers expedient and proper to be constructed, amounting to $43,068 44.

There may be well-founded objections to a part of the system thus recommended. Until the subject is more fully studied and examined in all its bearings by some competent board that shall be ordered to examine it, the department can only recommend an appropriation for protecting the encroachments of the sea upon the narrow neck indicated on the plan by the letters A, B, C; and for this purpose the sum of $5,000 should suffice to do all that at this time is advisable, profiting by the experience gained for similar protection on the Atlantic side of Sandy Hook, New York.

As a military site it is of importance as a harbor for our vessels-of-war under all the varied circumstances of offense and defense of and from our coast by a floating force. In possession of an enemy, the harbor of Boston is sealed by blockade as long as a superior floating force can occupy it. Whatever may be our naval force at times, it may be inferior to a single as well as a combined naval European antagonist. To preserve its use and value for purposes of peace and war, its anchorage should be commanded by permanent defenses on the land, mounting the heaviest of artillery and a number of the longest-range mortars. When such artillery is mounted in works susceptible of defense on the land as well as from the water, it is believed that all the conditions are fulfilled that the nature of the case demands.

It is not considered that a railroad from Orleans to Provincetown should be constructed by the United States as a necessary element of efficiency in the defense of this harbor. Whenever an enemy shall set foot on shore to make an attack by land upon any defensive work at Provincetown, the population in his rear in the districts between Boston and Providence would render such an enterprise next to impracticable.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,
RICHARD DELAFIELD,
Brevet Major General,
Chief Engineer United States Army.

Hon. E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.
Mr. FESSENDEN. The reading of that long document at this time of night is argument enough against the amendment. [Laughter.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAMSEY. I now offer the amendment which I submitted this afternoon, but was laid aside after the recess. It is to insert after line two hundred and eighteen, on page 10:

For a light-house at Grand Portage, mouth of Pigeon river, Minnesota, $5,000, subject to the approval of the Light-House Board as to the necessity of this light.

There is a short letter from the chief of the Light-House Board than can be read. ["Oh, no."]

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator told us the appropriation had been made twice but they had refused to expend the money.

Mr. RAMSEY. It lapsed into the Treasury and was not spent on account of the war.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole? If Senators desire a separate vote on any particular amendments, they will now designate them.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire a separate vote on two of the amendments, the one in regard to the pay of the clerks of the State Department, and the other in regard to the compensation of members and Senators.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire a separate vote on the amendment which struck out lines two hundred and forty-four and two hundred and fifty, on page 11, being the clause granting certain compensation to the Commissioner and chief clerk of the General Land Office.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment in regard to the Michigan cavalry.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I desire a separate vote on the appropriation of $1,500,000 to rebuild the levees on the Mississippi river.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments which have not been specially excepted.

The unexcepted amendments were then concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The excepted amendments will now be read in their order.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendment to insert after line seventy-two, on page 4:

For reconstructing and repairing the levees on the Mississippi river, in the States of Louisiana, Mississippi, and Arkansas, $1,500,000—

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is not necessary to read the amendment at length. We all understand what it is. I ask for the yeas and nays upon concurring in it.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 30, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Chandler, Clark, Conness, Cowan, Creswell, Davis, Doolittle, Edmunds, Foster, Guthrie, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Lane, McDougall, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Poland, Ramsey, Riddle, Ross, Stewart, Van Winkle, Wiley, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—30.

NAYS—Messrs. Grimes, Morgan, Sherman, Sumner, Trumbull, and Wade—6.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Cragin, Dixon, Fessenden, Fowler, Harris, Johnson, Kirkwood, Morrill, Pomeroy, Saulsbury, Sprague, and Wright—14.

So the amendment was concurred in.

The next excepted amendment was to strike out from lines two hundred and forty-four to two hundred and fifty of section one, in the following words:

For compensation to the Commissioner and chief clerk of the General Land Office, (to be apportioned by the Secretary of the Interior,) in consideration of the increased duties devolving on them from June 7, 1865, to December 31, 1865, in connection with the census of 1860, $1,750.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will state that this appropriation—

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think there is now no objection to the appropriation. I am perfectly willing that it should be made.

Mr. CHANDLER. Very well.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the amendment will be rejected.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The next excepted amendment was to insert as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That there be paid to the several clerks of the Department of State twenty per cent. of the compensation now allowed to each, to commence from the 30th of June, 1865, and to continue until repealed by Congress, and a sum sufficient for this purpose is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. SHERMAN. All I wish to say is, that the different bills on the subject of increasing the pay of the clerks in the different Departments of the Government have, as I understand, been either postponed or rejected in the other House. It has been so in regard to the Treasury and Interior Departments, and therefore it would be manifestly improper to increase the compensation of the clerks in the State Department, when the others are not provided for. All ought to stand on the same footing.

Mr. SUMNER. I do not feel that it is manifestly improper. On the contrary, I feel that this appropriation is manifestly proper. I do not wish to take time in arguing it. I presented the facts when it was under consideration before, and though I think the Senator from Ohio attempted to answer it, I feel sure he did not succeed. The case is peculiar. These clerks are few in number. They are not so numerous as those in the Treasury Department.

Mr. SHERMAN. They get higher pay in proportion.

Mr. SUMNER. I beg the Senator's pardon. There are no heads of bureaus in the State Department. In the Treasury Department, I need not remind the Senate, there are heads of bureaus who have three, four, five, and some even six thousand dollars a year. There is no head of a bureau in the State Department. They are all simply clerks, and nothing more.

Mr. SHERMAN. They are the highest grade of clerks.

Mr. SUMNER. That may possibly be the case, but they perform the highest grade of service. The other day the Senator chose to let drop some remarks in disparagement of what they did. The Senator showed that he was very little conversant with what they did. The service of many of the clerks in the Department of State is highly intellectual.

Mr. FESSENDEN. A high grade of gentlemen, I suppose.

Mr. SUMNER. No; I do not introduce that element; I say nothing about it. I am speaking in earnest for men who have rendered good service to the State, who are not adequately paid, who are receiving now what they had before the war, and many of them cannot live on their pay. I do not wish to take up time with this matter.

Mr. GRIMES. I appeal to the Senator to know if he is willing that I should put on the bill increasing the pay of clerks in the Navy Department as an amendment to his proposition.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator acts here on his own responsibilities, and he knows perfectly well what he ought to do and what he ought not to do. I do not know the merits of that case, but I do know the merits of the case which I have presented, and I believe the Senate were convinced of the merits yesterday, or the day before, when by a majority of several on the yeas and nays they put this appropriation in the bill. I hope it will not now be taken out of the bill.

It is perfectly vain to say that the other House has made no appropriation for the Interior Department, or for the Treasury Department, of this nature. I did not find this proposition on the argument that the other House had done this or that. As the Senator refers to what the other House has done, though, I may remind him that both Houses, on a former occasion, appropriated $250,000 for extra compensation to the clerks of the Treasury Department. The Senator undertook to correct me the other day with regard to that; but the statute-book will show that I am right. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars was appropriated for extra compensation in the Treasury Department. I then showed the Senator from Ohio that his own bill, which he had charge of in this Chamber, undertook to raise a great many salaries, not in the Departments, but elsewhere, and this very deficiency bill, which we are told is to come forward tomorrow, has a section, section four, which is additional to what has already been provided in a former bill, with regard to the distribution of certain funds among the clerks and employes of the Treasury Department. The Senator from Maine suggests that I shall put my proposition on that bill. It is already on this bill, and I wish to keep it there.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope it will not be kept there.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is perfectly evident that if this clause remains in the bill, other Departments should go on it. In the War Department three fourths of the clerks are disabled soldiers, drawing only $1,200, nearly every one of them. If this provision stays on this bill, I hope you will put on a provision for the War Department clerks certainly, if not for the Interior and all the other Departments of the Government. It is simply absurd to say that the State Department should be on and other Departments off. I hope Senators will either put them all on or strike this off.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope the Senate will be willing to do justice, and if in doing justice requires that all the other Departments should go on, put them on. I have shown that justice requires that the State Department should go on: I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 16, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Conness, Creswell, Henderson, McDougall, Morgan, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Riddle, Ross, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, and Yates—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Chandler, Clark, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fessenden, Grimes, Guthrie, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Lane, Nesmith, Norton, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Wiley, Williams, and Wilson—22.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Cragin, Dixon, Foster, Fowler, Harris, Johnson, Kirkwood, Morrill, Saulsbury, and Wright—12.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

The next excepted amendment was to insert as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the compensation of each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress shall be $5,000 per year and mileage as now provided by law; and this provision shall be held to operate from the beginning of the Thirty-Ninth Congress.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move the proposition which I offered yesterday as an amendment to that. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the section and insert:

That the compensation of each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress shall be $5,000 per annum, to be computed from the first day of the present Congress, and in addition thereto, mileage at the rate of twenty cents per mile, to be estimated by the nearest route usually traveled in going to and returning from the regular session; but nothing herein contained shall affect mileage accounts already accrued under existing laws: Provided, That hereafter mileage accounts of Senators shall be certified by the President of the Senate, and those of Representatives and Delegates by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri, that it would be more acceptable to some of us if he would provide that the change in the mileage should take place at the commencement of the next session of Congress.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is just what it is.

Mr. HENDRICKS. No; I understand that it will take place at the beginning of the next session.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Senate will remember that mileage accounts are due on the first day of every session, and therefore the mileage for this session was due last December. That has been drawn and this provision will not affect that mileage.

Mr. HENDRICKS. But it will affect next session's mileage.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It ought to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I want to suggest to the Senator from Missouri that he change his amendment so that the alteration in the mileage shall commence with the commencement of the next Congress.

Mr. WILSON. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that he make it ten cents a mile east of the Pacific coast, and twenty cents for those from the Pacific coast.

Mr. SHERMAN. That would assimilate it to Army mileage.

Mr. WILSON. During the war we gave to Army officers six cents mileage east of the Rocky mountains and ten cents beyond the mountains and on the Pacific coast; and I think that distinction is proper to be made as to members of Congress, at any rate for the present; because a member who comes from the Pacific coast, no matter what may happen to his business at home, cannot go there during the session. I think some increased allowance of that sort should be made to members coming from the Pacific coast, and I would give them twenty cents a mile, and to those east of the mountains ten cents. Changed in that way I think the proposition will add very little to the average expense of Congress and will give fairer pay and more equally distributed than that now allowed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I like very much the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts. It is important that we should have this matter as near right as we can. This distinction between the Pacific coast and the Atlantic coast has been made in military bills for years, and it is founded in reason. I think that a mileage of ten cents a mile on the Atlantic coast and twenty cents a mile on the Pacific coast is fair and just, and I think probably the Senator from Missouri ought to modify his amendment in that way, but if he does not we can amend it afterward if it shall be adopted.

Mr. HENDERSON. Let me say to Senators that this measure must go to the House of Representatives, and finally to a committee of conference, and that committee can take this suggestion into consideration. The suggestion is perhaps a very good one, but Senators should remember that no matter what we adopt here, the House is to act on it, and it will be subject to revision in the conference committee.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not believe in that way of legislating. I am in favor of making it as near right as we can. I move to add a proviso that the mileage of members coming from east of the one hundredth meridian shall be ten cents and those coming from west of the one hundredth meridian shall be twenty cents a mile.

Mr. SHERMAN. Say "Pacific coast."

Mr. HENDRICKS. Nevada is not on the Pacific coast.

Mr. SHERMAN. But the members from Nevada have to come that way.

Mr. HENDRICKS. By fixing the one hundredth meridian I think we shall have it right.

Mr. SHERMAN. This law will last for years probably, but the one hundredth meridian will be reached in one year by railroad.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Very well; I am not particular about the words. I will adopt the suggestion and move this proviso:

Provided, That the mileage of members of Congress from the Pacific coast shall be twenty cents a mile.

Mr. HENDERSON. All mileage under my amendment as it stands is twenty cents a mile.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then I move to amend it by striking out "twenty" and inserting "ten."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the proposition of the Senator from Missouri is an amendment to an amendment, an amendment to it would be in the third degree, and therefore not in order.

Mr. HENDERSON. In order to gratify Senators, if they insist upon having their own mileage reduced to ten cents, I will modify my amendment. My original view of the subject was to reduce all mileage to ten cents, and I modify my amendment in that way.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not think it is right to fix ours at ten cents and make no further provision for those on the Pacific coast. I am not willing to vote money into my own pocket out of other Senators' pockets.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will modify my amendment, by providing ten cents mileage instead of twenty, and then by providing that Senators, Representatives, and Delegates living west of the Rocky mountains shall have twenty cents a mile.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, as modified, to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SHERMAN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. WILLEY. Before the vote is taken I desire to say that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Brown] was compelled to retire from the Chamber on account of the condition of his health, and I agreed to pair off with him. I do not know exactly how he would have voted on this particular amendment, but as I paired with him on the main question—the amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole—I decline to vote on this question.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 18, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Clark, Cowan, Creswell, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Guthrie, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, Poland, Pomeroy, Ross, Sherman, Van Winkle, and Wilson—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Davis, Grimes, Howard, Lane, McDougall, Morgan, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Ramsey, Riddle, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, Williams, and Yates—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Conness, Craig, Dixon, Fowler, Harris, Johnson, Kirkwood, Morrill, Saulsbury, Willey, and Wright—13.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question recurring on the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SHERMAN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WILLEY, (when his name was called.) I have already stated that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Brown] retired from the Chamber in consequence of indisposition, and that I was paired with him. If he were here he would vote in favor of the amendment and I against it.

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Hendricks, Howard, Lane, McDougall, Nesmith, Norton, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Riddle, Ross, Sprague, Stewart, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Yates—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Chandler, Clark, Creswell, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Guthrie, Henderson, Howe, Morgan, Nye, Poland, Sherman, Sumner, Wade, Williams, and Wilson—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Conness, Craig, Dixon, Fowler, Harris, Johnson, Kirkwood, Morrill, Saulsbury, Willey, and Wright—13.

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to reconsider the vote previous to that just taken.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is not necessary. The bill is open to amendment, and that proposition can be offered again.

Mr. DAVIS. Very well.

The Secretary read the next excepted amendment, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That there is hereby appropriated for payment of travelling expenses of the members of the first regiment of Michigan cavalry from the place in Utah where they were mustered out of service in the year 1866 to the place of their enrollment, a sum sufficient to allow each member $325, deducting therefrom the amount paid to each for commutation of travel, pay and subsistence by the Government when thus mustered out; and that the accounts be settled and paid under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. SHERMAN. Since this question was discussed before I have become satisfied that some allowance ought to be made to the soldiers that were scattered in Utah, but I think this provision has not been sufficiently considered. There are several other regiments in the same predicament, and I hope the Senator from Michigan will allow this to go over to the next session. From the examination of the papers, I have no doubt some allowance ought to be made to these soldiers for their expenses, but it had better be a general provision which would include all the regiments disbanded in Utah. I think it had better be allowed to go over until the next session. The sum fixed is an arbitrary sum, $325. It may be too much in some cases.

Mr. HOWARD. I suppose every case of this kind will necessarily stand upon its own merits, and whenever any other soldiers who have been treated as the first regiment of Michigan cavalry has been present their claim here, I shall be very willing to come to their aid. I do not conceive it to be easy to frame a general act which shall meet all cases. At all events, I prefer to have a vote taken on the amendment which I have presented, and I assure the Senate that the amount contained in it is supposed by the committee to have been just about the amount the members of that regiment necessarily expended in returning to their homes from Great Salt Lake City, in Utah, where they were mustered out. It simply indemnifies the soldiers of that regiment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to say that these soldiers had served five years; they had done distinguished service for five years, having reenlisted as veterans. They supposed their time was out before they were marched to Salt Lake. While at Salt Lake, as the letter of General Sherman informs us, their horses were taken from them and they were informed that if they remained in service they would have to march on foot; having ridden five years on horseback their horses were taken from them because the Government required the horses at Salt Lake. They supposed their expenses would be paid home, and they accepted the muster-out not knowing that they were to receive one third, or a little more than one third, of their expenses. They came home after five years of service ragged and without a dollar, a single man of them. I hope the Senate will do an act of justice to one of the best regiments in the service. Their first colonel was killed at the second battle of Bull Run, and they lost two or three colonels afterward. They were decimated four times; over three thousand men were enlisted for that regiment.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I hope this amendment will be made. There is one point in it which is worthy of consideration. Every Senator knows how anxious the troops were to be mustered out of service at the close of the war, and they would sacrifice anything rather than be kept in the service beyond that time. I think it is a just claim, and out to be put upon this appropriation bill.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole have been disposed of.

Mr. HENDERSON. I now offer as a separate amendment the proposition which I offered before as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The Secretary read the amendment, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the compensation of each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress shall be $5,000 per annum, to be computed from the first day of the present Congress, and in addition thereto, mileage at the rate of twenty cents per mile, to be estimated by the nearest route usually traveled in going to and returning from each regular session; but nothing herein contained shall affect mileage accounts already accrued under existing laws: Provided, That hereafter mileage accounts of Senators shall be certified by the President of the Senate, and those of Representatives and Delegates by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to strike out "twenty" and insert "ten," and also to add that members west of the Rocky mountains shall have twenty cents per mile. I intend afterward to propose that the mileage shall take effect from the commencement of the next Congress.

Mr. GRIMES. And the salary, too?

Mr. HENDRICKS. No, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON. The proposition, as I present it, is for twenty cents a mile to all members. The Senator from Indiana moves to amend it. Let us take a vote upon his amendment, so that we can get the sense of the Senate on all these propositions.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. There are two things about the mileage proposed by the Senator from Missouri: first, to reduce it to one half what it now is, and second to reduce the computation of it to the direct route.

Mr. HENDERSON. The usually traveled route.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The most direct usually traveled route.

Mr. HENDERSON. The nearest.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If we are to change the mileage at all, that is a very great improvement on the present system of mileage; but if we are to give any mileage, I suppose if a man traveled alone, without any family, ten cents a mile would cover his expenses; but if it is supposed that he is to bring any family with him, and come here to Washington to live six, eight, or nine months at a time, ten cents would not cover his expenses in coming, and the mileage certainly ought to cover the traeling expenses. It ought to be twenty cents a mile at least.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I desire to say, in reference to this amendment, which commends itself to most of the Senate, that it contains one provision which is an insurmountable objection to me, and I would not vote for it with it in. I will make no such discrimination between mileage as to pay one person twenty cents and another person ten cents, and particularly to compute ten cents to those who live near. It looks to me like a very small matter and a discrimination that cannot be sustained. It is wrong upon principle. I would not vote for it. That is the reason I voted against the proposition before, and I should vote against it if this was put into it again. I merely wished to state my view.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The reason that I propose this is, that the gentlemen who come from the Pacific coast have to turn their backs upon their entire business for the term for which they are elected. It is the same as closing up a man's business.

Mr. FESSENDEN. So do I, and so does every man who attends to his duties here.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator from Maine says he does. I do not know why. That is his own choice. It is not so with me. It is very different. I know I do not. A very considerable portion of the time I give to my private pursuits, and the Senator from Maine does. If he has property, which I suppose he has, when he is at home he gives a good deal of time to seeing to it. He can see to its condition.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I can do no business; I may attend somewhat to private affairs.

Mr. HENDRICKS. So can the Senator from Illinois. He can see to his property. If he has farms he can see how they are cultivated.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I can do no such thing.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not see why he cannot do any such thing, when he can be at home every other year on the 5th day of March. The Senators from the Pacific coast cannot be at home at all. It strikes me it is a very different thing.

Mr. HENDERSON. They can go home in twenty-five days.

Mr. HENDRICKS. No; they can hardly go home during their term.

Mr. HENDERSON. I wish to state that packets go by way of the Isthmus of Panama within twenty-eight days, anyhow, from New York city.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If Senators prefer twenty cents as the rate of mileage, I have no objection to it. I do not care much about it, but I want to make this thing acceptable to the House. I have conversed with some gentlemen of the House and they seem to prefer this.

Mr. TRUMBULL. My reason is a matter of principle. I would not vote for a bill that had such a discrimination in it.

Mr. HENDERSON. We can get the sense of the Senate very easily. I move twenty cents for everybody. The Senator from Indiana moves to strike out "twenty" and insert "ten" with a view hereafter of moving another amendment by which those members coming from east of the Rocky mountains will get ten cents a mile and those west twenty cents. The Senate can express their opinion on it. I move twenty cents and the Senator from Indiana moves ten cents. Now let us vote.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will vote to make it all ten or all twenty. I voted before for the amendment of the Senator, but I cannot see the sense of the distinction. If the Senate votes to put it all at ten, I have no objection.

Mr. HENDRICKS. My amendment is one entire amendment to make it ten for those east of the mountains and twenty for the others.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment, as it has been modified, will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment of Mr. HENDRICKS to the amendment, which was to strike out the words "mileage at the rate of twenty cents per mile" and insert "mileage of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates coming from east of the Rocky mountains shall be at the rate of ten cents per mile, and the mileage of those coming from west of the Rocky mountains shall be twenty cents per mile."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Now, it stands at twenty cents. I move to amend the amendment so that the change in the mileage shall take effect at the commencement of the next Congress. I move to insert the words "to take effect from and after the 4th day of March next."

Mr. CRESWELL. In this question of mileage I have no direct interest, scarcely any interest worth speaking about; it does not matter to me whether you give ten cents or no mileage; but I rise to ask the Senator from Missouri a question. I wish to know what difference this change will make in the aggregate expenses of Congress.

Mr. HENDERSON. I stated it as near as I could yesterday. I have not made an accurate calculation as far as the House of Representatives is concerned, but I suppose that in the two Houses it will increase the aggregate expenditure for the pay of members perhaps $225,000. When, however, the South shall be represented, there will be hardly any increase, and in the course of a few years it will decrease as the western Territories are admitted and represented as States.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not see any propriety in having the change of mileage commence at the beginning of the next Congress when the change of salary begins at this.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected—yeas 14, nays 15.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to modify the last proviso. I do not want any officer of either House to have anything to do with stating this mileage. I move, therefore, to strike out that proviso and insert these words:

Provided, That the distance of each Senator, Representative, and Delegate by the route usually traveled from his place of residence to the seat of Government shall be certified to each House by the Postmaster General within thirty days after the organization of each Congress.

Mr. HENDERSON. The difficulty about that is that the mileage now as fixed by law is to be paid on the first day of the session, and this amendment provides that it is to be certified within thirty days after the session commences.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILSON. Now let the amendment be read just as it stands.

The Secretary read as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the compensation of each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress shall be $5,000 per annum, to be computed from the first day of the present Congress, and, in addition thereto, mileage at the rate of twenty cents per mile, to be estimated by the nearest route usually traveled in going to and returning from each regular session; but nothing herein contained shall affect mileage accounts already accrued under existing laws: Provided, That hereafter mileage accounts of Senators shall be certified by the President of the Senate and those of Representatives and Delegates by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. POMEROY. But suppose you do not have any Speaker of the House.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That would not make any difference.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is always one, first or last.

Mr. POMEROY. Perhaps it would not make any practical difference.

Mr. FESSENDEN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 23, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Backalew, Clark, Cowan, Creswell, Davis, Doolittle, Edmunds, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Lane, McDougall, Norton, Poland, Pomero, Ramsey, Riddle, Ross, Sprague, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wilson, and Yates—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Guthrie, Howe, Morgan, Nesmith, Nye, Sherman, Sumner, Wade, and Williams—13.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Connors, Cragin, Dixon, Fowler, Harris, Johnson, Kirkwood, Morrill, Saulsbury, Stewart, Willey, and Wright—14.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADE. I renew my amendment now as to the employés of the Senate, and let us see how we shall come out on that.

Mr. HOWE. I wish to inquire if that amendment makes any provision for the officers of the Library.

Mr. WADE. I do not think it does.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let it go to the next bill.

Mr. WADE. No; I do not like to let it go off this time.

Mr. GRIMES. I propose, then, to the Senator that he amend his proposition so as to allow twenty per cent. to all the employés. There are the persons mentioned by the Senator from Rhode Island, who are only getting two dollars a day and doing us just as good service as any of these messengers; they ought not to be excluded.

Mr. WADE. They are included. They have the same increase. It is not so much, but it is in the same proportion all around. I think we had better stand by the bill as it is.

Mr. GRIMES. I move as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, a provision to add twenty per cent.

Mr. WADE. I hope that will not prevail. We have voted into our pockets a pretty good sum. Now, I think we can afford something to the clerks.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That there be allowed and paid to the officers, clerks, and employés of the Senate twenty per cent. on their present compensation.

Mr. HOWE. Will the Senator insert "and in the Library?"

Mr. GRIMES. Yes, I will include all those connected with us. I examined the subject in reference to the librarians. It was referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses, and that committee reported back exactly the proposition that came from the Senator from Wisconsin, and thought it was equitable. I will apply it to the Library.

Mr. SUMNER. And I add, "also of the Department of State."

Mr. GRIMES. I do not accept the amendment.

The Secretary read the amendment of Mr. GRIMES to the amendment of Mr. WADE, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the amendment and to insert:

That there be paid to the officers, clerks, messengers, and other employés of the Senate, and to the Librarian, assistant librarians, messengers, and other employés of the Congressional Library, an addition of twenty per cent. on their present pay; and the amount necessary to pay this allowance is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. WADE. I hope we shall not agree to that. I believe we have just increased our own pay something over sixty per cent., and I do not see on what principle these employés are to be put off with twenty per cent.; and besides for the duties performed by some of these officers the increase ought to be higher than that. I hope the graduated bill presented by the committee will be taken instead of this.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WADE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HENDRICKS. This is a just thing; it is equal to all. It is not taking out half and giving them a large amount, and neglecting others. It is a simple proposition that we all understand, not a series of sections like the bill proposed by the Senator from Ohio; and I hope it will be adopted.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 28, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Backalew, Chandler, Clark, Cowan, Creswell, Davis, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Guthrie, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, Lane, Morgan, Poland, Pomero, Ramsey, Riddle, Ross, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Van Winkle, Willey, and Wilson—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Howard, McDougall, Trumbull, Wade, Williams, and Yates—6.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Connors, Cragin, Dixon, Fowler, Harris, Johnson, Kirkwood, Morrill, Nesmith, Norton, Nye, Saulsbury, Stewart, and Wright—16.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. SUMNER. I move as an amendment to that the proposition which I moved in reference to the State Department. We have already by a large vote voted to increase our own pay. We have also now voted to increase the pay of the servants of the Senate Chamber. I think we ought to do justice now to that other class in the State Department. They are not numerous, they are poor, they do need this, and I ask you now for the last time to do them this justice.

Mr. HOWE. I should like to have the amendment reported.

The Secretary read the amendment to the amendment, which was to add:

And that there be paid to the several clerks of the Department of State twenty per cent. on the compensation now allowed to each, to commence from the 20th of June, 1865, and to continue until repealed by Congress; and a sum sufficient for this purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations if we have not increased the compensation of the chief clerk of the State Department already at this session.

Mr. SUMNER. We have not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Did we not pass a bill of that sort?

Mr. SUMNER. We have created in the State Department an office of Second Assistant Secretary of State.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This amendment goes back a year and pays them for the year past.

Mr. SUMNER. I know it does.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope the Senator will amend that, at any rate.

Mr. SUMNER. If the Senator from Maine will accept it with that amendment I will consent.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Oh, no; I shall vote against it anyhow.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I hope the honorable Senator from Massachusetts will reserve this proposition to go on the other bill. It is in the nature of a deficiency.

Mr. SUMNER. I should be willing to do so if I could have a general understanding that it shall go on the other bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. You can move it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. You cannot get it on this bill, and may on that.

Mr. SUMNER. I withdraw it, then, for the purpose of moving it on the deficiency bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Massachusetts to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. SUMNER. I withdraw it, with the understanding that it is to be moved on the deficiency bill.

Mr. GRIMES. I want to amend my proposition so as to provide for the time when it shall take effect, and I suppose the most proper time would be the beginning of the present session of Congress. I make that modification.

Mr. HOWE. I suggest to the Senator that it should commence with the beginning of some fiscal year.

Mr. GRIMES. That is not necessary. So far as the statement of the accounts of our financial agents is concerned, it does not make any difference whether we begin with the fiscal year or not. I propose that we commence from the first Monday in December last.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so modified at the suggestion of the mover, and the question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. WADE. I am authorized by the Committee on Foreign Relations to propose this amendment, to come in after line one hundred and eighteen, on page 6:

For compensation to the consul at Quebec, in Canada, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I now renew my amendment, and I hope my want of tact in presenting the matter before will not injure a very important measure with the Senate. I hope the Senate will let it go on this bill. It is to insert as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the sum of $8,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the preservation of the harbor of Provincetown, Massachusetts, the same to be expended under the supervision of a commission or board of officers to be appointed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think when Senators reflect a moment there will not be anybody objecting to this amendment. The work is recommended by the proper Department; there is no question about its propriety; and the Senator from Rhode Island was instructed from his committee to report the proposition to another bill, but he was necessarily absent from the Senate on that day and did not offer it to that bill, and he therefore feels personally somewhat embarrassed about it. Now, I am sure, as the measure is right and proper in itself, and ordered by the proper Department, we shall relieve the Senator from any sort of embarrassment he feels about it, and add it to this bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I move to add to the list of employes to whom we have given twenty per cent. the members of the Capitol police.

Mr. FESSENDEN. They are employes of the Senate. They come under that head.

Mr. HOWARD, and others. Oh, no.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We increase their pay somewhere.

Mr. POLAND. They are not employes of the Senate any more than of the House.

Mr. TRUMBULL. They are not employed by the Senate. They are employed by the Commissioner of Public Buildings.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think the Senator had better wait until the next bill comes and see if their pay has not been increased. That is my impression.

Mr. NYE. I am quite certain that it has not been. It is the pay of the police of the city that has been increased. These policemen here have to stay the year round; the other employes can go away; so that their expenses are very much increased.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was to insert after the word "Library" the words "and the members of the Capitol police."

Mr. SHERMAN. I knew a provision for these men was in some bill, and I have found it in the deficiency bill, which will be considered to-morrow. In section three of the House deficiency bill there is a provision for the increase of the pay of the employes of the House of Representatives, "including the Capitol police," so that it ought not to be put here.

Mr. HOWARD. How much is it increased?

Mr. SHERMAN. Twenty-five per cent. We shall have that bill before us to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio whether the committee who report that bill recommend that the Capitol police be paid.

Mr. SHERMAN. It will be before the Senate to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The question I ask is whether the committee recommend that that be paid or that the clause be struck out.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The committee have not struck it out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then you recommend that it be adopted.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is the best of my recollection. The bill is before you.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senate will have it in its power to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish the Senator from Ohio to inform the Senate what the purpose of the committee is as to the Capitol police. It is obviously just that these men—

Mr. SHERMAN. I have nothing to do with that bill. I was not present when it was considered in committee.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will say to the Senator we have gone all over that bill, and I have not the slightest recollection that we struck that out. I do not believe we did, but it is on the table somewhere.

Mr. SHERMAN. It will come up to-morrow, at any rate.

Mr. POLAND. I withdraw the amendment under those circumstances.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bill and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 605) to amend an act to establish the judicial courts of the United States, approved September 24, 1789; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 195) to extend the provisions of the act of July 4, 1864, limiting the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims to the loyal citizens of Tennessee.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 387) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending 30th June, 1867, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 480) to provide for and to regulate the weighing of exports, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 775) to establish certain post roads.

COMMITTEE ON RETRENCHMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, in pursuance of the order of the Senate of the 23d instant, appointed Mr. EDMUNDS, Mr. WILLIAMS, and Mr. BUCKALEW as the members of the joint committee on retrenchment on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 605) to amend an act to establish the judicial courts of the United States, approved September 24, 1789, and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 195) to extend the provisions of the act of July 4, 1864, limiting the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims to the loyal citizens of Tennessee, were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DEFICIENCIES IN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I desire to take up the bill making appropriations for deficiencies with a view to have that the order of business for to-morrow. It is House bill No. 791.

Mr. WILSON. Before that is taken up I want some little understanding about business. I thought that when we got through with the appropriation bill just disposed of we were to take up the House bill in regard to bounties. Now, I find that the Senator is pressing another appropriation bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator tried that measure on the bill we have just passed.

Mr. WILSON. Yes; but I propose to take up the House bounty bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This bill must go back to the House with the disagreements.

The motion of Mr. FESSENDEN was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I now move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned at five minutes before one o'clock.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, July 25, 1866.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOXTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

RAILROAD TO HUMBOLDT BAY.

Mr. McRUER. I move that the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. No. 133) entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the waters of the bay of San Francisco to Humboldt bay, in the State of California," and that the bill be laid on the Speaker's table.

The motion was agreed to.

PROMOTION OF NAVAL OFFICERS.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 667) to prevent officers of the Navy from being deprived of their regular promotion on account of wounds received in battle.

The bill provides that the provision of section four of the act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish and equalize the grade of line officers of the United States Navy," approved July 16, 1862, requiring that no officer in the naval service shall be promoted to a higher grade upon the active list until he has been examined by a board of naval surgeons and pronounced physically qualified to perform all his duties at sea, shall not be construed to apply to and exclude from the promotion to which he would otherwise be regularly entitled any officer in whose case such medical board shall report that his physical disqualification was occasioned by wounds received in battle.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs was read, as follows:

At the end of line fourteen insert the following: In the line of his duty, and that such wound does not incapacitate him for other duties in the grade to which he shall be promoted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Add the following as a new section:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the rate of pay of officers of the Navy on the retired list and not on duty, when retired on furlough pay, in cases where such rate of pay has not heretofore been fixed by law, shall be one half of the pay to which such officers would be entitled if on duty at sea; and the pay of clerks to commandants of navy-yards and of clerks to naval store-keepers is hereby increased twenty-five per cent. upon their present salaries from the commencement of the present fiscal year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Add the following as a new section:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized, in the settlement of the accounts of the disbursing officers of the Navy and Marine corps, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, to allow such credits for losses of property and funds as have occurred during the late rebellion, or shall occur hereafter, and which shall appear to them, by such vouchers and testimony as they shall require, to have been occasioned by accidental circumstances, or a condition of things over which such officers had no control, and for which they are not justly responsible.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SITE FOR NAVAL DEPOT.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut, by unanimous consent, presented the following resolutions of the Legislature of Connecticut in regard to the selection of New London, Connecticut, as a site for a naval depot; which were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed:

At a General Assembly of the State of Connecticut, holden at New Haven, in said State, on the first Wednesday in May, in the year of our Lord 1866.

Whereas the city of New London has offered to the United States, as a gift, three miles of shore line on the Thames river, with all the land adjacent thereto which may be required for an iron-clad navy-yard, and whereas a competent board of officers appointed under an act of Congress in 1862, charged with the special duty of selecting the most eligible site for the purpose, after a "thorough examination and survey of League Island," and "the harbor of New London and its surroundings," and "the waters of Narragansett bay" made report that "the public interest will not be promoted by acquiring title to League Island for naval purposes," and "that the harbor of New London possesses greater advantages for a navy-yard and naval depot than any other location examined by this board," and whereas in 1864 the Committee of Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives, "after a very thorough and careful consideration of the whole subject," concurred with the "board of officers" in their report, and recommended the acceptance of New London, instead of League Island; and whereas the House of Representatives of the United States have during the present session passed an act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept the title to League Island on certain conditions, to the exclusion of all other sites, notwithstanding the two reports they made against its acceptance; and whereas it is of national importance that the best site for the proposed navy-yard should be secured by the United States: Therefore,

Resolved, That we do earnestly request our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use every proper effort to obtain the passage of an act whereby the comparative merits of each site offered for the purpose may be ascertained with a view to the adoption of that one by which the public interest will be best promoted.

Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing preamble and resolution be transmitted to the Senators and Representatives from this State.

Approved, June 27, 1866.

RAILROAD TO TEXAS.

Mr. DELANO. I move that the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. No. 223) to revive and extend the provisions of an act granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the States of Arkansas and Missouri, to aid in the construction of a railroad from a point upon the Mississippi opposite the mouth of the Ohio river, via Little Rock, to the Texas boundary, near Fulton, in Arkansas, with branches to Fort Smith and the Mississippi river, approved February 9, 1853, and for other purposes; and that the same be laid on the Speaker's table.

The motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL FARM SCHOOL.

Mr. KASSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to incorporate the National Farm School; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire to ask whether this bill makes any appropriation of any sort.

Mr. KASSON. Not at all. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that a philanthropic French gentleman of New York has already established a school farm for the purposes indicated in the act, and I understand it is now in operation in this District. He simply desires an act of incorporation recognizing his institution, and writes me that it will probably aid him in obtaining funds from philanthropists abroad, in aid of his object. The incorporation named is Henri de Mareil. I do not know the names of his associates. I have exhibited the bill to gentlemen on both sides of the House, and there is no objection to it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

INQUIRY INTO PUBLIC EXPENDITURES.

Mr. HULBURD, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the powers conferred upon the Committee on Public Expenditures by a resolution of the House adopted April 30, 1865, be enlarged to such an extent that said committee be authorized to inquire into any and all public expenditures, receipts, and keeping of the public moneys by officers of the Government; and the committee are authorized to employ a clerk.

Mr. HULBURD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ASSISTANT HOUSE STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. ROLLINS, from the Committee of Accounts, by unanimous consent, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Speaker be authorized to appoint a competent stenographer as assistant official reporter to the committees of the House, who shall be paid out of the contingent fund, commencing 1st of June, 1866, the same compensation paid to such official reporter, whose term of service shall expire March 4, 1867.

Mr. JOHNSON. That has been up before, but no one has stated what this reporter is to do. Who is to control his services? If the Speaker is to control them then let the resolution say so. If he is to be used by members who have no clerks to their committees let us know it.

Mr. ROLLINS. He is to assist the official reporter for the committees. If the gentleman had been present when the resolution was introduced and referred to the Committee of Accounts, and had heard the discussion, he would have known the reason for the resolution. We have modified it so as to provide for this reporter only during the present Congress. His term of office is to close at the expiration of the present Congress, the 4th of March, 1867. He is to assist the present official reporter, who has more than he can do, and who will be obliged to pay out more than he receives.

Mr. JOHNSON. We cannot appoint this reporter on a simple resolution. I was not present when the resolution was introduced, and therefore waive all further objection.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. This session is within a few days of its close, and I would like to know the reason for the appointment of an additional reporter.

Mr. ROLLINS. I will inform the House there are two or three special committees which are to sit during the recess, and it will be impossible for one reporter to be present at more than one place at a time.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. ROLLINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

STEAMBOAT NAVIGATION.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, reported back House bill No. 92, to ascertain the practicability of having a steamboat navigation from the Chesapeake bay, at the mouth of the Susquehanna river, to Lake Ontario, in the State of New York.

The first section was read, as follows:

That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and required to cause a survey to be made, by competent engineers, of the Susquehanna river from the Chesapeake bay to the southern line of the State of New York, and also a survey from the said line to Lake Ontario, with a view to ascertain the practicability of a communication by steamboats from the Chesapeake bay to said lake, and to report accordingly; and also, if any part of said route is deemed practicable, then to cause to be made an estimate of the probable cost of the work, and report the same.

Mr. MILLER moved to add the following:

And also to examine and report whether the west branch of the Susquehanna river, or any part of it, can be made practicable for steamboat navigation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. There was some difficulty about the second section, as it makes an appropriation. It is as follows:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That in order to defray incidental expenses in carrying out the provisions of this act, the Secretary of War is authorized to draw his warrant on the Treasury, to be paid out of any money not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That the money to be drawn shall not exceed the sum of $20,000.

I move that it be stricken out.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEY. I should like to know whether the Committee on Roads and Canals recommended the passage of this bill.

Mr. MILLER. The committee authorized me to make the report without taking action for or against it. The question was in regard to the second section, and that has been stricken out. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 20; no quorum voting.

Mr. BERGEN demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MILLER and Mr. DELANO were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—yeas 58, noes 18; no quorum voting. Mr. FINCK demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read the third time, it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 70, nays 24, not voting 90; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anderson, Baker, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Davis, Dawes, Delano, Dixon, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Abner C. Harding, Hayes, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, Jenckes, Julian, Kasson, Kelcham, Koontz, Kuykendall, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, Lynch, Maynard, McClure, McRuer, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Moulton, Myers, O'Neill, Paine, Perlman, Plants, Price, Samuel J. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Stevens, Stokes, Trowbridge, Ward, Wentworth, Williams, and Windom—70.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, DeLoes, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Hogan, Johnson, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Niblack, Nicholson, Radford, Ritter, Ross, Shanklin, Taber, Nelson Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, James F. Wilson, Winfield, and Woodbridge—24.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Delos B. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Blow, Boyer, Brundage, Bundy, Chandler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Cullom, Culver, Darling, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Dodge, Dumont, Farnsworth, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Hart, Henderson, Hill, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Jones, Kelley, Kelso, Kerr, Latham, Loan, Longyear, Marshall, Marston, Marvin, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, Mereu, Morris, Newell, Noell, Orth, Patterson, Phelps, Pike, Pomeroy, William H. Randall, Raymond, Rogers, Sawyer, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stillwell, Strouse, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Upton, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Whaley, Stephen F. Wilson, and Wright—90.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. FINCK. I move to lay the bill on the table.

The motion was disagreed to.

The bill was then read the third time and passed.

Mr. MILLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REFUNDING OF FINES.

Mr. HOGAN. I ask unanimous consent to report, from the Committee of Ways and Means, a bill (H. R. No. 769) to authorize the refunding of certain fines.

The bill was read. It provides that where the license tax imposed upon any wholesale dealer has been collected upon the amount of such dealer's sales for the previous year, in accordance with the terms of the seventy-ninth section of the act approved June 30, 1864, and it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that the sales of such license did not equal in amount the sales of such previous year, it shall be lawful for the said Commissioner to refund to such wholesale dealer so much of the amount paid for such license as may be in excess of the proper tax chargeable upon the amount of sales actually made under such license during the year for which the same was issued.

Mr. HOGAN. This bill is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. I ask that the letter of the Commissioner be read.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can move to refer it to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOGAN. Very well. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced to the House that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 138) to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

MEMBER SWORN IN.

Mr. FINCK. I rise to a question of privilege. I ask that Mr. COOPER be sworn in as a member from the State of Tennessee.

Mr. EDMUND COOPER accordingly came forward, and having qualified, by taking the oath of office prescribed by the act of July 2, 1862, took his seat in the House.

REWARDS FOR ARREST OF BOOTH.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I call for the regular order.

The House accordingly resumed the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 801, authorizing the payment of the rewards offered by the President of the United States and the officers of the War Department in April and May, 1865, for the capture of Jefferson Davis and the assassins of the late President, Abraham Lincoln, and the Secretary of State, Hon. William H. Seward.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HOTCHKISS] who has charge of this bill is not present.

Mr. DELANO. I move to postpone it till to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour having now commenced, the call of the committees is resumed, commencing with the Committee on the Judiciary.

CIRCUIT COURT COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. BOUTWELL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with the recommendation that it do pass, bill of the House No. 32, to extend the jurisdiction of commissioners of the circuit court of the United States.

Mr. JENCKES. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts explain the object of this bill?

Mr. BOUTWELL. It is merely to give the commissioners the same power as justices of the peace have in cases where seamen undertake to avoid their contracts. It is a proper bill to be passed, and I move the previous question upon it.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. JENCKES. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

The question was put; and there were—yeas 24, noes 70.

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. BOUTWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I move to amend the title of the bill so as to read, "An act to extend the jurisdiction of the commissioners of the circuit courts of the United States."

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROVISIONAL COURT OF LOUISIANA.

Mr. BOUTWELL also, from the same committee, reported back, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and with the recommendation that it do pass, bill of the House No. 468, to provide for the suits, judgments, and business of the United States provisional court for the State of Louisiana, and called for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The substitute was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. BOUTWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES REVENUE COURTS.

Mr. BOUTWELL also, from the same committee, reported back with the recommendation that it do not pass, bill of the House No. 287, to establish United States revenue courts, and for other purposes, and moved that the same be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

RIGHTS OF CITIZENS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, from the same committee, reported back, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, bill of the House No. 437, to declare and protect all the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States in the several States.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not desire to have the substitute read or acted upon at this time. The bill is of such a nature as to excite discussion, and I do not desire to occupy the morning hour, inasmuch as other members of the committee have numerous bills to report. I will merely state that this is a bill that was introduced by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHELLABARGER,] and that the substitute is substantially his bill with slight amendments. I move to postpone the consideration of the bill until the second Tuesday in December next.

Mr. SHELLABARGER. I think that under the circumstances in which we are now placed the committee have done wisely in recommending the postponement of this bill. I desire now to ask the leave of the House to have printed with the debates some remarks, which I have prepared as carefully as I could, in regard to the constitutional right of Congress to pass this bill, and also in regard to the propriety of doing so. I desire, if I can, to attract the attention of my fellow-members in that way to the bill, and also, as far as I am able to do it, to call the attention of the country to it.

No objection was made, and leave was accordingly granted. [The speech will be found in the Appendix.]

The motion to postpone was then agreed to.

GENERAL GEORGE WRIGHT.

On motion of Mr. WOODBRIDGE, the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from the further consideration of the bill of the House No. 578, for the relief of the representatives of the late Brigadier General George Wright, United States Army; and the same was laid on the table.

WISCONSIN JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

On motion of Mr. WOODBRIDGE, the Committee on the Judiciary were discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin in relation to dividing the State of Wisconsin into two judicial districts, and to create the western district; and the same was laid on the table.

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' ORPHANS' HOME.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with an amendment, the bill of the House No. 552, to incorporate the National Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home, District of Columbia.

The amendment was to amend the last section so that it would read:

That Congress may at any time hereafter alter, amend, or repeal this act.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I call the previous question on the bill and amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FEMALE ORPHAN ASYLUM.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the trustees of the Female Orphan Asylum, of Georgetown, and the Washington City Orphan Asylum, of the District of Columbia," passed May 24, 1828; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL TELEGRAPHIC ASSOCIATION.

On motion of Mr. WOODBRIDGE, the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 237, to incorporate the National Telegraphic Union Association; which was laid on the table.

WILLIAM JOSLIN.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back House bill No. 584, for the relief of William Joslin, with a recommendation that the same do pass.

The bill was read at length. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to issue to William Joslin, of the State of Vermont, bonds of the United States to the amount of $5,230 in lieu of an equal amount of bonds alleged to have been destroyed by fire while in possession of said Joslin, as owner and trustee for others, provided satisfactory evidence shall be furnished to the Secretary of the Treasury of the destruction of the bonds so claimed to have been destroyed.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. For one, I am opposed to any such legislation.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I will explain the object of the bill in a few words. I am aware that there is a feeling in this House, heretofore developed, that in cases of the destruction of bonds of the United States other bonds in lieu thereof should not be issued. But the facts in this case are peculiar, and as to the loss of the bonds conclusive. Mr. Joslin is a citizen of the town where I reside. He had in a box $5,250 in United States bonds, but did not have the numbers of them. If he had had the numbers they would have been duplicated by the Treasurer of the United States. A fire occurred during a very windy night. He rushed to the place where the box was deposited in which these bonds were placed, and took it with him. He then went to another room with the box, for the purpose of obtaining some valuable papers there. But he was driven from the room by the flames, and was obliged to leave the box and papers there, and they were destroyed with everything that he had. The box and the papers were of course consumed. But a watch that was in the box with these bonds, was found in the ruins as soon as they could be examined. There is no doubt about the loss of these bonds.

Now, every member here knows that if the papers had consisted of notes against persons, a recovery could be had upon them. If bank bills had been destroyed, and the proof of their destruction had been as full as is the proof of the destruction of these bonds, then the banks at a suit of law would be obliged to refund the money which had been destroyed. Now, this is a case eminently just. The Government can suffer no loss. These are notes which the Government has issued; they are evidences of indebtedness which, beyond all controversy, have been destroyed by fire. And is it fair and honorable for us to say that when by an act of Providence property of that kind is destroyed, the Government of the United States will absolutely cheat the owners outright?

Sir, the cases should be met as they come up, one after the other. They should be subjected to the closest scrutiny; and when it is determined that the property is absolutely destroyed, and that the Government can lose nothing, there should be no hesitation on the part of the Government in meeting its just debts, or renewing the evidence of its indebtedness. If we refuse to do this, we are not acting in the manner in which we deal with one another as neighbors and business men. If there should be presented to any gentleman of this House proof that the evidence of a debt for which he was justly bound had been destroyed, he would at once come forward and renew the evidence of indebtedness. This bill simply proposes that the Government shall do what every one acknowledges ought always to be done as between man and man.

Mr. JENCKES. I desire to ask the gentleman whether the bill provides that the claimant shall give a bond of indemnity to the Government.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. The bill does not in its terms provide for a bond of indemnity, because it is not known what were the numbers of these bonds. They were held by the gentleman, a portion for himself, a portion as guardian for two young children, and a portion as agent for a widow.

Mr. JENCKES. If the Government issues new evidences of indebtedness, why should it not require a bond of indemnity against any further claim?

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. Because the proof of the loss of the bonds is so conclusive that no gentleman investigating the circumstances could doubt it.

Mr. JENCKES. But there is no proof before the House now.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I have no sort of objection to a provision requiring that a bond shall be given. But the bill now requires that the Secretary of the Treasury shall, before duplicating these bonds, be convinced beyond the shadow of a doubt that the bonds were destroyed. All the proof must be made to the Secretary of the Treasury before the bonds are duplicated. When men have stood by the nation, assisting it by investing their money in the national securities, and have had the misfortune to have those securities destroyed, why should the Government commit the gross injustice of refusing to duplicate the evidences of its indebtedness?

Mr. SPALDING. We have no doubt as to the equity of duplication of the evidence of indebtedness in such a case as the gentleman describes. What we want is to be satisfied that this is such a case, and that proper provision is made so that the Government can protect itself.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. The proof is as conclusive as any the gentleman ever had before him as a lawyer or judge.

Mr. SPALDING. Has the gentleman any description of the bonds at all?

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I have all the description that can be given. These bonds were purchased and put into the hands of this gentleman, a part of them as the guardian of these children; and he does not know the numbers. Proof is to be made to the Secretary of the Treasury, who is to be satisfied beyond doubt that the bonds have been lost. Why should we refuse to do justice in a case like this?

Mr. SPALDING. I wish to know whether these bonds can be identified, so that the Government can be protected from loss if the bonds are still outstanding.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. The bonds cannot be identified, because the gentleman cannot state the numbers.

Mr. SPALDING. Then of course it must be his loss.

Mr. DELANO. Will the gentleman from Vermont yield to me for a few moments?

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. DELANO. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise for the purpose of opposing this measure; but I desire to say to the gentleman from Vermont and to the House that it involves a question which ought to be considered with great deliberation. The question has been before the Committee of Claims; and the applications of this sort are very numerous indeed. There are now on record in the Treasury Department cases in which it is shown that securities—

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. With the leave of the gentleman from Ohio, I will move to amend the bill by adding a provision that a satisfactory bond shall be given to the Secretary of the Treasury to secure the Government against any loss.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If the gentleman will yield a moment, I wish to state that this report does not come to the House with the indorsement or recommendation of the committee from which it comes. The committee consented that the gentleman might report the bill; but I do not wish it to be understood that the Committee on the Judiciary indorse the bill.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I do not desire to misrepresent the committee. I understood some members of the committee were in favor of the bill. It may be as a special favor to me I was permitted to report it for the action of the House.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That is correct.

Mr. DELANO. I want to state to the House that the conclusion arrived at by the Committee of Claims of the Senate, as well as of the House, after consulting the officers of the Treasury, was that it is not safe for the Government to attempt to duplicate the securities of the United States which are in circulation; that it is not safe to duplicate in any case where the numbers of the securities cannot be given; and that even then there should be, as I understand there is in this case, before the committee, clear and exclusive evidence of the destruction of the bonds. Then the Government is safe. I do not rise to oppose this measure. There is not a member on this floor I would sooner accommodate than the gentleman from Vermont, but I am constrained to say, as the sense of the Committee of Claims, that I doubt the propriety of duplicating the securities of the Government where the numbers cannot be given. That is the only absolute safety the Government has in the premises.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I move to add that a bond satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury shall be given by the claimant to secure the United States against any other claim for the bonds alleged to be lost.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The House divided on the passage of the bill; and there were—ayes 58, noes 36.

Mr. COBB demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. BUCKLAND stated that Hon. JOHN W. LEFTWICH, member-elect from Tennessee, was present and desired to be sworn in.

Mr. LEFTWICH appeared at the Speaker's desk, and was accordingly sworn in.

NEPOTISM.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill to regulate the appointment of clerks and commissioners of bail; which was read a first and second time.

It provides that it shall not hereafter be lawful for any judge of the circuit or the district courts of the United States to appoint or commission to the office of clerk or commissioner of bail in either of said courts any person or persons who may be connected with either of said judges by blood or marriage.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is the design of the bill to do away with that nepotism known to every lawyer as existing under our judicial system. It is in analogy to legislation in some of the States.

Mr. JOHNSON. It seems to me we are going abroad when we neglect to remedy the evil at home here. We find many members who have sons and brothers and wives' brothers employed here. It is the same in reference to the Departments: the heads of Departments and bureaus employ their blood relatives. When we clear our own skirts it will be time to go elsewhere.

Mr. O'NEILL. I hope my colleague will yield to my other colleague to move an amendment embracing the cases to which he has referred.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If my colleague [Mr. JOHNSON] thinks the evil is past cure I do not. If he will put an amendment in shape I will accept it. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and being engrossed it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. WILLIAMS demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. WILLIAMS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUNISHMENT OF CRIMES.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back House bill No. 604, defining and punishing certain crimes therein named, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was read. It provides that any person who shall rob another of any personal property belonging to the United States, or shall steal or purloin any personal property of the United States, shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine not exceeding fourfold the value of such property, or by imprisonment not more than twenty years, or both. It also provides that any person who shall willfully obstruct the passage of any locomotive, tender, car, or carriage on which is being transported any mail, troops, or property of the United States, shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000, or imprisonment not exceeding twenty years, or both.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I demand the previous question.

Mr. LE BLOND. I would like my colleague to explain what the particular necessity of this bill is. It does seem to me as though it is going too far. It fixes the punishment of imprisonment for a term of years for larceny of property that may not be worth five dollars. It takes jurisdiction from the State courts and confers it upon the Federal courts, where a person willfully obstructs the passage of a train of cars containing the United States mail, though the laws of the States are ample for the punishment of the offense.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I hope my colleague will consume no more time. We have but a few moments left for our committee.

Mr. LE BLOND. I do not wish to consume time. I am certain the House will do me the credit to say that I have not taken upon myself the running of this machine. I only wish the House to know what we are doing before we undertake to pass bills that are calculated to upset the criminal code of the United States. Bills are brought in here without being printed, and members have no opportunity to look at them.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. This bill contains two sections. The first makes it a penal offense to rob any person of property which belongs to the United States; or to steal any personal property which belongs to the United States. There is now no act of Congress which makes this a penal offense. We make violations of the rights of the United States, in many respects, penal offenses; but this particular act, described in the first section, is not made such by law. There is, in my judgment, no objection to the bill, and I demand the previous question.

Mr. LE BLOND. Does it not do away with the difference between petit and grand larceny?

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. There is now no distinction between petit and grand larceny by the statutes of the United States.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RESTORATION OF CONFISCATED LANDS.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill to restore the possession of lands confiscated by the authorities of the States lately in rebellion; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read in full. It provides that in all cases any loyal citizen of the United States who may have been dispossessed of any lands or tenements belonging to him within any of the States lately in rebellion by any order or decree of the so-called confederate government on account of adherence to the cause of the Union, or absence or failure to give support to the rebellion, it shall be the duty of the President of the United States or of the military force within the district, on complaint in writing by such person, accompanied by satisfactory evidence of title, to restore such person to the possession of the rights of which he has been deprived, and protect him in their enjoyment by such force as may be necessary.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I decline to yield.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Then I move to lay the bill on the table. It confers power upon the military commanders to decide upon questions of—

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. TRIMBLE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 24, nays 81, not voting 81; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Cooper, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Hogan, Johnson, Kerr, Le Blond, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Strouse, Taber, Thornton, Trimble, and Winfield—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Baker, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Buckland, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Culom, Davis, Dawes, DeForest, Dixon, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farguhar, Ferry, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Hubbard, Jonckes, Julian, Kelley, Ketchum, Koontz, Laflin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Lynch, Maynard, McClurg, Mercer, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morris, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Plants, Price, Raymond, Rollins, Sawyer, Scofield, Shellabarger, Spalding, Stevens, Stokes, Nathaniel G. Taylor, John L. Thomas, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward, Welker, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—81.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Beaman, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Culver, Darling, Dawson, Delano, Deming, Denison, Dodge, Donnelly, Dumont, Garfield, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Henderson, Hill, Asabel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Humphrey, Ingersoll, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Kuykendall, Latham, Leftwich, Longyear, Marshall, Marston, Marvin, McIndoe, McKee, Morrill, Moulton, Noel, Patterson, Phelps, Pike, Pomerooy, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rogers, Schenck, Shanklin, Sitzgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stillwell, Nelson Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, and Wright—81.

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. WILLIAMS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JUDICIAL COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back bill of the House No. 605, to amend an act to establish the judicial courts of the United States, approved September 24, 1789.

The bill was read. The first section provides that the several courts of the United States, and the several justices and judges of such courts, in addition to the authority already conferred by law, shall have power to grant writs of habeas corpus in all cases where any person may be restrained of his or her liberty in violation of the Constitution, or of any treaty or law of the United States. And if any person or persons to whom such writ of habeas corpus may be directed shall refuse to obey the same, or shall neglect or refuse to make return, or shall make a false return thereto, in addition to the remedies already given by law, he or they shall be deemed and taken to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction before any court of competent jurisdiction, be punished by fine not exceeding $1,000, and by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by either, according to the nature and aggravation of the case. From the final decision of any judge, justice, or court, inferior to the circuit court, an appeal may be taken to the circuit court of the United States for the district in which said cause is heard, and from the judgment of said circuit court to the Supreme Court of the United States, on such terms and under such regulations and orders, as well for the custody and appearance of the person alleged to be restrained of his or her liberty as for sending up to the appellate tribunal a transcript of the petition, writ of habeas corpus, return thereto, and other proceedings, as may be prescribed by the Supreme Court, or in default of such, as the judge hearing said cause may prescribe, and pending such proceedings or appeal, and until final judgment be rendered therein, and after final judgment of discharge in the same, and proceeding against such person so alleged to be restrained of his or her liberty in any State court, or by or under the authority of any State, for any matter or thing so heard and determined, or in process of being heard and determined, under and by virtue of such writ of habeas corpus, shall be deemed null and void.

The second section provides that a final judgment or decree in any suit in the highest court of a State in which a decision in the suit could be had, where is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of, or an authority exercised under, the United States, and the decision is against their validity, or where is drawn in question the validity of a statute of, or an authority exercised under any State, on the ground of their being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision is in favor of such their validity, or where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is claimed under the Constitution, or any treaty or statute of, or commission held or authority exercised under the United States, and the decision is against the title, right, privilege, or immunity specially set up or claimed by either party under such Constitution, treaty, statute, commission, or authority, may be reexamined and reversed or affirmed in the Supreme Court of the United States, upon a writ of error, the citation being signed by the chief justice, or judge, or chancellor of the court, rendering or passing the judgment or decree complained of, or by a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the same manner, and under the same regulations, and the writ shall have the same effect as if the judgment or decree complained of had been rendered or passed in a court of the United States; and the proceeding upon the reversal shall also be the same, except that the Supreme Court may, at their discretion, proceed to a final decision of the same, and award execution, or remand the same to any inferior court.

The committee reported the following amendment:

"Amend section one by inserting after the words 'United States,' in line eight, the following:

"And it shall be lawful for such person so restrained of his or her liberty to apply to either of said justices or judges for a writ of habeas corpus, which application shall be in writing and verified by affidavit, and shall set forth the facts concerning the detention of the party applying, in whose custody he or she is detained, and by virtue of what claim or authority, if known, and the said justice or judge to whom such application shall be made shall forthwith award a writ of habeas corpus, unless it shall appear from the petition itself that the party is not deprived of his or her liberty in contravention of the Constitution or laws of the United States. Said writ shall be directed to the person in whose custody the party is detained, who shall make return of said writ and bring the party before the judge who granted the writ, and certify the true cause of the detention of such person within three days thereafter, unless such person be detained beyond the distance of twenty miles, and if beyond the distance of twenty miles and not above one hundred miles, then within ten days. And if beyond the distance of one hundred miles, then within twenty days. And upon the return of the writ of habeas corpus a day shall be set for the hearing of the cause, not exceeding five days thereafter, unless the party petitioning shall request a longer time. The petitioner may deny any of the material facts set forth in the return, or may allege any fact to show that the detention is in contravention of the Constitution or laws of the United States, which allegations or denials shall be made on oath. The said return may be amended by leave of the court or judge before or after the same is filed, as also may all suggestions made against it, that thereby the material facts may be ascertained. The said court or judge shall proceed in a summary way to determine the facts of the case, by hearing testimony and the arguments of the parties interested, and if it shall appear that the petitioner is deprived of his or her liberty in contravention of the Constitution or laws of the United States, he or she shall forthwith be discharged and set at liberty.

The committee further proposed to amend the second section of the bill by adding thereto the following:

"This act shall not apply to the case of any person who is or may be held in the custody of the military authorities of the United States, charged with any military offense, or with having aided or abetted rebellion against the Government of the United States prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I demand the previous question on the bill and the amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. LE BLOND. I desire to inquire of the gentleman who reported this bill whether in case a person who is not bound to perform service in the Army or Navy is taken possession of by the Government, he is cut off from the benefit of the writ of habeas corpus under this bill.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I think not. I will state briefly what the object of the bill is.

Mr. LE BLOND. The idea suggested itself to my mind that the bill was not broad enough to cover that class of persons. If it is not, it ought to be. I believe the doctrine is pretty well settled, or if not it very soon will be, that the military authorities have no jurisdiction over private citizens. Every citizen owing military service may be dealt with by the military authorities, but a private citizen not owing such service, unless he violates some military regulation, is amenable to the civil law only.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. This has no relation to that subject at all.

Mr. LE BLOND. The second section looked to me as if it went that far.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I will explain. On the 19th of December last, my colleague [Mr. SHELLABARGER] introduced a resolution instructing the Judiciary Committee to inquire and report to the House as soon as practicable, by bill or otherwise, what legislation is necessary to enable the courts of the United States to enforce the freedom of the wife and children of soldiers of the United States, and also to enforce the liberty of all persons. Judge Ballard, of the district court of Kentucky, decided that there was no act of Congress giving courts of the United States jurisdiction to enforce the rights and liberties of such persons. In pursuance of that resolution of my colleague this bill has been introduced, the effect of which is to enlarge the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, and make the jurisdiction of the courts and judges of the United States coextensive with all the powers that can be conferred upon them. It is a bill of the largest liberty, and does not interfere with persons in military custody, or restrain the writ of habeas corpus at all. I am satisfied there will not be a solitary objection to this bill if it is understood by the House.

Mr. LE BLOND. I call for the reading of the second section as it is proposed to be amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That a final judgment or decree in any suit in the highest court of a State in which a decision in the suit could be had, where is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of or an authority exercised under the United States, and the decision is against their validity, or where is drawn in question the validity of a statute or of an authority exercised under any State, on the ground of their being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, and the decision is in favor of such their validity, or where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is claimed under the Constitution, or any treaty or statute of or commission held or authority exercised under the United States, and the decision is against the title, right, privilege, or immunity specially set up or claimed by either party under such Constitution, treaty, statute, commission, or authority, may be reexamined and reversed or affirmed in the Supreme Court of the United States, upon a writ of error, the citation being signed by the chief justice or judge or chancellor of the court rendering or passing the judgment or decree complained of, or by a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the same manner, and under the same regulations, and the writ shall have the same effect as if the judgment or decree complained of had been rendered or passed in a court of the United States; and the proceeding upon the reversal shall also be the same, except that the Supreme Court may, at their discretion, proceed to a final decision of the same, and award execution, or remand the same to any inferior court. This act shall not apply to the case of any person who is or may be held in the custody of the military authorities of the United States, charged with any military offense, or with having aided or abetted rebellion against the Government of the United States prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. LE BLOND. If I understand this section aright, it is that all those held by the military are not entitled to the privileges of this act. I confess that it is exceedingly difficult for us to determine the scope of the bill.

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent of the House that the Judiciary Committee have another hour in which to make reports.

Mr. ROSS. I object. I think we have had enough bills from that committee.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Then I will ask for a half an hour more for that committee.

Mr. LE BLOND. I am compelled to object, from the fact that we have no opportunity to consider and understand the bills that are brought in here.

NATIONAL BANK BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of House bill No. 771, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States stocks, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," and for other purposes.

The pending question, upon which Mr. LYNCH was entitled to the floor, was upon the amendment offered by him, to insert the following:

Provided, however, That the appointment of such receiver shall be vacated and the Comptroller shall be enjoined and restrained from further proceedings in the premises under this section, if the nearest district, circuit, or territorial court of the United States shall, on application of such association, made within ten days after it shall have been notified of such appointment and upon hearing of the case, so order.

Mr. LYNCH. I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PAINE] for a few moments.

Mr. PAINE. I move to substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LYNCH] the following:

Provided, however, That the appointment of such receiver shall be vacated, and the Comptroller shall be enjoined and restrained from further proceedings in the premises under this section, if the nearest district, circuit, or territorial court of the United States shall so order, on application of such association, made within ten days after it shall have been notified of such appointment, and after the decision of the court or the finding of a jury that such association has not been guilty of any of the violations of law on account of which such receiver shall have been appointed.

Mr. LYNCH. I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. PAINE.]

Mr. CONKLING. I agree entirely with the purpose of this amendment, but I wish to submit to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LYNCH] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PAINE] that if this amendment shall be adopted they will have rather an extraordinary act. The fiftieth section of the bank act is referred to as covering and controlling the course of proceeding in this regard; and yet they propose here to repeal a large part of that fiftieth section. Now, I would suggest that altogether the briefer and plainer way of disposing of this would be to provide that this proceeding shall be subject to the remedy by appeal now existing by the fiftieth section of the national currency act. That certainly covers the whole ground and obviates the necessity of repeating the same provision twice in the statute. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] hands me a proviso which I believe covers the suggestion I make, though I think it can be covered even more briefly. In order to test the sense of the House, I will move, as a substitute for the proposed amendment, to insert after the words "according to" in the forty-seventh line on the third page these words: "and with the same remedy and subject to the same right of application to the courts as provided."

Mr. PRICE. Let me suggest whether it would not be better to say, "as provided by the proviso of section fifty."

Mr. CONKLING. In answer to that I will say that the proviso is a part of the section; and it is the only place in the section where the subject is referred to. Therefore my amendment meets the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. HOOPEL, of Massachusetts. I concur with the gentleman from New York in his suggestion; and I hope his amendment will be adopted.

ARMY BILL.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (S. No. 138) to reorganize the Army, and that we ask for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL BANK BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. PAINE. Mr. Speaker, I suppose that we are all seeking to accomplish the same object; but I am compelled to disagree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. CONKLING] in respect to the amendment which he has submitted. Now, sir, section fifty of the present law provides for a case in which the bank shall have refused to redeem its circulating notes; and it authorizes the Comptroller of the Currency to appoint a receiver to wind up the affairs of the bank; and it is provided that if the bank shall satisfy the chancellor that it has not refused to redeem its circulating notes, an injunction shall be issued, and the receiver shall be restrained. If the amendment suggested by the gentleman from New York should be adopted, what will be the result? Let us take a case in which the Comptroller shall have undertaken to close up the affairs of a bank, either because that bank was not carrying on a legitimate banking business, or because it has rendered false or fraudulent reports, or because its funds have been misapplied, or because it has violated some other provision of law. If the amendment be adopted, then, although the Comptroller shall have commenced proceedings against this banking institution for one of the reasons I have named, the institution may come in and show—what? Not that it has been innocent of any violation of law in either of the four particulars I have named, but that it has not violated the law in a fifth particular, which is not covered by this case. Suppose, for example, that the Comptroller shall institute these proceedings because the bank has rendered false accounts. The bank comes in and shows that it has not refused to redeem its circulating notes; and then further proceedings may be restrained by injunction. I can see no propriety in this. If proceedings had been commenced by the Comptroller against the bank and a receiver had been appointed, because the bank had rendered false accounts, then it seems to me that the only manner in which the bank should be allowed to escape from those proceedings should be by showing that it has not rendered false accounts. But if you adopt the amendment the bank, by showing that it has not refused to redeem its circulating notes, may relieve itself from proceedings instituted against it because it has rendered false accounts. So if proceedings have been instituted against a bank because it has not been carrying on a legitimate banking business, the bank can come in and show that it has not refused to redeem its circulating notes; and all the proceedings of the Comptroller and receiver may be restrained.

Now, I have offered an amendment which applies to all four of these cases—which applies precisely the same remedy in these four cases that is applied in the other case, when a bank has refused to redeem its circulating notes. The provision of my amendment is that if the bank shall come in and show it is carrying on a legitimate business when it shall be charged with not carrying on such a business, it shall be relieved from all proceedings of the receiver. If it shall show it has not rendered a false account it shall be relieved from these proceedings. If it shows its funds have not been misapplied the amendment will relieve the bank.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I quite agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin in his view of this subject. This amendment was put in by the committee after careful consideration, not for the purpose of reaching honest banks, not banks doing a legitimate business, but banks doing an unlawful and fraudulent business. I admit the provision of this clause is summary. So it should be in the case of men who are violating the national banking law. I think the amendment proposed by the committee had better be allowed to pass as it is. I hope the House will give no opportunity to these banks like the Merchants' Bank of this city, which swore through thick and thin, and no Comptroller could reach them. It is such banks which it is intended to reach, and not the banks doing a lawful business.

Mr. LYNCH. I wish to call the gentleman's attention, if he were in the committee, to the discussion which took place on this question. It was the intention to give the banks the right to appeal to the courts under the proviso. The proviso was not carefully read. If it had been the committee would have seen it does not apply to the case. This is to make that apply to the case.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I do not remember distinctly the discussion in the committee. Perhaps the gentleman is correct. I know what my object was. It was to reach in a summary manner and put an end to those dishonest banks, and not let them appeal to the courts. I am unable to speak of the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin, as I have not heard it read.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. CONKLING. If there is any difficulty about the amendment I will modify it by adding at the end of line forty-eight the words "and on such application the bank may relieve itself by disproving the allegations on which said receiver was appointed." If debate were in order I could show that would cover the whole ground.

Mr. PAINE. It does not cover the whole ground.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment, as amended, was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section twenty-nine be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that the total liabilities to any national banking association of any person or of any firm, company, or corporation, including in the liability of any firm or company the liabilities of the several members thereof, shall at no time exceed one tenth part of the amount of the capital stock of such association actually paid in, unless such liabilities consist of bona fide bills of exchange or drafts payable at another place than where it is drawn, and drawn against actually existing values, or of commercial or business paper discounted for the indorser and actually owned by the person, firm, company, or corporation for whom it is discounted; including all balances due from any person, firm, company, or corporation, except balances due from another national banking association, and no association shall issue any certificate, receipt, or other obligation payable at any future day, nor advertise, solicit, or receive deposits as a savings bank. And in case of any violation of this section, the president and cashier and directors shall be personally liable to the association for any loss incurred by the association on the excess of liability beyond the amount of one tenth of the capital stock as aforesaid; and the association shall be subject to a penalty of $1,000 for every case in which the liability of any person, firm, company, or corporation, as aforesaid, is in excess of one tenth part of the amount actually paid in of the capital stock of such association, to be recovered to the use of the United States and deposited in the Treasury, and a like penalty for any certificate, receipt, or other obligation issued as aforesaid, or for advertising, soliciting, or receiving deposits as a savings bank.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I move the following amendment, to come in before the paragraph just read:

Strike out "three" in line three of section twenty-two, and insert "four;" and insert at end of section: "And provided further, That these said notes additional to the three hundred millions authorized to be issued under the act entitled 'An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof,' shall only be issued upon the return to the Treasury to be canceled of United States notes bearing the same proportion to said notes for circulation as the capital of the bank presenting said United States notes shall bear to the circulation to which it may be entitled under said act and the several acts amendatory thereof, and for which United States notes so returned to the Treasury to be canceled, the Secretary of the Treasury shall issue at par bonds of the United States in the form now authorized by law payable not more than twenty years from date, and bearing a rate of interest not exceeding five per cent. in gold, and thereupon such United States notes so returned shall be canceled by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided further, That any existing bank or banking association organized under the laws of any State which shall apply for authority to become a national bank under the act hereby amended before the 1st day of October, 1866, and shall comply with all the requirements of said act, as hereby amended, shall, if such bank be found by the Comptroller of the Currency to be in good standing and credit receive authority to become a national bank, and banks of unimpaired capital in States which have heretofore received the least ratable amount of circulating notes under the provisions of said act shall have preference in receiving such authority: And provided further, That the entire amount of circulating notes to be delivered to banks thus converted from State banks to national associations, shall not exceed $30,000,000, and in the organization of new associations preference shall be given to applications for association in such States and Territories as have heretofore failed to secure their ratable proportion of circulating notes under the provisions of said acts so as to equalize the apportionment of the whole four hundred millions of circulating notes."

I will state that I offer this on behalf of the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, [Mr. POMEROY,] who was obliged to leave. He was unable to confer with any member of the committee who held the same views on this question, but he left this amendment with me with a request that I would offer it. The substance of the amendment is, that it substitutes ninety millions of national currency for the same amount of greenbacks. It enables the State institutions now in existence to change to national institutions and have sufficient circulation to prosecute their business. It was suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] yesterday that the theory of his bill was, that for all time to come we should have only three hundred millions of paper currency in circulation in this country.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I beg to correct the gentleman; I said for national bank circulation.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. With that correction I believe I understand the views of the gentleman. National bank circulation is redeemable in specie, or I trust in a short time will be. National currency is not. I apprehend we shall have in coin in due time a sufficient specie basis for the currency of the country. At least we ought to have, and if we shape legislation properly we shall have. There is a great anxiety to retire greenbacks in order that we may return to specie payment. The objection to doing that is that it reduces the volume of currency too rapidly. The amendment offered by me obviates that objection; it also obviates the objection that we have an irredeemable paper currency.

In regard to the question of reducing the volume of our currency to three hundred millions, it is, in my estimate, impracticable. We have now in circulation about one thousand millions of paper currency, exclusive of $800,000,000 of seven-thirties, which pass from hand to hand as circulating medium to a great extent. The volume of currency now in circulation is as follows:

National currency.....	$300,000,000
Greenbacks.....	409,801,368
Fractional currency.....	27,070,878
Compound-interest notes.....	159,012,140
State bank notes.....	45,000,000
Total.....	$931,974,384

How we are going to come down to $300,000,000 without great distress in the country is more than I can see. I think that this amendment would relieve all the parties interested, would relieve the business of the country from embarrassment, and enable the Government to return to specie payments, and enable the banks to return to specie payment.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I wish to say that the gentleman from New York is mistaken in stating that his colleague, [Mr. POMEROY,] the chairman of the committee, had no opportunity to bring this question before the committee.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not say so. My statement was that the chairman had to leave for home, and that before doing so he had no opportunity to confer with any of the members of the committee who harmonized with him in his views.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. The reason was that there was no member of the committee who harmonized with him in his views.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I was only explaining why I offered the amendment.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. The object of the amendment is to withdraw $100,000,000 of greenbacks and give the benefit of that amount of circulation to the banks. It would cost the Government from five to six million dollars annually to do it. The committee were unanimous, with the exception of the chairman, in their opposition to any such measure, and I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. ROSS. I move to amend the amendment by adding thereto the following proviso:

Provided, however, That hereafter no bonds or obligations of the United States shall be issued which are exempt from State, county, or municipal taxation.

I think it is time that there was a concurrence of sentiment between the members of the House and myself upon this subject.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I do not think this amendment is in order at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it is not germane to the amendment, and an amendment to an amendment must be germane.

Mr. ROSS. It is germane to the bill.

The SPEAKER. That may possibly be, but it certainly is not germane to the amendment. The Chair will reserve the question whether it is germane to the bill until he can examine the bill to see if it provides for the issuing of bonds. If it does the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois will be germane.

Mr. HOOPEL, of Massachusetts. The bill does not provide for the issue of any bonds.

The SPEAKER. Then the amendment is not germane.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. It is hardly necessary for me to add anything to what has been said by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPEL] in connection with this subject. The main feature of the amendment is to increase the banking circulation $100,000,000. The wish of the public is that the amount of the present circulation of the national banks should be reduced rather than increased, and that greenbacks should take their place. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to strike out all that part of the amendment which refers to the retiring of greenbacks. My opinion is that instead of the pernicious provisions of this bill curtailing the circulation ten per cent. it ought to provide for an increase of circulation. In my judgment this whole national banking system was a mistake. I thought so at the time it was adopted, and I think so still. I think every dollar of paper circulation ought to be issued by the Government of the United States. I think that the Government ought to have all the profit of such circulation, which would be more than $20,000,000 a year. I should have preferred that the gentleman from New York [Mr. POMEROY] had proposed there should have been $20,000,000 in greenback bearing no interest; but I am content. I know that the present circulation is not adequate to the business of the country. This bill is calculated to destroy all the interests of the country except those of a few metropolitan banks which seek to absorb all the business of the country. With the exception of the banks of Boston, New York, and Philadelphia, the amount will do no harm. If the amendment to the amendment which I have proposed should be adopted I will then vote for the amendment of the gentleman from New York, otherwise I shall be compelled to oppose it.

Mr. ROLLINS. I rise to oppose the amendment to the amendment. I desire to suggest to this House that it is necessary, at least in some parts of the country, that there should be provided additional banking facilities. Before making any remarks upon this subject I ask to have read some resolutions of the State of New Hampshire, approved July 7, 1866.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Whereas the banking capital of the State of New Hampshire, prior to the late war, was no more than sufficient to meet the ordinary wants of the business of the State; and whereas the advance in prices during the late war has made a much larger amount of capital necessary to afford the usual banking facilities to our business community; and whereas the change in our system of banking recently adopted by Congress has diminished our former facilities nearly three-fifths, thereby compelling many sound and much needed State banks to close up their business, and many of our business men to go out of the State to find banking facilities which were enjoyed to a greater extent elsewhere: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives in General Court convened. That our Senators be instructed, and our Representatives in Congress be requested, to give this subject their immediate attention, and urge upon Congress the necessity of granting to our State a larger amount of banking capital.

Resolved. That the Governor be requested to transmit, immediately, a copy of these resolutions to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of Congress, to the Secretary of the United States Treasury, to the Comptroller of the Currency, and to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress."

Mr. ROLLINS. I desire to say that the national Government having undertaken to regulate this matter of banking throughout the country, having undertaken to control entirely this subject, it seems to me it is our duty to give to the States of the Union sufficient banking facilities to enable the people thereof to do their business. We have passed a bill which has deprived the State of New Hampshire of three fifths of its banking facilities, leaving but two fifths of the same to accommodate the people in their constantly increasing business, with prices largely enhanced. In the year 1862 we had in New Hampshire fifty-two banks, organized under our State laws, with a capital of $4,928,700, a circulation of $3,249,693, and deposits to the amount of $1,207,289 13, thus enabling the banks to loan to the people of our State $8,168,977 42. Those were our banking facilities in 1862. In 1864, on the 1st day of June, we had fifty banks, with a capital of $4,595,500, a circulation of $4,294,787, and deposits to the amount of $1,714,089 39, making an aggregate of $10,604,876 39, while the loans were $9,271,391 54.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was upon the amendment of Mr. STEVENS to the amendment of Mr. POMEROY.

Mr. STEVENS. I will withdraw the amendment to the amendment if the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ROLLINS] will renew it.

Mr. ROLLINS. I renew the amendment to the amendment. I have stated the condition of our banks in 1864, and the amount of their loans, which were $1,332,984 85 less than the aggregate of their capital, circulation, and deposits. On the 1st day of April, 1866, we had thirty-nine national banks organized under the national bank law, with a capital of $4,735,000, and an authorized circulation of $4,171,500, though at that time but $3,325,591 of that circulation had been issued.

Now, what are the available means of our State? In 1862 we had a capacity to loan to the people more than $8,000,000, and in 1864 more than $9,000,000. And now what can the national banks organized under the bank law loan to the people of New Hampshire? There is a banking capital of $4,735,000, all loaned to the national Government to start with. The largest possible circulation under that capital, ninety per cent., will be $4,261,500, or an aggregate of capital and circulation of $8,996,500. To obtain this circulation they must hold Government bonds to the amount of $4,735,000. To enable part of the banks to become Government depositaries they have deposited $550,000 as a bond. They must reserve fifteen per cent. of their circulation, or $369,225. All these sums added together make $5,924,225, which, deducted from the $8,996,500, leaves the available amount of banking facilities afforded to the people of New Hampshire $3,072,275, against $9,271,391 54 in 1864, and $8,168,977 42 in 1862. I do not here allow anything to the ability of the banks to accommodate the people on account of deposits, because in 1864 the loans were only about two hundred and fifty thousand dollars larger than the amount of their capital stock and circulation, when nearly all the banks had a surplus of capital stock. It is quite probable the excess of loans above the whole amount of capital and circulation was nearly equaled by this surplus. The national banks being so recently put in operation have but a small accumulated surplus. Thus, it would seem, the ability of the banks to make loans cannot be much more than the amount of capital and circulation.

Mr. ALLEY. Will the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ROLLINS] permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ROLLINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLEY. I would ask the gentleman to state what, at the last report, was the amount of loans of the banks, national and State, in New Hampshire.

Mr. ROLLINS. I have not the figures at hand.

Mr. ALLEY. I think the gentleman will find that their facilities have not been reduced in the least. I think if he will look at the amount of loans of the banks of New Hampshire, State and national, he will find it as much as before the banking law went into operation.

Mr. ROLLINS. I think, Mr. Speaker, he will find no such thing. The Legislature of the State of New Hampshire has passed a series of resolutions—and I think it is to be presumed that the Legislature knows something of the available amount of capital in the banks of the State—declaring that three fifths of our banking facilities have been taken from us under the existing law. The banks organized under State law will be obliged to withdraw their circulation; and we shall have left to us the national banks, with ability to loan to our business people but a little more than $3,000,000, if every dollar is made available that is allowed to us under the law. Whatever the gentleman from Massachusetts may think, I know it to be a fact that we have now but two fifths of the banking facilities that we formerly had. I believe that it is the duty of the national Government to afford to us privileges equal to those of which we have been deprived by the legislation of the Government under which our State banks have been taxed out of existence. The uniform intent and design of the legislation of Congress in reference to the national banks has been to destroy the local institutions of the States, and, in my view, it is the duty of Congress to give us banking facilities equal to those of which we have been deprived. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. I renew the amendment. I desire to say that the proposition to reduce the amount of currency appears to me most unfortunate.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I rise to correct my colleague. This bill in no manner proposes to reduce the circulation to the extent of a single dollar.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, the country is not suffering from redundant currency. Why, sir, we must consider the increased requirements of the country in this respect. The amount of currency which was in circulation at the breaking out of the war would not be more than sufficient for the transaction of the business of the internal revenue department of our Government. Look at the immense payments made into and by that department, and you will find that it alone requires a volume of currency equal to that in circulation at the time of the breaking out of the war.

Sir, excessive circulation is not what stimulates prices. As well might you say that when the warehouses of Chicago and Milwaukee and New York are stored with flour it is attributable to an excessive number of plows. Currency is but the machinery of commerce, of petty commerce. You find it in the pocket of the traveler; you find it employed in all the minor uses of life. But when a cargo of goods or a warehouse gorged with wheat is paid for you use no currency; you draw checks or drafts representing deposits.

Sir, banking upon accumulated deposits is what gives us undue expansions in business and those periods of speculation whose termination is a crisis and a crash. Until we shall have a system of banking under which discounting upon deposits shall be restricted, we shall be liable to all the evils which we are now suffering. Whether the amount of currency be one half what it is now or thrice what it is now does not affect this question, but affects merely the convenience of making ordinary exchanges.

In the interior of Pennsylvania to-day the great want is an increased amount of currency. In the mining districts, men with large deposits in bank are unable to pay their laborers because they cannot get the necessary currency. An increased amount of circulation is needed that the laborer may receive his weekly or monthly wages, and be enabled to go to the store and settle his little accounts.

We need more currency and not contraction. Look at it. With the system of banking on deposits, when a man, a real capitalist, has more money than he feels it safe to use, he deposits it; that bank deposits it in one nearer the commercial center, and from there it goes to the commercial center; so that there are from ten to fifteen people operating on each deposit. The men who enter into wild adventures are stimulated by the bank directors to borrow their deposits. Shrewd, capable, business men, men of capital, see dangers around them and will not embark in business; they find it more profitable to let their funds lie in the banks at interest. The bank directors want to make interest out of them, and lend to what are called men of enterprise, men who will engage in speculations, and will take the risks that sensible men avoid.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, demanded the yeas and nays on the amendment as amended. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 28, nays 87, not voting 71; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barker, Sidney Clarke, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Farquhar, Hart, Hayes, Hotchkiss, Kelley, Leftwich, Loan, Marston, McClurg, Miller, Moorhead, Newell, Patterson, Rollins, Ross, Stevens, Nathaniel G. Taylor, John L. Thomas, Trimble, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Stephen F. Wilson, and Windom—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ancona, Baker, Banks, Baxter, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Boyer, Buckland, Cobb, Conkling, Cook, Cullom, Dawes, Dofrees, Delano, Dixon, Donnelly, Eldridge, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferry, Finck, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Hulbert, Jencks, Julian, Kasson, Kerr, Koontz, Kuykendall, Laffin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Lynch, Marshall, Maynard, McCullough, McRuer, Mercur, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Niblack, Nicholson, Orth, Paine, Perham, Phelps, Plants, Price, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, Ritter, Sawyer, Seofield, Shanklin, Shollabarger, Spalding, Stokes, Strouse, Taber, Nelson Taylor, Thornton, Trowbridge, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, James F. Wilson, and Winfield—87.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Beaman, Bergen, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Brownwell, Broomall, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Culver, Darling, Davis, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Dodge, Dumont, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Rice, Rogers, Schenck, Stigeraves, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stilwell, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Upson, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Woodbridge, and Wright—71.

So the amendment, as amended, was rejected.

PAY OF TENNESSEE MEMBERS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has received the following letter from the Sergeant-at-Arms:

SERGEANT-AT-ARMS'S OFFICE,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
WASHINGTON, D. C., July 26, 1866.

SIR: My attention has been called to the question of the payment of the members recently admitted from the State of Tennessee, and as I can only fill up certificates for pay and mileage under your direction I desire to be informed of the amount which you will certify to be due to each member.

I am, with respect, your obedient servant,

N. G. ORDWAY,

Sergeant-at-Arms House of Representatives.

Hon. SCHUYLER COLFAX,
Speaker House of Representatives.

As this embodies a new question, the Chair will refer it to the decision of the House.

Mr. STEVENS. There is no difficulty about it. These members were members from the commencement of this Congress, as it afterward turned out. I move they be allowed pay and mileage from that time.

Mr. DAWES. There can be no doubt about it. The precedents are all in favor of the motion. It was so in the Louisiana case and in all the others.

Mr. LOAN moved that the matter be referred to the Committee of Elections.

The motion to refer was disagreed to.

Mr. STEVENS's motion was adopted.

Mr. STEVENS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS, ETC., SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 438) in relation to the appointment of clerks to the courts of Washington Territory;

An act (H. R. No. 772) to authorize the issue of certain bonds in denominations greater than $1,000;

An act (H. R. No. 728) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue certificates of registry, or enrollment and license, to certain vessels;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 101) for the relief of certain officers of the Army; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 176) amendatory of a joint resolution entitled, "A resolution respecting bounties to colored soldiers and the pensions, bounties, and allowances to their heirs," approved June 15, 1866.

BANK BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I desire to move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia. I move to strike out after the word "associations," in line sixty-three, down to and including the word "act" in line sixty-six, namely, "and no association shall issue any certificate, receipt, or other obligation payable at any future day, nor advertise for, solicit, or receive deposits as a savings bank."

Mr. FARQUHAR. I accept that amendment in lieu of what I proposed.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was not agreed to—yeas twenty-seven, noes not counted.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section thirty be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that every association may take, receive, reserve, and charge on any loan or discount made, or upon any note, bill of exchange, or other evidences of debt, interest at the rate allowed by the laws of the State or Territory where the bank is located, and no more, except that where by the laws of any State a different rate is limited for banks of issue organized under State laws, the rates so limited shall be allowed for associations organized in any such State under this act. And when no rate is fixed by the laws of the State or Territory the bank may take, receive, reserve, or charge a rate not exceeding seven per cent., and such interest may be taken in advance, reckoning the days for which the note, bill, or other evidence of debt has to run. And the knowingly taking, receiving, reserving, or charging a rate of interest greater than as aforesaid shall be held and adjudged a forfeiture of the entire debt. And hereafter, in case a greater rate of interest has been paid, the person or persons paying the same, or their legal representatives, may recover back the amount of the entire debt, or so much thereof as may have been paid from the association taking or receiving the same: Provided, That such action is commenced within two years from the time the usurious transaction occurred: but the purchase, discount, or sale of a bona fide bill of exchange, payable at another place than the place of such purchase, discount, or sale, at not more than the current rate of exchange for sight drafts, in addition to the interest, shall not be considered as taking or receiving a greater rate of interest.

Mr. PRICE. I move to strike out after the word "more," in line eighty-six, down to and including the word "act," in line eighty-nine, namely, "except that where by the laws of any State a different rate is limited for banks of issue organized under the State laws, the rate so limited shall be allowed for associations organized in any such State under this act." The object will be obvious. There are some States where there are two rates of interest fixed, one for banks and another for individuals. Some of the banks are winding up, and it is a question whether they are in existence or not. If a national bank should change a rate of interest, that would be decided under the law where the State banks are winding up to be illegal; it would forfeit the entire debt. By striking out the words I have indicated it will allow a national bank in any State or Territory to change the rate of interest allowed in that State or Territory by law. The State Bank of Iowa, for instance, has been winding up for some eighteen months, and it is a question whether it is now in existence or not. If a national bank in Iowa should charge interest exceeding the rate allowed to be charged by the State Bank of Iowa, the question would arise whether that bank was in existence or not, and upon the decision of that question would depend the legality of the transaction. Therefore I wish to get rid of this thing. The same thing may exist in other States. By striking out these words we clear the section of ambiguity, and leave the banks to charge the rate of interest allowed by law in the States and Territories.

The question was taken upon Mr. PRICE's amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. PRICE. I move now to strike out the word "debt" where it occurs in the ninety-seventh line, and to insert in lieu thereof the word "interest."

Mr. CONKLING. I hope that amendment will not prevail.

Mr. PRICE. Why not?

Mr. CONKLING. I will tell you why not presently.

Mr. PRICE. The reason for the amendment, it seems to me, is so obvious that I did not suppose any gentleman would require anything to be said about it. It is this: that if there are any States or Territories in which two rates of interest are allowed, and a bank should inadvertently charge the wrong rate of interest, then, under this bill, they would forfeit the entire debt. I trust the House will not hesitate to adopt this amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. The propriety of the proposition of the member from Iowa is a great deal more obvious to him at present than it would have been if his profession, like that of many of us, had led him to try a great many usury cases. He would then understand better than he does the ins and outs of the usury laws. Now, I submit to every lawyer in the House that the striking out of the word "debt" and inserting "interest" in place of it is nothing more than a bungling, shambling way of striking out the whole section. If the gentleman from Iowa will give me his attention I think he will agree with me that if his amendment were adopted this section of the bill would become a mere dead letter, and that we had better strike it out altogether; or, to be more frank and plain-speaking, insert a section striking off the shackles from these banking institutions, and letting them range free and uncontrolled, to feed upon the necessities of the business community. There is a very good argument to be made on the other side, and it has been made over and over again in all the State Legislatures in regard to the expediency of usury laws; but I submit that there is no argument that can be made in favor of a usury law which confines the banks to the legal rate of interest, at the same time providing that if they violate the statute they shall forfeit the interest—a mere bagatelle. They might as well be required to forfeit a black bean or a button. The provision amounts to nothing at all.

Now, sir, I have an amendment which I propose to offer, and which I will offer if this amendment does not prevail, and the section is left with any utility at all in it, providing not only what is provided now, that the taking of usury shall lead to a forfeiture of the debt, but that all bills, notes, and obligations tainted with usury shall be void in the inception. Otherwise, even as the section now stands, it amounts to nothing. Because a bank may take usury, and having taken it may turn around and hand the note to my friend before me, for instance, [Mr. PRICE,] and take his check for the amount of the note, and he may go on and sue the note at once, and the right of the defendant amounts to nothing more than the right to furnish a fleece to be shorn without having a share in the fleece. I submit that we ought to do one of two things. If we are prepared to repeal the usury laws as to this particular class of corporations, and allow them to demand just what they please, then so be it. But do not enact a usury statute, and then provide that the three dollars or the five dollars or in the case of a large sum the ten dollars of usury shall be forfeited, for we know that that would never pay the cost of a suit, and thus no party would be enabled to insure himself against the extortions of these moneyed corporations.

Mr. LYNCH. Does not this bill provide that a bank shall be wound up if it violates this particular provision?

Mr. CONKLING. Undoubtedly this bill provides that in a variety of cases a bank shall be wound up by machinery which is here provided. But let me ask the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LYNCH] if he supposes that a poor man who has been obliged to pay ten dollars for blood money will ever resort to that proceeding and have a bank wound up. It is very much like a right that a black man formerly had in some of the States to appear in court in a suit to establish his freedom. Sir, it is holding out the idea of hope to the ear and breaking it to the heart. If we are going to have a usury statute let us have one that the rich man and the poor man may alike avail themselves of, and not evade it by saying that there is a provision by which they may go to the Comptroller of the Currency, and from the Comptroller of the Currency to some one else, who will send a commissioner to institute proceedings before some one else to wind up the bank.

The question was upon the amendment of Mr. PRICE.

Mr. PRICE. I will withdraw the amendment if the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LYNCH] will renew it.

Mr. LYNCH. I will renew the amendment.

Mr. PRICE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. LYNCH. Certainly.

Mr. PRICE. I want to say to members here, in answer to all the fine arguments made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] that this has been the law ever since the organization of the national bank system, and I think that gentlemen will say with me that there has not probably been one case in a hundred where any fault has been found with the law as it exists. I only ask that the law shall remain as it has been since the organization of the national bank system.

Mr. LYNCH. I desire to say but a few words in reply to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.] In addition to the power given here to wind up a bank by the Comptroller of the Currency, there is another safeguard against the charging of usury by the banks. That is, that the president and directors of a bank in making out their certificates must, under oath, certify that they do not take usurious interest.

I wanted to ask the gentleman from New York, while he was up, whether in the State of New York there is a forfeiture of the entire debt for usury. In but very few of the States of the Union, in none of the New England States, I think, is there anything more than the forfeiture of the interest. And as has been remarked by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE,] since the passage of the first national bank bill to the present time, such has been the provision upon that subject.

Mr. CONKLING. I will call the attention of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LYNCH] again to the fact that he is quite mistaken in supposing that the effect of the amendment now offered would be to restore the old law. Very far from it. The old law provides that whoever suffers from the taking of usury may institute a suit to recover back twice the amount which he has suffered. Here is a provision that the taking of usury shall simply forfeit the amount of interest. It will be seen that it is a very different provision.

Mr. LYNCH. I had intended to move to strike out that section when we shall come to it, believing that the section in the present law is very much better than this new provision.

Mr. DAWES. I wish to call attention to the fact that the effect of this enactment will be to produce in almost all the States of the Union two sets of negotiable notes—one liable to absolute forfeiture if the notes be in any way tainted with usury, and another liable simply to the penalty provided by the State laws. In our own State, for instance, we have tried various penalties for usury. First we had a law similar to that now in force in the State of New York, providing that as a penalty for usury the debt should be forfeited. Then the law was modified so as to provide that three times the whole amount of interest should be forfeited if there were any unlawful interest exacted. Now our law provides that three times the amount of the unlawful interest shall be forfeited; and there is a provision for the recovery of the unlawful interest from any party who has taken it. Such would be the law applicable to all negotiable paper in Massachusetts except that which might pass through these national banks. Then there is another class of negotiable paper, that passing through the national banks in Massachusetts and throughout New England, which would have attached to it the entire forfeiture of the debt as the penalty for usury.

Now, sir, I do not desire to oppose this amendment, but I wish to suggest to my colleague [Mr. HOOPER] whether it is not practicable to provide that the penalty of usury in the several States shall conform to the law of the individual State, whether the State has deemed it wise, like the State of New York, to retain the old provision, or whether, like the State of Massachusetts, it deems it sufficient to provide a forfeiture of three times the amount of unlawful interest, or whether, like the State of Indiana, it declares that the forfeiture of the interest itself is sufficient. I throw out this suggestion to my colleague, for it seems to me to be a great evil that different classes of negotiable paper, having on their face nothing to distinguish one class from another, should have attached to them by law a very different penalty. It seems to me quite worth the while of the gentlemen having charge of this bill to try whether they cannot devise a penalty which shall conform to the law of each of the States respectively; so that all the negotiable paper in Massachusetts shall be subject for usury to the penalty provided by the law of that State, and all the negotiable paper in the State of New York shall for usury be subject to the penalty provided by the law of that State. I do not know that this is practicable; but I throw out the suggestion for what it may be worth.

Mr. BINGHAM. In connection with what has been said in reference to the penalty for usury, let me suggest whether it might not be well enough, while we are upon the subject, to establish a uniform rule of interest.

Several MEMBERS. We cannot do that.

The amendment of Mr. PRICE, as renewed by Mr. LYNCH, was rejected.

Mr. JENCKES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to meet this question squarely. I am somewhat surprised, sir, that anybody in this age of the world should make a serious proposition to sustain the usury laws; and it is made in this bill in a way which shows that the movers of it do not really believe in the wisdom of such enactments. Of all the section, down to line one hundred and four, every word is a tribute, not to the wisdom, but to the folly of such enactments; and every line after that is devoted to pointing out the mode of evasion.

I believe that now no commercial country in the world recognizes the value of such enactments. We know that they have been abolished in England. We know they have no validity in the commercial nations on the continent of Europe. There is a lingering prejudice in their favor in the State of New York, and some other States of this Union, but every one knows that there has been practiced in those States just such ingenious modes of evasion as that sought to be incorporated in this bill. Every one knows, also, that a prohibition of this sort upon banking corporations does not operate for the benefit of the man who wishes to borrow money, but it compels the banking corporation either to evade the law or to force its customer into the street. Instead of limiting the rate of interest to be paid for the use of money, it is a premium in favor of those who have money to lend, whereby they can exact a larger rate of interest than that allowed by law. I wish, as I said at the outset, to meet this question fairly and clearly, and to move to strike out of any banking law anything which looks to the recognition by Congress of any system of usury laws.

Mr. DELANO. I move that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until the first Monday of December next.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. This is a most important question. There can be none more so than these amendments to the national banking law. The present law is full of defects which experience has shown to be detrimental to the public interest. We have made this report late in the session; but it is better late than never. I will not enter into the discussion of the banking system. I do not consider the system a sound one; but I think we should as far as possible remedy these defects and prevent fraudulent transactions in connection with these banks.

Mr. DELANO. We cannot mature this measure at the present session. I am not hostile to the bill; but I believe my motion is for the interest of the country. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. DELANO, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 54, noes 47.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. DELANO moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was postponed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had concurred in the resolution providing for the acceptance of the portrait of President Lincoln.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendments to House bill No. 780, to protect the revenue, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Messrs. HOWARD and HENDERSON conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House to Senate bill No. 89, to amend the acts relating to officers employed in the examination of imported merchandise in the district of New York, asked for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Messrs. CHANDLER, MORGAN, and RIDDLE conferees on the part of the Senate.

IMPORTED MERCHANDISE.

Mr. ELIOT, by unanimous consent, moved that the House insist on its amendments to Senate bill No. 39, to amend all acts relating to officers employed in the examination of imported merchandise in the district of New York, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT OF CONGRESS.

Mr. DELANO. I move to take from the Speaker's table the amendment of the Senate to the House resolution fixing the day of adjournment.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate concurred in the resolution of the House with an amendment fixing Saturday, the 28th of July, instead of Wednesday, the 25th, as the day for the adjournment of Congress.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask the gentleman to allow me to move to strike out "Saturday, the 28th," and insert "Friday, the 27th."

Mr. DELANO. The Senate will not concur, and I cannot yield. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. BROMWELL demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 68, nays 54, not voting 64; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Ancona, Barker, Baxter, Bergen, Bingham, Boyer, Buckland, Cooper, Davis, Dawes, Delano, Dixon, Eckley, Eggleston, Eldridge, Finck, Gurfield, Glessbrenner, Aaron Harding, Hart, Hayes, Hogan, Holmes, Chester D. Hubbard, James B. Hubbard, Johnson, Kasson, Kerr, Ketcham, Kootz, Kaykendall, Laffin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Leftwich, McCullough, Miller, Moorhead, Merrill, Morris, Niblack, Nicholson, Patterson, Phelps, Plauts, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Raymond, John H. Rice, Ritter, Ross, Sawyer, Shanklin, Strouse, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thornton, Frieble, Trowbridge, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Whaley, Winfield, and Wright—68.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anderson, Baker, Banks, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Conkling, Cullom, DeForest, Driggs, Eliot, Farquhar, Ferry, Abner C. Harding, Hiebo, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Jencks, Kelley, William Lawrence, Loan, Lynch, Marston, Maynard, McClure, McKuer, Mercer, Moulton, Myers, Newell, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Ritter, Rollins, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Spalding, Stevens, Stokes, John L. Thomas, Robert T. Van Horn, Volker, Wentworth, Williams, James F. Wilson, and Stephen F. Wilson—54.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Beaman, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Culver, Darling, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Dodge, Donnelly, Dumont, Farnsworth, Good-year, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Henderson, Hill, Asahel W. Hubbard, Dennis Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Humphrey, Jones, Julian, Kelso, Longyear, Marshall, Marvin, McLeod, McKee, Noell, Perham, Pike, Pomeroy, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stillwell, Taber, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Upson, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Windom, and Woodbridge—64.

So the amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Mr. DELANO. I move to reconsider the various votes by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also move to lay that motion upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NEUTRAL RELATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. BANKS, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a bill effectually to preserve the neutral relations of the United States, which was ordered to be printed with the accompanying report, with leave to call the same up to-morrow after the morning hour.

Mr. RAYMOND, by unanimous consent, submitted a minority report on the same question; which was ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the Committee on Enrolled Bills had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 31) manifesting the sense of Congress toward the officers and seamen of the vessels, and others, engaged in the rescue of the officers and soldiers of the Army, the passengers, and the officers and crew of the steamship San Francisco, from perishing with the wreck of that vessel;

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 121) providing for the examination of the accounts of the State of Massachusetts for moneys expended during the war for coast defense;

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 11) for the relief of Milton McKinnon;

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 82) to provide for codifying the laws relating to the customs;

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 132) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and settle the accounts of Caleb T. Pay and William Y. Patch, late assessor and collector of internal revenue at San Francisco;

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 125) granting the right of way through military reserves to the Union Pacific Railroad Company and its branches;

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 84) authorizing the payment of certain claims against the late Territory of Nevada;

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 126) to authorize the use of certain plates of the United States exploring expedition by the Navy Department;

Joint resolution (S. R. No. 139) for the benefit of the Illinois Soldiers' College and Military Academy;

An act (S. No. 367) to extend the time of letters-patent issued to Thaddeus Hyatt;

An act (S. No. 350) granting a pension to John Pyle;

An act (S. No. 376) granting a pension to Drusey A. Lyman;

A bill (S. No. 224) granting lands to the State of Kansas, to aid in the construction of a southern branch of the Union Pacific railway and telegraph from Fort Riley, Kansas, to Fort Smith, Arkansas;

An act (S. No. 358) granting a pension to Mrs. Nancy A. Stocks;

An act (S. No. 398) for the relief of W. B. Kelley;

An act (S. No. 366) granting a pension to Abraham Lansing; and

An act (S. No. 281) to authorize the Chesapeake Bay and Potomac River Tidewater Canal Company to enter the District of Columbia, and extend their canal to the Anacostia river at any point above Benning's bridge.

COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. STOKES, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution to extend the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims.

The joint resolution was read. It extends the provisions of the act of July 4, 1864, entitled "An act to limit the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims," to the loyal citizens of the State of Tennessee.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. STOKES moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL DEBT.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to report back Senate bill No. 300, to reduce the rate of interest on the national debt and for funding the same, with sundry amendments, and with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I object to considering it in the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to suspend the rules, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering it.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Let the bill be read.

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will modify my motion by moving that the House consider this bill as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. That is in order.

Mr. ANCONA. Is not the rule peremptory that all these bills must be considered in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. All rules can be suspended during the last ten days of the session.

On the motion, as modified, there were—yeas 30, noes 30; no quorum voting.

Mr. GARFIELD. I adhere to the original motion to suspend the rules and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question being taken, there were—yeas 40, noes 33; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. NICHOLSON and GARFIELD were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—yeas 53, noes 42.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, demanded the yeas and nays, and tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the motion was agreed to.

The rules were accordingly suspended, and the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ROLLINS in the chair.)

WINNEBAGO RESERVATION.

The CHAIRMAN stated that the first business in order before the committee was the consideration of bill of the Senate No. 121, to provide for the enlargement of the Winnebago reservation, in the Territory of Nebraska, and for other purposes.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to say a few words in relation to the bill which I propose to take up.

Mr. WINDOM. Oh, no! You cannot do that. I object.

Mr. BINGHAM. The bills upon the Calendar must be taken up seriatim.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move, then to lay the bill aside.

Mr. WINDOM. I trust the committee will not agree to that motion. This is a bill which ought to have been passed at least three months ago. I demand tellers upon the gentleman's motion.

Tellers were not ordered; and Mr. GARFIELD's motion was agreed to.

WYANDOTTE INDIANS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 432) for the relief of the Wyandotte tribe of Indians.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the bill be laid aside.

Mr. ROSS. Oh, no! This is a very important bill. I ask unanimous consent to say a word about it.

The CHAIRMAN. No debate is in order.

The question was put upon Mr. GARFIELD's motion; and there were—yeas, 48 noes 29; no quorum voting.

Mr. WINDOM demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ROSS and GARFIELD were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—yeas 52, noes 43.

So Mr. GARFIELD's motion was agreed to; and the bill was laid aside.

IOWA CLAIMS.

The next bill upon the Calendar was bill S. No. 305, for the relief of the citizens of Iowa for damages sustained by reason of depredations and injuries by certain bands of Sioux Indians.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the bill be laid aside.

Mr. PRICE. Oh! I object to that. That bill ought to be passed.

The question was put upon Mr. GARFIELD's motion; and there were—yeas 50, noes 44.

Mr. WINDOM demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WINDOM and GARFIELD were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—yeas 48, noes 47.

So the motion was agreed to; and the bill was laid aside.

BOUNDARIES OF IDAHO AND OREGON.

The next bill upon the Calendar was bill of the Senate No. 251, providing for the survey of the boundary between the Territory of Idaho and the State of Oregon.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that that bill be laid aside.

The question was put; and there were—ayes 28, noes 34; no quorum voting.

Mr. RADFORD demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MORRILL, and WILSON of Iowa, were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 48, noes 40.

No quorum voting, the Chairman, under the rule, ordered a call of the committee.

The roll was accordingly called, and the following members failed to respond to their names:

Messrs. Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Beaman, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Bundy, Chandler, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Culver, Darling, Davis, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eggleston, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Hayes, Henderson, Hill, Asahel W. Hubbard, Domas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Humphrey, Jones, Kelso, George V. Lawrence, Longyear, Marshall, Marvin, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, Moulton, Nowell, Noel, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Pomeroy, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, Schenck, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stilwell, Taber, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Thornton, Upson, Van Aernam, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, and William B. Washburn.

The committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ROLLINS reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having found itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll of members to be called, and now reported the names of the absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER. More than a quorum having answered to their names, the chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union will again resume the chair.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. ROLLINS in the chair) accordingly resumed the consideration of Senate bill No. 251, providing for the survey of the boundary between the Territory of Idaho and the State of Oregon.

The pending question was upon the motion of Mr. GARFIELD, that the bill be laid aside.

Mr. MORRILL, and Mr. WILSON of Iowa, had been appointed tellers, and they resumed their places.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 51, noes 45.

So the motion to lay the bill aside was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. The number of the bill which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] desires to have considered is Senate bill No. 300, and there are a dozen bills before it. Now, at this rate we may occupy the entire day in getting at that bill. I therefore move that the committee rise for the purpose of allowing me to submit a motion to postpone all prior orders in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, so that we may at once take up that bill.

The question was taken, and the motion was not agreed to.

SANITARY MEASURES FOR WASHINGTON.

The next business on the Calendar was a House joint resolution (No. 121) reported from the Committee for the District of Columbia, to place funds in the hands of the Commissioner of Public Buildings for sanitary purposes.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that this joint resolution be laid aside.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope not; I think it should be passed.

Mr. GARFIELD. I withdraw my motion.

The joint resolution was read. It provides that the sum of $25,000 be appropriated, payable out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and placed at the control of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, to be expended by him, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to do such work as may be required to put in a proper sanitary condition the avenues and public reservations under his control, so as to prevent, if possible, the appearance of the cholera or other epidemic in the city of Washington.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that this joint resolution be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. FARNSWORTH called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. INGERSOLL and RADFORD were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 42, noes 52.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move to strike out the enacting clause of the joint resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

RECONSTRUCTION.

The next business upon the Calendar was a bill introduced by Mr. STEVENS, (H. R. No. 623,) to enable the States lately in rebellion to regain their privileges in the Union.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask that the committee proceed with the consideration of that bill. It will probably not take over an hour, and it is a very important bill, and I am not willing that Congress shall adjourn without voting upon it. I have some amendments which I desire to offer, and then I propose to move that the bill and amendments be reported to the House and printed, and postponed until tomorrow. I trust that the committee will agree to that.

Mr. LE BLOND. I call for the reading of the original bill and the amendments.

Mr. STEVENS. I am willing to have it read; but I do insist that a vote shall be taken upon it.

Mr. BINGHAM. I rise to a question of order. My colleague [Mr. GARFIELD] rose in his place before the gentleman from Pennsylvania offered his amendment and moved to lay the bill aside.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania was recognized.

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to a question of order. I desire to ask whether it is not in order, before the bill is read, to move to lay it aside.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is in order.

Mr. STEVENS. I have not surrendered the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair supposed that the gentleman had yielded the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. Not at all. I do not mean to yield it. I want to have a vote upon this question.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield for the purpose of allowing the bill and amendments to be reported.

Mr. STEVENS. I will yield for that purpose, with the understanding that I still retain my right to the floor.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, as follows:

Whereas the eleven States which lately formed the government called the "confederate States of America," have forfeited all their rights under the Constitution, and can be reinstated in the same only through the action of Congress; Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the eleven States lately in rebellion may form valid State governments in the following manner:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the State government now existing de facto, though illegally formed in the midst of martial law, and in many instances the constitutions were adopted under duress, and not submitted to the ratification of the people, and therefore are not to be treated as free republics, yet they are hereby acknowledged as valid governments for municipal purposes until the same shall be duly altered, and their legislative and executive officers shall be recognized as such.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That whenever the Legislatures of said States shall enact that conventions shall be called to form legitimate State governments by the formation and adoption of State constitutions, the Governor, or chief executive officer, shall direct an election to be held on a day certain to choose delegates to a convention, who shall meet at the time fixed by the Legislature and form a State constitution, which shall be submitted to a vote of the people, and if ratified by a majority of the legal voters shall be declared the constitution of the State.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the persons who shall be entitled to vote at both of said elections shall be as follows: all male citizens above the age of twenty-one years who have resided one year in said State, or ten days within the election district.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the word citizen, as used in this act, shall be construed to mean all persons (except Indians not taxed) born in the United States or duly naturalized. Any male citizen above the age of twenty-one years shall be competent to be elected to act as a delegate to said convention.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That all persons who held office, either civil or military, under the government called the "confederate States of America," or who swore allegiance to said government, are hereby declared to have forfeited their citizenship and to have renounced allegiance to the United States, and shall not be entitled to exercise the elective franchise until five years after they shall have filed their intention or desire to be reinvested with the right of citizenship, and shall swear allegiance to the United States and renounce allegiance to all other Governments or pretended governments, the said application to be filed and oath taken in the same courts that by law are authorized to naturalize foreigners.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That no constitution shall be presented to or acted on by Congress which denies to any citizen any rights, privileges, or immunities which are granted to any other citizen in the State. All laws shall be impartial without regard to language, race, or former condition. If the provisions of this section should ever be altered, repealed, expunged, or in any way abrogated, this act shall become void and said State lose its right to be represented in Congress.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That whenever the foregoing conditions shall be complied with, the citizens of said State may present said constitution to Congress, and if the same shall be approved by Congress said State shall be declared entitled to the rights, privileges, and immunities, and be subject to all the obligations and liabilities of a State within the Union. No Senator or Representative shall be admitted into either House of Congress until Congress shall have declared the State entitled thereto.

The hour of half past four o'clock having arrived, the committee rose; and the House, agreeably to order, took a recess till half past seven o'clock, p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock, p. m.

PAY OF A COMMITTEE CLERK.

Mr. BROOMALL, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee of Accounts the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the compensation of the clerk to the Committee of Claims be fixed at the same rate as that of the clerk to the Committee on Appropriations, to commence from the first day of the present session of Congress.

Mr. BROOMALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RELIEF OF DRAFTED MEN.

Mr. ANCONA. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Military Affairs, for action at the present time, a bill for the relief of certain drafted men.

Mr. ALLEY. I must object. I think we should not attempt to pass any bill of this kind while there are so few members present.

Mr. ANCONA. Then I call for the regular order.

The House agreeably to order, proceeded to the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table.

ALABAMA AND FLORIDA RAILROAD.

The first business on the Speaker's table was the joint resolution (S. R. No. 134) extending time to the Alabama and Florida Railroad Company for the payment of duties on railroad iron; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that this bill be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. BINGHAM. I hope that the bill will not be referred. It ought to be passed.

On the motion of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, there were—ayes 16, noes 11; no quorum voting.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved that there be a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, by unanimous consent, withdrew the motion that there be a call of the House, and moved that the joint resolution be postponed for half an hour.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM P. WINGATE.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate joint resolution, No. 123, in relation to the settlement of the accounts of William P. Wingate, collector of the port of Bangor, Maine; which was read a first and second time.

On motion of Mr. McRUER, the joint resolution was temporarily laid aside.

RECORDING WILLS.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 289, to provide for the probate of and for the recording of wills of real estate situated in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, the bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LAND AND BUILDING COMPANY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 384, to incorporate the Washington Land and Building Company of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MERCUR. When this bill came to this House it was taken up and examined by the Committee for the District of Columbia, and it was agreed that I should recommend its passage.

Mr. STEVENS. Was it the same bill?

Mr. MERCUR. Yes, sir.

The bill was read.

Mr. KASSON. I thought I observed a prohibition against any other company engaged in the like business. Is there any such restriction?

Mr. MERCUR. It declares, on the contrary, "that nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent any other incorporated company, hereafter to be incorporated by Congress for this purpose, from engaging in and pursuing the same business, as specified in the seventh section of this act."

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to understand something about this bill before we pass it. We have had in the State of New York a great deal of experience in reference to building associations and building companies under various names and with various arrangements of legislation, and all that experience has led me to dread special charters for nothing so much as for the business of building houses on this plan of fifty-dollar shares, or any other similar plan.

But beyond all that, I wish the gentleman from Pennsylvania would tell us why it is in this District, in defiance of the legislation of the whole country, now and for years, of general acts under which all the business that capital needs can be carried on, special charters are granted giving monopolies more or less to certain named men and their successors. We have in most of the States abandoned the whole practice of special charters. We have adopted general laws; and the more universally they are adopted the more entirely are all communities satisfied that that is the proper way—a mode which engenders competition, discourages monopoly, and leads to general and wholesome condition in all respects. I do not see why that should not be adopted here. I do not see why this city should be deprived of the advantages which accrue to other parts of the country from the mode in which business is there transacted. I have no doubt the bill is right so far as any act for this purpose is right.

Mr. MERCUR. The gentleman from New York inquires why we have not provided by general legislation for the incorporation of such associations. I presume for the same reason that the Legislatures of many of the middle and southern States have not made such provisions. I am aware that the eastern States and New York have made general laws for incorporation. The gentleman from New York has had much more experience in national legislation than I have, and if he had assumed the duty of framing a bill at any time during this session and had it referred to the committee of which I am a member, I have no doubt it would have received a favorable report. But no bill of that kind has been introduced by any member of this Congress. None has been laid before this committee and they have not felt it incumbent upon them, in the absence of any such bill and in the absence of any instruction from the House, to make so wide a departure from the legislation of this District. I fully agree with the gentleman that as a general rule it is wise and judicious to provide by general legislation for incorporations. But it has not been the policy of this District, and it is too late in the session now to apply the remedy. This bill, then, is presented as bills have been heretofore presented in this District. All the incorporations in the District have been special in their character.

If I understand the gentleman from New York he makes no specific objection to this bill or to any of its features. I will state, however, for the benefit of the House, some few facts connected with it. The incorporators named in this bill, or some of them at least, are persons who have purchased quite a body of land in this city lying east, in the vicinity of Lincoln square. They have already erected a row of buildings called Philadelphia row. They propose to erect other and additional buildings of lesser value in order that they may be brought within the reach of the clerks and mechanics of this city. From the experience they have had in building they believe that they can be instrumental in reducing the value of real estate in this city and in reducing the rents which men of limited means are obliged to pay, and thus indirectly reducing the rentals and prices which members of this House have to pay. They propose to put up numerous buildings and sell them to persons of limited means upon a long credit, requiring them to pay annually such sums as they can save out of their earnings, and thus bring within the means of the more humble citizens of this District an opportunity of acquiring permanent homesteads for their families where they may rest secure for the remainder of their lives. This subject received full and careful consideration and inquiry before the committee agreed to report the bill. We came to the conclusion to which the Senate came, that it was for the interest of the citizens of this District, and especially for the interests of those who are of limited means, that this bill should pass. If no further questions are desired to be put, I will move the previous question.

Mr. CONKLING. I want to call the gentleman's attention and also the attention of the House to the seventh section:

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the president and directors shall have full power and authority, on behalf of the company, to purchase or lease land within the city of Washington, and sub-lease or sell and convey the same, to erect dwelling-houses and all other buildings on the land so leased or purchased, and rent, lease, or sell the same, with the land appurtenances thereunto belonging, and generally to do and perform all acts, matters, and things to encourage mechanics and citizens of Washington in procuring houses and homes upon the most advantageous and economical terms.

Now, I ask whether that section does anything more or less than to charter an incorporation for the purpose of possessing itself of the most desirable and available bits of property all about the city on the best terms and making a profit out of the operation. It seems to me it is a mere intelligence office of real estate for the benefit of the monopolists, and I undertake to say that if any reason can be furnished why this corporation should be chartered in the city of Washington to handle real estate, that reason will show that no such provision as that should be contained in it, unless the object is to subvert the interest, not of the public, but of those who are to profit by it. I think that those who come here and those who legislate here are sufficiently ridden now with the enormities of exaction which prevail here, and I think it wrong that a company should be chartered with a capital of half a million dollars to begin with, to snap up every scrap of real estate in the District.

Mr. MERCUR. I will yield now to my colleague, [Mr. WILLIAMS.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. The bill contains a provision that nothing therein contained shall be construed to deny to Congress the power of incorporating other companies of a like description. I wish to know if it is the judgment of the committee that the incorporation of such a company involves a surrender of such power on the part of Congress. If not, then it follows that this provision is unnecessary, and there is only one thing in the section that is of any value, and that is so much as reserves to Congress the right to amend, repeal, or alter the charter. Then there is another matter connected with this to which I desire to call attention. I find a clause here providing that the stockholders of this company shall be liable, individually, to the amount of the stock held by them. The liability is not to be confined, as I understand this provision, to the amount of stock subscribed; so that if the debts of the company exceed the amount of stock subscribed, the creditors of the company would have to suffer.

Mr. MERCUR. I am not authorized to express the opinion of the committee on the legal point raised by the member from Pennsylvania, but I have no hesitation in submitting my own opinion, which is that it is necessary that Congress should retain the power to charter other companies. The House will bear in mind that this is substantially a provision authorizing the company to perform any business that may be in pursuance of their charter. They have real estate. They own lands upon which buildings will be erected. It is something that is not transient or fleeting; something that cannot go out of their pockets; so that the creditors of the company have a permanent security, and all persons who may deal with this corporation. It strikes me that may be held to be a sufficient security; but in addition to that, this clause proposes that there shall be an individual liability on the part of each incorporator equal to the amount of his stock. There certainly could be no objection to putting this additional guard upon the operations of this incorporation, and thus seeking further to protect the interest of all those who may become its creditors.

Mr. Speaker, let me say a word in answer to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] who thinks that under this charter this incorporation will purchase and hold too much property in the city. It is true, by this bill they are authorized to sell stock to the amount of $500,000, or not less than $100,000. But if I understand this matter, the incorporators do not possess sufficient means to go far in purchasing up real estate. If the gentleman from New York will reckon up the valuation put upon some of the houses and lots in this city, he will find that the sum mentioned in this bill would purchase very few of them.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the House to the bill (H. R. No. 179) in relation to the district courts of the United States in the States of California and Louisiana, and agreed to said amendment.

The message further informed the House that the Senate insisted on their amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. No. 138) to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States, agreed to the conference asked by the House thereon, and had appointed Messrs. WILSON, HARRIS, and NESMITH the conferees upon the part of the Senate.

The message further informed the House that the Senate had passed the bill of the House

(No. 422) for the relief of Mrs. Ann E. Smoot, widow of Captain Joseph W. Smoot, with an amendment, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

LAND AND BUILDING COMPANY—AGAIN.

Mr. MERCUR. I believe that there is nothing in the statement of the gentleman from New York calculated to injure this bill or to harm any person interested in it, and I therefore demand the previous question.

Mr. PAINE. I rise to a privileged question. My conviction is that this bill—

The SPEAKER. That is not a privileged question pending the demand for the previous question.

Mr. PAINE. Well then, sir, I move to lay the bill upon the table.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not debatable.

Mr. PAINE. It is a privileged motion, however, and I make it.

The question was taken, and upon a division there were—ayes 61, noes 31.

Before the result of the vote was announced, Mr. MERCUR called for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the motion to lay on the table was accordingly agreed to.

Mr. PAINE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ALABAMA AND FLORIDA RAILROAD.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was a joint resolution of the Senate (No. 134) extending time to the Alabama and Florida Railroad Company for the payment of duties on railroad iron; which at the commencement of the evening session had been laid by on motion of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, for half an hour.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering it to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read at length. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to extend a credit of five years to the Alabama and Florida Railroad Company for the duties upon a sufficient quantity of railroad iron and fastenings to relay the track of the railroad from Pensacola, Florida, to the Alabama State line, a distance of thirty-seven miles, by the railroad company giving satisfactory security for the payment of such duties within the term of five years with semi-annual interest thereon at the rate of six per cent. in gold, and the iron and fastenings shall be used for no other purpose until the duties are paid in full.

Mr. BINGHAM. I call the previous question on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to lay the bill on the table, as that seems to be the order of business this evening.

Mr. ALLISON. I call the yeas and nays on the motion to lay this bill upon the table.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 54, nays 48, not voting 84; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Banks, Benjamin, Bidwell, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Cullom, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farquhar, Ferry, Abner G. Harding, Hayes, Hotchkiss, James R. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Marston, McClurg, Mercur, Miller, Morris, Myers, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Rollins, Sawyer, Scofield, Shellabarger, Spaulding, Stevens, Stokes, Trimble, Van Aernam, Ward, Welker, Wentworth, Williams, James F. Wilson, and Stephen F. Wilson—54.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Baxter, Bergen, Bingham, Dawes, De-frees, Delano, Eldridge, Finck, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Holmes, Chester D. Hubbard, Hulburd, Johnson, Kasson, Kerr, Kuykendall, Laffin, Le Blond, Marshall, Maynard, McKuer, Morrill, Nicholson, Phelps, Plants, Price, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Ritter, Ross, Shanklin, Strouse, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thornton, Trowbridge, Robert T. Van Horn, Woodbridge, and Wright—48.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, James M. Ashley,

Baldwin, Barker, Beaman, Blaine, Blow, Boyer, Brandegee, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cooper, Culver, Darling, Davis, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Dumont, Farnsworth, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Hart, Henderson, Higby, Hill, Hogan, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, Humphrey, Jenckes, Jones, Kelso, Ketchum, Latham, Leitch, Longyear, Lynch, Marvin, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, Moorhead, Moulton, Newell, Niblack, Noell, Patterson, Pike, Pomeroy, Radford, William H. Randall, Rogers, Schenck, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stilwell, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Windom, and Winfield—84.

So the bill was laid on the table.

Mr. INGERSOLL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. MORRILL. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MEMPHIS RIOTS.

Mr. BROOMALL. In the absence of the chairman [Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois,] of the select committee appointed by this House to investigate the late riots in Memphis, Tennessee, the chairman being detained from the House by illness, I am instructed by the committee to submit a report, which, together with the testimony, I move be laid on the table and printed.

Mr. SHANKLIN. I submit a minority report from the same committee.

Mr. BROOMALL. I am also instructed by the same committee to move that there be printed for the use of this House twenty thousand extra copies of the reports and testimony and fifty thousand copies of the reports without the testimony.

The SPEAKER. The motion to print extra copies will go to the Committee on Printing under the law.

The question was upon laying the reports and testimony upon the table and ordering the same to be printed.

Mr. LE BLOND. I hope this testimony will not be printed. I do not think any member will read it even should it be printed, and therefore it would be a useless expense to print any copies at all. The whole subject-matter of the investigation is entirely of a local character; a matter the regulation of which belongs wholly to the State of Tennessee. But Congress has taken upon itself to go into the different States to regulate what should be regulated by the police of the State.

Mr. SCOFIELD. We have been regulating the business down there for the last five years. [Laughter.]

Mr. LE BLOND. I should not be surprised if there had not been some regulating down there, and some regulating should have been done North, instead of all being done in the South. If that had been done, I have no doubt we should to-day have had a better state of things and a united country. But, sir, I am opposed to printing this report for the reasons I have named and for other reasons. The report, as I am informed, will make eight hundred pages of printed matter. It details the circumstances of a riot which took place in the State of Tennessee, and the facts of which have been published all over the country. We are just as well advised now of what occurred there, and what gave rise to that riot, as we should be if this report were printed for electioneering purposes. I shall call for the yeas and nays upon the motion to print. I will now yield to my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. JOHNSON.]

Mr. JOHNSON. The subject-matter of this investigation was nothing more than a riot. Nobody ever pretended at the start that it was more; and the committee, I understand, have arrived at the same conclusion. A riot in Memphis no more calls for investigation by this House than a riot in New York or Philadelphia. If every riot occurring anywhere in the country is to be investigated by a congressional committee, and a voluminous report of the testimony to be printed at the public expense for circulation throughout the country, I think we shall find ourselves involved in a larger outlay of money than the people will justify.

But, sir, in considering this proposition it must be borne in mind that it has a political object, a partisan purpose. This investigation has been so treated by the public press of the country. I understand, however, that it has failed of its object; and the matter will not be bettered by printing this report. We are already circulating more documents than are read by the people. We are already expending more money for publications of this sort than the people desire shall be so expended. This money, it must be remembered, is drawn from the people by direct taxation; it comes out of the labor and sweat of the country. I respectfully protest against this system. I have no objection to printing the ordinary number of copies of this report; but as for publishing fifty thousand copies for circulation all over the country under the franks of members, I think we should leave such publications to private enterprise or to the political partisans whose purposes it may subserve.

Mr. LE BLOND. Mr. Speaker, I oppose this proposition in entire good faith. This report is a document which, in my judgment, ought not to be printed at all; and one of the principal reasons why I think so is that, as I understand, the committee recommend no action whatever on the part of Congress. If no action is to be taken upon all this pile of testimony which the committee have reported, what can be the use of printing it in order to be sent broadcast over the country? If gentlemen wish to economize let them commence now.

Mr. BROOMALL. Mr. Speaker, I do not at all wonder that the two gentlemen who have spoken are opposed to the printing of this report and testimony. They know what it is. I will not pretend to make any argument in favor of printing it. I know whence the opposition comes and the reason for it. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; which was upon ordering the printing of the usual number of copies of the report and testimony.

Mr. LE BLOND. My proposition was to print the report alone without the testimony.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's proposition comes too late. That might have been offered as an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Broomall.] But the House is now acting under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I rise to a point of order. I wish to inquire whether it is in order to move a reconsideration of the vote by which the report was accepted. I understand that it is not the report of the committee at all.

The SPEAKER. There is no such motion known in the practice of this House. When the report of a committee is presented, any gentleman can raise the question whether the committee have actually agreed to the report. But after the report has been received, no member can raise the question that it is not the report of the committee.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 85, nays 23, not voting 58; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Barker, Benjamin, Bidwell, Boutwell, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Cullom, Davies, De-frees, Delano, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Abner G. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Koontz, Laffin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Leitch, Loan, Lynch, Marston, Maynard, McClurg, McKuer, Mercur, Miller, Morrill, Morris, Myers, O'Neill, Paine, Patterson, Peom, Price, William H. Randall, Ray, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Spaulding, Stevens, Stokes, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trowbridge, Van Aernnam, Bart Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Ward Welker, Wentworth, Williams, James F. Wilson, and Stephen F. Wilson—85.

WAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Bergen, Boyer, Eldridge, Finch, Glossbrenner, Aaron Harding, Hogan, Johnson, Kerr, Le Blond, Marshall, Niblack, Nicholson, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Ross, Strouse, Taber, Nelson Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, and Wright—23.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ames, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Brundage, Bundy, Chandler, Renshaw W. Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cooper, Culver, Darling, Davis, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Dumont, Earnsworth, Goodyear, Grider, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Henderson, Hill, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Humphrey, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Kuykendall, Latham, Longyear, Marvin, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, Moorhead, Moulton, Newell, Noell, Orth, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Pomeroy, Radford, Alexander H. Rice, Rogers, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stilwell, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Upson, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Windom, Winfield, and Woodbridge—58.

So the motion to print was agreed to.

MR. LE BLOND. Will the minority report be printed with the majority report?

THE SPEAKER. Both reports, together with the evidence, will be printed in the regular number; but in reference to the extra number it will depend on the report of the Committee on Printing. If the minority report had been made eleven days after the majority report, perhaps it would not be printed with the majority report.

MRS. ANN E. SMOOT.

The next business on the Speaker's table was an amendment of the Senate to House bill No. 422, for the relief of Mrs. Ann E. Smoot, widow of Captain Joseph Smoot; which was concurred in.

WILLIAM P. WINGATE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was Senate joint resolution No. 123, in relation to the settlement of the accounts of William P. Wingate, collector at the port of Bangor, Maine; which had already been read a first and second time.

MR. MORRILL. I hope we will have some explanation of the joint resolution.

MR. RICE, of Maine. The resolution is explicit. It provides that as certain goods (molasses and salt) were imported by Fisk & Dale, Josiah Towle, and Morse & Co., and held in bond at the custom-house in Bangor, Maine, on the 2d of May, 1864, and were on that day released and withdrawn upon payment of the duties imposed thereon prior to the enactment of the joint resolution of April 29, 1864, the collector not then having received official notice of such enactment; and as the said collector is now charged with fifty per cent. additional to the amount already paid upon the goods, and claims to hold the importers to pay the same to him, the Secretary of the Treasury shall be authorized and directed, in the settlement of the accounts of William P. Wingate, collector at the port of Bangor, Maine, not to exact from him the payment of the additional duty of fifty per cent. imposed by the joint resolution of April 29, 1864, on the merchandise withdrawn for consumption by the parties on the 2d of May, 1864, and to order the cancellation of the several bonds given by the importers in the above cases. The facts recited are all as stated.

On the 24th of April, 1864, the duties on imports was increased fifty per cent. The decision of the Secretary was that it went into immediate effect, so there was no time to withdraw goods in bond. An act was passed by which the time was extended. In New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and at all the principal ports the goods were withdrawn. That act provided, if paid, the money should be refunded to the importers. The notice did not reach the collector at Bangor until the 4th of May, and these goods were withdrawn on the 2d of May. When the notice had come to the collector the bonds had been canceled and the amount of fifty per cent. charged against the collector. A resolution was passed in February, 1865, intended, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SEEVERS] and other members of the Committee of Ways and Means will remember, to relieve cases of this kind, but the Secretary of the Treasury did not understand it to that extent and instructed the collector at Bangor not to enforce payment, but to allow the parties to come to Congress for relief. It has been examined and reported unanimously by the Committee on Finance of the Senate. It has been fully explained to one of the members of the Committee of Ways and Means.

MR. MORRILL. I hope it will be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means. There are a good many cases of the kind, and it ought to be carefully examined.

MR. RICE, of Maine. I agree to that, provided they have leave to report at any time.

MR. WILSON, of Iowa. They have that power.

THE SPEAKER. They have power to report at any time for commitment only; it will require unanimous consent to report at any time. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

GENERAL HOSPITAL.

The next business in order on the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 214, to incorporate the General Hospital of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time.

MR. INGERSOLL. I demand the previous question.

The bill was read. It constitutes Joseph Henry, James C. Hall, Amos Kendall, Thomas Miller, Richard Wallace, George W. Riggs, Grafton Tyler, Henry D. Cooke, D. W. Middleton, Charles Knap, Benjamin B. French, James C. McGuire, Charles H. Nichols, William B. Todd, William Gunton, Edward Simms, and Thomas Young, and their successors in office, a corporation and body politic, under the name and style of the Directors of the General Hospital of the District of Columbia, to have, purchase, receive, possess, and enjoy any estates in lands, tenements, annuities, goods, chattels, moneys, or effects, and to grant, demise, and dispose of the same in such manner as they may deem most for the interest of the hospital; provided that the annual income from the same held by such corporation shall not exceed in value the sum of $25,000.

Section two provides that the said corporation shall have full power and all the rights of opening and keeping a hospital in the city of Washington, for the care of such sick, wounded, and invalid persons as may place themselves under the care of the said corporation.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

MR. CONKLING. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to explain to us a little about this $25,000, the object of it and what relation it has here; whether the hospital is a side-show, or whether it is the other way.

MR. INGERSOLL. I believe it is the other way. [Laughter.] I demand the previous question on the passage.

MR. CONKLING. I am not the only member who desires an explanation.

MR. JOHNSON. I suggest that we pass the bill the other way. [Laughter.]

MR. CONKLING. Suppose the gentleman makes that motion, and we will vote on it.

MR. INGERSOLL. The only object that these corporations have that I know of is charitable, to take care of the sick and wounded, or such of them as are disposed to put themselves under the charge of the hospital. This $25,000, I believe, is a limitation upon the value of the real estate.

MR. CONKLING. It is the annual income, as I understand it.

THE SPEAKER. The Clerk will report that part.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the annual income from the same held by such corporation shall not exceed in value the sum of $25,000.

MR. TRIMBLE. If the gentleman can establish a charitable hospital for that much money I do not see any objection. [Laughter.]

MR. CONKLING. This corporation can hold any amount of property. The only restriction is that the annual rent which they realize shall not exceed $25,000. The gentleman who stands sponsor for this bill says that $25,000 is to be the limit of the value of the real estate. Why, sir, they can hold under this bill five millions of real estate, but their income must not exceed $25,000 per annum. I think that is an extraordinary proposition.

MR. BINGHAM. Strike out "annual income."

MR. DAWES. Amend by providing that the proceeds shall be applied exclusively to the support of the hospital.

MR. INGERSOLL. I have no objection to that.

MR. TRIMBLE. Has this corporation authority under this bill to do anything else?

MR. INGERSOLL. It has not.

MR. CONKLING. I would like to have that provision in the bill pointed out which requires this corporation to have any hospital at all, large or small. I cannot find it. It is entirely optional; the corporation may establish a hospital if they choose.

MR. INGERSOLL. I do not suppose it is the business of Congress to impose upon any number of gentlemen, no matter how philanthropic they may be, the duty of opening a hospital for the sick in the District of Columbia, but if they see fit to do so and ask to be incorporated for that purpose with limitations which confine the operations of the corporation to that specific business, and no other, I have no objection to it, and I suppose no humane man in this House has. That is all this bill proposes. They are limited to $25,000 so far as the value of the property is concerned, and I have accepted an amendment to insert after the proviso containing that limitation, these words: "and the property held by said corporation shall be devoted exclusively to the purposes of such hospital."

MR. ELDRIDGE. If the property is limited to $25,000, of what earthly use is that to establish a hospital? It would not be capable of containing a half dozen invalids.

MR. INGERSOLL. Well, sir, if a half dozen gentlemen will take care of a half dozen invalids, I have no objection. It is a voluntary proposition on their part.

MR. ELDRIDGE. It will require more than $25,000.

MR. INGERSOLL. They may not be able to get more.

MR. WILSON, of Iowa. Is there anything in the bill which will prevent this corporation engaging in any other business under the corporate name given in this bill, and receive compensation therefor—investing money in real estate, for instance, or anything else?

MR. DAWES. There is a corporation known in Massachusetts by the name of the General Hospital. It loans money all over the State. It has a little hospital somewhere in Boston—for its own use, it is suggested—and it is one of the largest money corporations in Massachusetts. I was led to suspect that there was some such thing as that covered up in this bill because of the similarity in name. The bill does not require these parties to devote the real estate which they are permitted to hold to the purposes of the hospital, nor the income therefrom.

MR. INGERSOLL. I see the necessity of the amendment. I was not up to the Yankee way of doing these things until the gentleman from Massachusetts informed me. I will have the bill read again, and then demand the previous question.

MR. WRIGHT. The reason the gentleman wants this bill passed is he is anticipating his fate in November next. [Laughter.]

MR. BINGHAM. Oh! The bill was again reported as amended.

MR. INGERSOLL. I call the previous question.

MR. FARQUHAR. Will the gentleman yield?

MR. INGERSOLL. I yield to no one.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to lay the bill on the table.

On the motion to lay on the table there were—ayes 55, noes 40.

Mr. FINCK demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken on laying the bill on the table there were—yeas 49, nays 49, not voting 88; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ancona, Baker, Barker, Benjamin, Bidwell, Boutwell, Boyer, Broomall, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Dawes, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Eliot, Farquhar, Ferry, Abner C. Harding, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Hulburd, Julian, Kelley, Kerr, Koontz, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Marston, McClurg, Miller, Morrill, Morris, Paine, Price, William H. Randall, Ritter, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Shellabarger, Stevens, Stokes, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Wentworth, James F. Wilson, and Stephen F. Wilson—49.

NAYS—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, Baxter, Bergen, Bingham, Bromwell, Buckland, Cobb, Cullom, Dofrees, Delano, Donnelly, Eldridge, Finck, Hart, Higby, Chester D. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Johnson, Kasson, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Latham, LeBlond, Leitch, Loan, Lynch, Maynard, McRuer, Mercer, Moorhead, Moulton, Niblack, Nicholson, Perham, Raymond, Ross, Shanklin, Strouse, Taber, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Nelson Taylor, Thornton, Trimble, Ward, Welker, Woodbridge, and Wright—49.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Beaman, Blaine, Blow, Brandegee, Bundy, Chanler, Reader W. Clarke, Cook, Cooper, Culver, Darling, Davis, Dawson, Deming, Denison, Dixon, Dodge, Dumont, Farnsworth, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Gridder, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Aaron Harding, Harris, Hayes, Henderson, Hill, Hogan, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Humphrey, Jones, Kelso, Ladin, Longyear, Marshall, Marvin, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, Myers, Newell, Nogli, O'Neill, Orth, Patterson, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Pomeroy, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rogers, Rollins, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Smith, Spalding, Starr, Stillwell, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Williams, Windom, and Winfield—88.

The SPEAKER. The Chair votes in the negative; so it is not laid on the table.

The question recurred upon seconding the demand for the previous question upon the passage of the bill as amended.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. INGERSOLL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 387) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending 30th June, 1867, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 480) to provide for and to regulate the weighing of exports, and for other purposes; and

An act (H. R. No. 775) to establish certain post roads.

WASHINGTON COUNTY HORSE RAILROAD.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 380, to incorporate the Washington County Horse Railroad Company, in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. INGERSOLL obtained the floor.

Mr. LE BLOND. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. INGERSOLL] will yield to me for that purpose, I will move to postpone the further consideration of this bill until December next. It may be well that this bill, or some other like it, should pass; but certainly we cannot give to a bill of this length the consideration that it deserves at this time. Now, so far as I could understand this bill from its reading, it lacks one feature which I think this House ought to require to be inserted in every bill of this kind. I refer to the individual-liability clause, which, so far as I could understand the bill, is omitted.

Mr. MILLER. What has individual liability to do with a railroad company?

Mr. LE BLOND. It ought to have something to do with it, if it has not.

Mr. CONKLING. It does not make them liable for anything.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I suppose it would be too much to ask the House to consider this bill at this time, and therefore I move that it be referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

The motion to refer was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

METROPOLITAN CLUB OF WASHINGTON.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 393, to incorporate the Metropolitan Club of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I call the previous question on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. INGERSOLL] yield to me to offer an amendment?

Mr. BINGHAM. With all respect to my colleague, I hope the gentleman will not yield.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I cannot yield.

The previous question was seconded.

The question was upon ordering the main question.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move that the bill be laid on the table.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Upon that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken upon the motion of Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, to lay the bill upon the table; and upon a division there were—ayes 51, noes 43.

So the bill was laid on the table.

Mr. WENTWORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEY (at nine o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) moved that the House adjourn. The motion was not agreed to.

WASHINGTON TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 424, to incorporate the Washington Temperance Society, of the city of Washington, District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. WARD. I call the previous question on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. CONKLING. Let the bill be read.

The Clerk read the bill.

The motion to lay the bill on the table was not agreed to.

The question recurring on ordering the bill to be read the third time,

Mr. WARD called for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CIRCUIT COURT OF WEST VIRGINIA.

The next business on the Speaker's table was joint resolution S. No. 133, to change the place of holding the terms of the circuit court for the district of West Virginia; which was read a first and second time.

It provides that the terms of the circuit court for the district of West Virginia, heretofore held at Lewisburg, in the county of Greenbrier, shall be hereafter held at the city of Parkersburg, at the time now fixed by law.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAY OF COLLECTORS OF CUSTOMS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 400) entitled "An act to fix the compensation of certain collectors of customs, and for other purposes;" which was read a first and second time.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. On that motion I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

PACIFIC RAILROAD, SOUTHERN ROUTE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 20) entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast by the southern route."

The SPEAKER. This bill has been read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, reported back by unanimous consent, and placed upon the Speaker's table. The question is on ordering the bill to a third reading.

Mr. PRICE. I call the previous question.

Mr. CONKLING called for the reading of the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, but before he had concluded,

Mr. ALLEY moved that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the House (at ten o'clock and five minutes p. m.) adjourned.

PETITION.

The following petition was presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committee: By Mr. ORTH: A petition from citizens of Indiana on the subject of national insurance.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, July 26, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY. On motion of Mr. HARRIS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 24th instant, information in relation to the probable cost of constructing a railroad on the route described in the charter of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. LANE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 354) for the relief of William Crosswell, reported a recommendation that the Senate agree thereto.

PORT OF CALAIS.

Mr. MORGAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report back the bill (H. R. No. 795) to authorize the entrance and clearance of vessels at the port of Calais, Maine; and I ask to have it considered at once.

By unanimous consent the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to allow the Secretary of the Treasury to authorize, under such regulations as he shall deem necessary, the deputy collector of customs at Calais, Maine, to enter and clear vessels and perform such other official acts as the Secretary shall think advisable.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES TO FEDERAL COURTS.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 406. It was objected to yesterday, but it is very important that it should be passed at this session. It will take but a moment.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 406) for the removal of causes in certain cases from State courts was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that if in any suit already commenced, or that may hereafter be commenced, in any State court against an alien, or by a citizen of the State in which the suit is brought against a citizen of another State, and the matter in dispute exceeds the sum of $500, exclusive of costs, it to be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court that a citizen of the State in which the suit is brought is or shall be a defendant, and if the suit so far as relates to the alien defendant or to the defendant who is the citizen of a State other than that in which the suit is brought, is or has been instituted or prosecuted for the purpose of restraining or enjoining him, or if the suit is one in which there can be a final determination of the controversy, so far as it concerns him, without the presence of the other defendants as parties in the cause, then and in every such case the alien defendant, or the defendant who is a citizen of a State other than that in which the suit is brought, may, at any time before the trial or final hearing of the cause, file a petition for the removal of the cause as against him into the next circuit court of the United States to be held in the district where the suit is pending, and offer good and sufficient surety for his entering in such court, on the first day of its session, copies of the process against him, and of all pleadings, depositions, testimony, and other proceedings in the cause affecting or concerning him, and also for his there appearing and entering special bail in the cause, if special bail was originally requisite therein; and it is thereupon to be the duty of the State court to accept the security and proceed no further in the cause as against the defendant so applying for its removal; and any bail that may have been originally taken is to be discharged, and the copies being entered in such court of the United States the cause shall there proceed in the same manner as if it had been brought there by original process against the defendant who shall have so filed a petition for its removal. Any attachment of the goods or estate of the defendant by the original process shall hold the goods or estate so attached to answer the final judgment, in the same manner as by the laws of the State they would have been holden to answer final judgment had it been rendered by the court in which the suit commenced; and any injunction granted before the removal of the cause against the defendant applying for its removal shall continue in force until modified or dissolved by the United States court into which the cause shall be removed; and any bond of indemnity or other obligation given by the plaintiff upon the issuing or granting of any attachment, writ of injunction, or other restraining process against the defendant petitioning for the removal of the cause, shall also continue in full force and may be prosecuted by the defendant and made available for his indemnity in case the attachment, injunction, or other restraining process be set aside or dissolved, or judgment be rendered in his favor, in the same manner and with the same force and effect as if such injunction, attachment, or restraining process had been granted, and such bond had been originally filed or given in the court to which the cause is removed. The removal of the cause, as against the defendant petitioning therefor, into the United States court shall not be deemed to prejudice or take away the right of the plaintiff to proceed at the same time with the suit in the State court as against the other defendants, if he shall desire to do so. Copies of all pleadings filed or entered in the United States court by the defendant applying for the removal of the cause, shall have the same force and effect in every respect and for every purpose as the original pleadings would have had by the laws and practice of the courts of the State if the cause had remained in the State court.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUSPENSION OF JOINT RULES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that under the joint rules of the two Houses this bill cannot be sent to the other House.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit the usual motion that the sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules be suspended for the residue of the present session.

The motion was agreed to.

The rules referred to are as follows:

"16. No bill that shall have passed one House shall be sent for concurrence to the other on either of the last three days of the session.

"17. No bill or resolution that shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate shall be presented to the President of the United States for his approbation on the last day of the session."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed a resolution to suspend the sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules of the two Houses for the residue of the session, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 422) for the relief of Mrs. Ann E. Smoot, widow of Captain Joseph Smoot.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following Senate bills and joint resolution:

A bill (S. No. 324) for the relief of John Hastings, late surveyor and depository of public moneys at Pittsburg;

A bill (S. No. 424) to incorporate the Washington Temperance Society of the city of Washington, District of Columbia; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 133) to change the place of holding the terms of the circuit court for the district of West Virginia.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the bill (S. No. 214) to incorporate the General Hospital of the District of Columbia, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

SUSPENSION OF JOINT RULES.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution of the House of Representatives suspending the sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules of the two Houses for the residue of the present session; and

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, it was

Resolved, That the Senate agree thereto.

PROTECTION OF THE REVENUE.

Mr. FESSENDEN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 780) to protect the revenue, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from their disagreement to the second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from their eighth amendment.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the first amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with the following amendment: in line nine, page 1, of the engrossed bill, strike out "$2 50" and in lieu thereof insert "three dollars."

That the House recede from their disagreement to the ninth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with the following amendments: in line two of said amendment strike out the words "and directed," and in line three, after the words "collection in," insert the words "any of;" and the Senate agree to the same.

W. FESSENDEN,

J. B. HENDERSON.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES A. GARFIELD,

JOHN HOGAN.

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

SENATOR FROM TENNESSEE.

Mr. FOWLER presented the credentials of Hon. DAVID T. PATTERSON, chosen a Senator of the United States by the Legislature of the State of Tennessee for the term commencing March 4, 1863.

The credentials were read.

Mr. SUMNER. I move that these credentials be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with a view to inquire whether Mr. PATTERSON can take the oaths required by the act of Congress and the rule of the Senate.

Mr. COWAN. I suppose Mr. PATTERSON would be the best judge himself whether he can take the oaths or not. I suppose we shall hardly undertake to inquire whether a man can take an oath or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state the question. It is moved that these credentials be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for the purpose of making the inquiry stated by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SUMNER. In support of that motion, I beg to call attention to a precedent of the Senate, at the Thirty-Seventh Congress, second session, 1861-62, in the case of Benjamin Stark, a Senator from Oregon. I have a memorandum of it, as follows:

"When his credentials were presented, January 6, 1862, Mr. FESSENDEN moved that the oath be not administered, and that his credentials be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary."

It will be remembered that the occasion of that motion was that there was reason to believe that Mr Stark had expressed disloyal sentiments. The reference to the Judiciary Committee was for an inquiry into the facts. It appears that at a subsequent day, January 10, this motion was agreed to, and on the 7th of February, more than a month after the presentation of the credentials, Mr. HARRIS, from the committee, made a report with the following resolution:

"Resolved, That Benjamin Stark, of Oregon, appointed a Senator of that State by the Governor thereof, is entitled to take the constitutional oath of office."

This resolution was amended in the Senate by adding thereto the words "without prejudice to any subsequent proceedings in the case;" and so amended, was agreed to, February 27, 1862. The oath was then taken by Mr. Stark and he took his seat in the Senate.

Now, sir, I have been assured, and other Senators about me have been assured, by more than one gentleman from Tennessee, that Mr. PATTERSON acted as a judge under the rebel authorities, and in that capacity he took the oath of allegiance or some equivalent oath to the rebel government. In holding office under the rebel government he has, of course, disqualified himself from holding a seat in this Chamber; at least until the existing law of the land has been changed. Under these circumstances, and following the approved precedent of the Senate, I have submitted the motion which is now before you.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is the motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is that these credentials be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, charged to make the inquiry named by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was not fortunate enough to hear what the inquiry was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts can state it more clearly than the Chair.

Mr. SUMNER. The inquiry is whether the gentleman can take the oath required by the law.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is that a legal question, Mr. President? I do not see that the Judiciary Committee are peculiarly fitted to decide that question. It is a question that the party must decide for himself, subject to the responsibilities of making intentionally an incorrect decision.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask what the resolution in regard to the State of Tennessee says. I think it declares that when the Senators and Representatives take the oaths prescribed by the Constitution and laws they shall take their seats.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was about to state that. I supposed the whole matter was settled. Permit me to ask the Chair whether the resolution admitting the State of Tennessee which passed the House is before it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that it is not on the desk. It can be obtained, however, in a few minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should like to have it. My recollection is in accordance with that of the member from Ohio. It was passed with a knowledge that Mr. FOWLER and Mr. PATTERSON were both elected Senators. The only question was, before the passage of this resolution, whether the State of Tennessee could be received by her representatives on this floor, and I considered that question as settled by the passage of the resolution, not only in relation to the right of the State, but in relation to the right of the representatives, provided they took the oath.

I have got the resolution now. As it came to us from the House the resolution was that "the State of Tennessee is hereby restored to her former proper, practical relations to the Union and is again entitled to be represented by Senators and Representatives in Congress duly elected and qualified, upon their taking the oaths of office required by existing laws." These last words were stricken out, because they were supposed to be altogether surplusage, and only upon that ground. They were stricken out, therefore, under the impression that they in no way changed the meaning of the resolution. I supposed, therefore, the resolution to say that Tennessee is entitled to be represented by Senators upon this floor as well as any other State in the Union, they, of course, taking the oaths which the Constitution and the laws that may be in force prescribe. But I am at a loss to imagine in what possible way the Judiciary Committee can decide whether Mr. PATTERSON or any individual Senator can take the oath as a question of law. He has a right to take it, as I think, subject, as I stated before, to the responsibility of sinning against the law or the Constitution by taking a false oath. If he takes a false oath he can be proceeded against, or the Senate can proceed against him afterwards if it deems it proper.

Mr. SUMNER. I have already read the precedent of the Senate in the case of Benjamin Stark. I think the Senator from Maryland did not hear that precedent.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes I did. I recollect it.

Mr. SUMNER. It seems to me completely applicable to the case; but I take it the facts in this case are open as day. The whole case is historic. I suppose there can be no doubt on the question. I might appeal to the Senator from Tennessee who is now upon the floor, and whom we have all been so happy to welcome to his seat, to state the simple facts in the case. They must be unquestionably within his knowledge. On those I would like a judgment of the Senate. It seems to me the Senate ought to act intelligently, with eyes open, knowing what has occurred. If, knowing what has occurred, the Senate thinks that the oath can be administered at that desk to this gentleman, it will be so administered; but if when the facts are all stated to the Senate the Senate shall be of a contrary opinion, then I presume it will declare in some way that the oath shall not be administered.

Mr. COWAN. Mr. President, this is a motion to refer the credentials of a Senator to the Judiciary Committee to inquire whether he can take a particular oath. Why, Mr. President, if the Judiciary Committee or the Senate either can inquire and determine beforehand whether a man can take an oath or whether he cannot take a judicial oath, what is the use of the oath? If he is incapable of taking the oath truly, and the Senate so declare, may they not as well declare that without the formula of an oath? The official oath usually looks forward, swearing the incumbent that he will do certain things; for instance, support and maintain the Constitution. This oath is retrospective; it looks backward, and requires him to swear that he has not done certain things. Now, if we are to inquire beforehand whether he can take this latter oath, why not the right to inquire whether he can take the former? And in that aspect of it, it becomes, I think, apparent to everybody that such a motion and such a reference as this is to do away entirely with the efficacy of the oath itself.

I hope, sir, that these credentials will not be referred for any such purpose, and that the Senator from Tennessee will be allowed to take his seat upon taking the customary oaths. As to the precedent in Stark's case, there is no resemblance whatever between the two cases. There was a reference to inquire, not whether Mr. Stark could take a particular oath or not, but it was a question whether Mr. Stark had been guilty of particular conduct which was alleged to be in itself treasonable, and the Judiciary Committee were instructed to inquire as to that fact, which is, I take it, very different, entirely different, from this case. I trust that the motion will not prevail.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. President, my colleague desires to give a full explanation of this matter; he is perfectly willing that this step shall be taken; he will satisfy all the Senate in regard to the charge that has been made; and will be very happy to do so.

Mr. HOWARD. I am very happy to be informed that the applicant is willing that the reference shall be made.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator from Tennessee spoke in so low a tone that I did not hear him.

Mr. HOWARD. I understood him to say that his colleague, the applicant now for a seat in this body, is willing that the reference should be made to the Committee on the Judiciary, to make the inquiry suggested by the amendment offered by my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. FOWLER. That is the fact. He is not only willing, but will be very happy, to make a statement before the Committee.

Mr. HOWARD. While I am up, I beg to say one word, with the indulgence of the Senate. The act of 1862 provides that every person appointed to any civil office, or elected to the House of Representatives or to the Senate of the United States, shall, before entering upon the discharge of his duties, take the oath prescribed in the act, and among other facts which the applicant is required to attest to in that solemn form is, that he has neither sought nor accepted nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever under any authority or pretended authority in hostility to the United States; not only that he has not exercised the functions of such an office, but that he has not sought to exercise them. So strict and so stringent is the act of 1862. Now, sir, I infer from this statute that the applicant in such a case is not subjected to the taking of this oath as a mere empty, unmeaning formality. I do not understand that Congress referred it to the conscience of the claimant, whether he would or could take this oath. I understand the statute to require that in each case the facts required to be sworn to by the applicant shall be true in point of fact. It would be a very idle ceremony to require an applicant for office to take this oath if he, and he alone, were to be the judge of the truth of the facts required by the oath. In short, I hold that under the terms of this oath every individual is in point of law prohibited as plainly as if the prohibition were enacted in the oath, from holding any office unless the facts stated in the oath are in point of fact true.

I hope, therefore, that the Committee on the Judiciary, when this case shall go before them, will make a full and complete inquiry into all the facts of the case for the information of the Senate, showing us whether or not this applicant has ever exercised an office under the confederate government, or whether he has ever sought to exercise any such office, because if he has done the one thing or the other it is plain to my mind that he is prohibited by this statute from taking a seat in this Chamber. I understand—I shall not, of course, vouch for the truth of the information—that this gentleman not only sought a judicial office in the State of Tennessee under the late confederate government, but actually proceeded to the exercise of the functions of that office and acted as a judge under the authority of the rebel confederacy. If that should turn out to be the fact, however much I might esteem the personal character of the applicant—and as to that I do not profess to have any knowledge—I should be constrained to vote against his taking a seat in this Chamber.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts is not exactly in the form that propriety would require. The motion is to inquire whether the Senator-elect can take the oath required by law. There is force in what the Senator from Pennsylvania has said on that subject. I think the proper direction to that committee is to inquire into the qualifications of the Senator-elect, which implies of course an inquiry into whether he is in that personal condition which entitles him, being properly elected, to admission. I therefore move to amend the motion in that way.

Mr. SUMNER. I accept the modification.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My motion is, that in lieu of directing the Judiciary Committee to inquire whether the Senator-elect can take the oaths required by law, we direct them to inquire into the qualifications of the Senator-elect.

Mr. SUMNER. I accept that modification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion, as modified, that these credentials be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to inquire into the qualifications of the individual presenting the credentials.

Mr. GRIMES. It seems to me that this is a very important precedent that we are about to establish, and I call the attention of the Senate specially to it. Gentlemen appear before us representing themselves as Senators from a State which we all recognize as being entitled to representation on this floor. A member of this body rises, and without any written declaration on the part of anybody, without making any charges himself or becoming responsible for any or introducing the name of a single individual who is willing to become responsible for any, proposes that the introduction of one of the Senators upon this floor as a Senator from that State shall be postponed until the question can be determined whether that man is qualified to occupy his seat. Heretofore the case has always been that, prima facie, the man presenting credentials was entitled to the occupation of the seat, to exercise the functions of the office that his State elected him to; and if it was afterward discovered that he was not entitled to occupy the seat, then it was the duty of the Senate, and they always exercised it, to investigate that question through their proper organ, the Judiciary Committee, and if they found that he was not qualified, then to reject him. If I should present my credentials on the 4th of March next as a Senator from the State of Iowa, would it be competent for a gentleman to rise here in his place and say he did not believe that I was able to take that oath conscientiously and justly, without presenting any charges against me, and require my credentials to be sent to the Committee on the Judiciary, and my State to be deprived of representation until that Judiciary Committee should make a report and the Senate should act upon that report? There is no analogy, or very little between the Oregon case and this. In that case, if I remember, there were very responsible parties who made declarations to a member of this body charging the Senator from Oregon or attempting to represent the State of Oregon, with the expression of certain sentiments.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There were affidavits.

Mr. GRIMES. Yes, they were based on affidavits. Then letters were produced here in the Senate and read in the presence of the Senate, and there was no alternative in that case but for the Senate to make some investigation. But in this case there does not seem to be anything upon which to base any charges; but blindly it is proposed to refer to the Committee on the Judiciary these credentials. Now, Mr. President, I have a very slight acquaintance with the gentleman who is sent here to represent Tennessee; and I am not influenced in the slightest degree by any personal considerations to him; but it seems to me that it is very important that we should not in this instance establish an improper precedent, and one that may come home to our own cases in the course of a few years. The State of Tennessee is entitled to representation upon all the precedents that have been established in this body in the past. If we discover that she is represented by a wrong man, a man who ought not to have taken the oath, then let some gentleman make charges against him, and let those charges be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa would allow the applicant in this case to take his seat before any inquiry is made into the question of fact whether he is qualified to take his seat here and act with us under the law of 1862. It seems to me that the Senator from Iowa overlooks the act of 1862, prescribing the oath of office in all cases. Let me call his attention to it.

Mr. GRIMES. I am perfectly familiar with the act, and I should like to hear the evidence that brings this gentleman within the act; that is all.

Mr. HOWARD. The statute declares:

"That hereafter every person elected or appointed to any office of honor or profit under the Government of the United States, either in the civil, military, or naval departments of the public service, except the President of the United States, shall, before entering upon the duties of such office, and before being entitled to any of the salary or other emoluments thereof, take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation."

He is not, under this act, entitled to sit and vote here at all, although his credentials may be entirely formal and sufficient prima facie, if it be the fact that he has exercised or sought to exercise any office under a government in hostility to the Government of the United States. That preliminary fact is first to be ascertained and established before he has the right to take his seat here. In ordinary cases I am quite aware that on the presentation of formal credentials here the Senator-elect is allowed to take his seat, and the question as to his qualifications under the Constitution is referred, if a question of that kind be made, to the Committee on the Judiciary, and in the mean time he sits and votes and acts here until that question is determined; but that is not the present case.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the honorable Senator permit me to ask whether before that act was passed a Senator could vote or take his seat here without taking the oath prescribed by the Constitution of the United States, and what difference there is?

Mr. HOWARD. Of course he could not take his seat or vote here before the enactment of this statute unless he took the oath prescribed by the Constitution. That was a preliminary step; but the act of 1862 requires something more of a preliminary character before he can take his seat and act here. It declares that before he shall enter upon the discharge of his duties he shall take this oath, and I insist that the facts implied by the oath if they are disputed—and they are disputed in this case; I dispute them myself—must be ascertained and decided upon by the Senate.

Now, sir, I am informed from sources for which I entertain great respect that this gentleman cannot truthfully take the oath which is prescribed by the act of 1862, and if he cannot he ought not to be allowed to take his seat or to vote at all until that question is determined.

Let us adhere to the statute we have passed and not evade it by allowing a gentleman to take his seat here as to whom the truth may turn out to be that he was not able truthfully to take this oath, and, therefore, had no right to take his seat at all. It seems to me that such a step leads to a very manifest absurdity.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think that either course might be pursued in regard to the admission to his seat of the gentleman who presents himself at the present time from Tennessee. The practice of the Senate has been entirely uniform. On the presentation of a proper credential, prima facie, the gentleman is entitled to be sworn in. That has been the general understanding of the Senate; but that prima facie case may be overcome. The Senate considered that it was overcome in the case of Mr. Stark, alluded to by the Senator from Massachusetts. No objection interposing, as a matter of course a Senator is sworn in on the presentation of his credentials, without any reference to a committee. In legislative assemblies where all the members come together for the first time, where there is no organized body to decide upon the right of any of the members to seats, it is a necessity that the body must organize on the prima facie papers of the members. The Senate, however, is somewhat differently constituted; the Senate is always organized; it is a permanent body, only one third of its members going out of office at any one time; two thirds are always in office; hence there is not the same necessity which prevails in bodies where all meet together upon a common footing, none having yet been qualified; and it is out of that necessity that the rule I imagine has been adopted that the person, having the credential is to be sworn without any further question; otherwise you never could organize a legislative body at all, as there is no one to decide as to other questions. Now there is a manifest impropriety in this. It often occurs in legislative bodies; it has once or twice in the House of Representatives at the present session, that members who have ultimately been decided not entitled to seats have sat for months and voted upon the most important questions. Of course that is an evil; that is not right, that ought not to be; and if there was any way of avoiding it it would not be. It can be avoided in the Senate, because this being a permanent body and being always organized, there is no such absolute necessity to swear in a person presenting the prima facie case. We are organized without that; but the general practice in the Senate has been when a party presented a prima facie case to allow him to be sworn. Now, what is this case? I think that Mr. PATERSON on the presentation of his credentials is entitled to be sworn as a member of the Senate, unless now something has occurred that makes it proper that he should not be sworn. What has occurred?

The Senator from Michigan says that he is informed that the gentleman who presents himself as a Senator cannot take the oath which is required before he is entitled to take his seat in this body. To put the case strongly, not intimating or supposing or believing that any such case exists in this instance, suppose that a known and avowed instigator of the late rebellion; to make the case more palpable, suppose Jefferson Davis himself were to be sent here as a Senator from the State of Mississippi; or as he is, I believe, in confinement, take the case of the rebel vice president, and as Stephens has been elected a Senator, that is a case we may well imagine; suppose he were to present himself here to be sworn as a Senator, what should we do? The Senate and the country know, we all know, that Mr. Stephens was engaged in a rebellion against the Government of the United States, and that if he took this oath in which he declared that he had not been, it would not be true. Now, the Senate would not sit by and with the knowledge, every one of us, that this was false we would not permit a man to come here and take such a false oath as that. A judge of a court would not allow a witness to go on to testify to that which was palpably false right in his presence. He would stop him, and the Senate in such case as that would not allow the person to take the oath.

I do not think we could justify ourselves in permitting a person to commit a crime of that character in our presence when we knew he was committing the crime for which he would subject himself, by the law to which the Senator from Michigan has referred, to all the pains and penalties of perjury. We should no more be excusable if we were to sit still and allow a man to commit perjury in our presence when we might prevent it, than we should if we allowed him to commit murder in our presence if we could prevent it. We would not allow a man to commit murder here; if we knew he was about to do it we would interfere to prevent it if we could. If we knew he was about to commit robbery or any other crime, it would be our duty to interfere to prevent it.

If we knew that a man came here who was not qualified to be a Senator it would be our duty to interfere. In this case the Senator from Michigan states that he has such information if it be true, and it has made an impression on his mind sufficiently, in his judgment, to justify him to rise in the Senate and state in his place—

Mr. SUMNER. I have the same information, and I have stated it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Two Senators then rise in their places and state that the person presenting himself upon this occasion cannot, as they are informed of the facts, take this oath without committing this high crime. I think that makes a case which justifies us in referring the credentials to examine into that matter. I express no opinion as to what the facts may be. I have no opinion. I know nothing in regard to the matter.

Therefore I shall for myself vote to refer the credentials, under the circumstances, and I am the more happy to do so because the gentleman presenting himself desires to remove any imputation of this kind, as I understand by his colleague who has presented the credentials to our consideration. The rule by which I as at present advised shall be governed is this: when a credential is presented in due form I shall always be in favor of allowing the party to be sworn if the credentials come from a body authorized to be represented here. If, however, facts are presented which overcome the prima facie case thus presented, on the authority of Senators or otherwise, making it proper to inquire, I shall not hesitate to vote to refer such credentials and make the inquiry before the person is sworn in.

Mr. SUMNER. I think, sir, I shall not err if I refer to the practice of the House of Representatives with regard to the members from Tennessee. It will be within the recollection of all that the credentials of these members were referred to the Committee of Elections. Now, sir, notoriously, that is not the ordinary course with regard to credentials. The gentlemen who appear at the House with credentials are sworn, as a matter of course, in ordinary cases. The gentlemen from Tennessee were not sworn as in ordinary cases. Their credentials were referred to the Committee of Elections, and on the report of that committee they were sworn in. Now, the Committee on the Judiciary in the Senate for these purposes corresponds to the Committee of Elections in the other House. We call upon our Judiciary Committee to perform the service which in the other House is performed by a special committee. Therefore, sir, we have already with reference to the case of Tennessee the example of the other House. In making the motion that I have made, I have followed that example.

But, sir, there was something that fell from the Senator from Iowa, to which I wish to make a moment's reply. He imagines that if we make this reference we shall establish a dangerous precedent, and he even goes so far as to imagine the possibility under this precedent, that he or his colleague, coming from the patriotic State of Iowa, may find their credentials called in question. Sir, the Senator from Iowa in making that suggestion has forgotten for a moment the history of the country; he has forgotten that we have just emerged from a great civil war; that the State of Tennessee had taken a part in that war, and that the very question now under consideration is whether the gentleman who presents himself for reception as a Senator was compromised by that war.

If in the State of Iowa there should unhappily be a rebellion, and if public report should announce that our patriot friend had taken a part in it to such an extent as to sit on the bench as a judge and enjoy its commission and swear allegiance to it, then if he should present himself with credentials as a Senator in this Chamber, I should think that we should be justified in asking an inquiry, and that is all that I ask now. I take the case that the Senator from Iowa supposes, but I add to it facts which he omits; and that, permit me to say, contains the whole question. If the case of Tennessee now were an ordinary case, like the case of Iowa, like the case of Maine, there would be no occasion and no justification for any such inquiry; but it is not an ordinary case, it is a case incident to the anomalous condition of affairs in our country at this moment. It cannot be treated, therefore, according to the ordinary rule; it is a new case, and to meet it we must make a new precedent.

The Senator from Iowa was very much afraid of precedents. Sir, I am not afraid of any precedent which has for its object the protection of right. I have said we must make a new precedent. Are we to confine ourselves absolutely to the precedents of the past? Clearly not. Just in proportion as new circumstances arise must they be met by a new precedent; and new circumstances have arisen now and you are called upon to meet them frankly, simply, and in so doing to make a new precedent for the future.

Mr. COWAN. Mr. President, this is a question that does not concern the Senator from Tennessee alone; it concerns the Senate; and it concerns the law that it should be maintained. Honorable Senators seem to forget that the right of a Senator to take his seat does not depend on the will of this body. That is a mistake which I wish to correct now once for all. Senators upon this floor are the representatives of the States of this Union; they derive from the States their authority to sit here, and not because we are willing to have them or unwilling. When a Senator presents the credentials of his State here in due form, that is a decision of the State that he shall take his seat, and by that decision we are bound.

Mr. SUMNER. Are we not the judges of the elections and qualifications?

Mr. COWAN. We are the judge of the elections, the qualifications, and the returns; but we cannot go any further; we cannot superadd any additional qualifications, nor can we come to the conclusion that we will reject him because he is a bad man or because he believes differently from us or has a different religion or a different creed, or anything of that kind. We must take him because he is the chosen representative of the State sending him; and if the State cannot send whom she pleases to represent her, then she is not a free State, and somebody else has the right to dictate to her who shall represent her.

When a Senator presents here credentials in due form, there being no objection to his election, no objection to the return, and he offers to qualify, he is entitled to take his seat; and why? The honorable Senator from Illinois might have followed with great profit the analogy that he started upon. He admits that in the organization of a body of this kind, a representative and deliberative body, unless the credentials were prima facie and unless the members were allowed to take their seats upon those credentials, never could be organized; organization would be utterly impossible. Again, he might have said that unless members come here and take their seats prima facie upon the credentials this would be a close corporation; this would be a body, once in the hands of a particular majority, always in the hands of that majority, and you could never break it. How would a minority of this body ever become the majority if the existing majority at the very threshold can say to a man upon his credentials, "You cannot have a seat?" That is to mistake two different functions—entirely different functions. After a man takes his seat, if it is found that he has been guilty of any crime, any offense, any violation of that which is essential to the good order of the Senate, then two thirds may expel him, but it requires two thirds, and that is the security of the body.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator tell us first, what he considers to be included within the term "qualifications" of which we are to judge, and, second, whether we cannot rightfully judge before we admit the member?

Mr. COWAN. You may decide upon the constitutional qualifications before you admit the member. I suppose you would have a right to inquire whether he was thirty years of age, whether he had been nine years a citizen of the United States, whether he resided in the State; but you cannot go outside of the constitutional qualifications.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Can we not inquire whether he has been a traitor?

Mr. COWAN. No, sir; you cannot inquire whether he has been a traitor or not, because to inquire into that is to inquire into a fact, and a fact over which a majority of this body has no jurisdiction whatever. When I am charged with a crime I have a right to be tried by a court having jurisdiction. I have no right to be convicted by part of the jury. According to the common law the whole of the jury must agree to my conviction; and if I am charged with a crime in the Senate, two thirds of the Senate must agree, and not one half or one more than one half; and that is just the difference, I can state to the honorable Senator from Vermont. This is an attempt on the part of a majority of the Senate to usurp a function which only belongs to two thirds.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But we do not usually put a prisoner into the jury box in trying the question of his guilt.

Mr. COWAN. Whether you put the prisoner into the jury box or not in trying the question of his guilt, it does so happen when the representative of a sovereign State here in the Senate is put on trial, he is in the jury box and he sits in his own case, and he has a right to be heard upon it, and I think he has a right to vote upon it, although that may be a disputed question; but he unquestionably has in every assembly of this kind the right to be heard and a right to be heard here as a Senator.

It just brings itself down to this precisely: can a majority of this Senate, at the threshold, as in this case, prevent the admission of a member from a State in this Union. If they can, then, as I said before, it just comes to this: whenever a majority take possession of the body, if they are disposed to override the law and to trample the Constitution under foot, they may keep themselves in power just so long as they are derelict in their duty to the Constitution. Now take this case; prima facie, the honorable Senator from Tennessee is entitled to his seat here; he takes his seat; but it is alleged after he has taken his seat that he has sworn falsely, for instance, in taking the oath that we have imposed here, the test oath. Upon that inquiry, he has a right to resolve the Senate into a judicial tribunal for the purpose of trying the fact; and nobody else can try it, and it requires two thirds of the Senate to expel him.

I trust Senators will see that this is a most important difference; one that is vital to the very constitution of the body; and the honorable Senator from Iowa well said we are making a precedent here which may meet us at some future time upon presenting ourselves to the body. Where is the necessity for this? Where is the necessity for violating the rule? It has been said that the House adopted another rule. I was informed immediately after by the chairman of the House Committee of Elections that they did the very reverse: they adopted the rule that the credentials were prima facie; and the credentials are prima facie in the House; then the case is referred to the Committee of Elections, and the parties are heard, and the person having the prima facie credentials is the sitting member until the House determines the contrary.

Then I hope, sir, that this member from Tennessee will be sworn and admitted to his seat here. If he has done anything which, under the law, would justify two thirds of the Senate in expelling him, let two thirds, then, expel him; but let us preserve intact the institution itself; do not let us put a mine under it to blow it up, perhaps about our own ears, with the whole fabric along with it. Nothing can be clearer to me than that if the majority are allowed to keep out men who they think ought not to come in, there is an end of liberty, there is a usurpation of the whole on the part of that majority; and it is no better (and only differs in the means used) than when Colonel Pride, with a troop of dragoons, went into the English Parliament and drove out all hostile to the majority. This is done by another means; that was done by actual force; but both tend to the same end, and that is, to keep the existing majority always in possession of the body. If you can meet the Senator from Tennessee upon the threshold here, as he is met, why can you not meet the Senator from Iowa or any other Senator in the same way? It behooves us to consider the fluctuations of fortune here. Those in the majority now may not be in the majority the next year or the year after, or two or three years from now. There may no trouble come from the usurpation of this power for ten years or for twenty years, but as we have received the law and the Constitution, and as we are the guardians of the institutions of the country, we ought to preserve them for those who come after us. We ought not to lay violent hands upon them in this way.

Mr. HENDRICKS. On some reflection, I think the Senator from Pennsylvania is right in the position which he has taken. The law and the rule of the Senate require that the oath shall be taken as a condition to the right to occupy the seat. If the proposed member takes the oath, then under the law and the rule of the Senate he is entitled to his seat. The condition of the law and of the rule is complied with thus far. But if in the taking of the oath he is false, I would be unwilling to sit with him. I should regard it as an offense to the Senate that in taking the seat a man had taken a false oath, and should with a majority of two thirds join for his expulsion.

But, Mr. President, I think this question goes further and deeper than that question, which is one of technicality rather. I understand the charge is that the person who presents himself as a Senator from the State of Tennessee occupied the position and office of judge during the rebellion in that State. Now, I submit to Senators that this may be within the letter of the law but it is not within the spirit of the law, nor within the spirit of the rule of the Senate. It is not in the nature of things a crime of any grade to hold and exercise the powers of a judicial office under a government de facto. It cannot be attributed as a wrong to a man that under a government de facto, however great a usurpation that government may be, he holds a judicial office. The holding of a judicial office is not giving aid and comfort to a rebellion. It is a commendable thing that a man shall faithfully discharge the duties of a judicial office anywhere and at any time. A political office or a military office in a government de facto set up against the rightful government is a very different thing. In the exercise of a political or a military office a man gives aid and comfort to the government de facto.

Upon this question I ask the attention of the Senate to two very high authorities. I ask the attention of the Senate to the opinion of the distinguished Senator now deceased from the State of Vermont, and I ask the attention of the Senate to the opinion of Chief Justice Hale, when he held office under the Cromwellian Government. I will read from a speech delivered by Senator Collamer in 1862, during the rebellion, in which he discussed this very question:

"But, it is said, men have actually taken offices there under that government; they have had the audacity to do that since that government has been established over them. I do not profess to be very highly versed in the ethics of politics, but I am fond of looking to examples that are bright and high. At the time of the rebellion under Cromwell, which had established a government de facto over the people of England, and had put down the existing Government, application was made to Chief Justice Hale, a man whose character stands as high, perhaps, as any in the annals of Christian judges, to take the place of chief justice, he being opposed to that Government. Justice Hale consulted with a couple of his friends, (bishops,) and after full deliberation came to this conclusion: 'Justice must be administered; the rights between man and man must be adjudged upon; somebody must hold courts; I can consider it no sin to take an office under a de facto government, though it is a usurpation.' He took it; and that man was not adjudged guilty of treason upon the restoration of Charles II. He continued in position ever afterward. In all the trouble between the House of York and the House of Lancaster, in the wars of the Roses, when revolutions were constant and frequent, one day a man of this family upon the throne, and the next day one of the other, as early as the period of Henry VII a statute was passed which has abided in England through all the revolutions afterward, that no man should be adjudged of treason because he was obedient to the reigning king, no matter if he was a usurper. Such, sir, is the respect paid by the world, and especially that part of the world from which we spring, to a de facto government; and the nations of the earth deal with them as governments, no matter what the usurpation."

After the rebellion became completely inaugurated the authority of the Government of the United States was for the time suspended in the southern States, it became impossible for this Government to defend the people there, and of necessity they fell under the government de facto that was established over them. Is any Senator here prepared to say that it was a wrong in any man of the southern States to occupy an office which was not political in its character, which was not military in its character, which did not give aid and comfort to the rebellion, which added nothing whatever to its strength or power? Is any Senator prepared to say that it was wrong for a man to go upon the bench and adjudicate the civil and criminal questions that properly came before his court?

Mr. HOWARD. If the Senator from Indiana will allow me, I desire to say a word. It is notorious that the confederacy enacted very stringent confiscation laws, under which a vast amount of property of Union citizens residing in the insurrectionary States was seized, condemned, and sold, and the proceeds put into the confederate fisc for public use and for the purpose of prosecuting the war of the rebellion against the authority of the Government. Would the Senator regard it a perfectly innocent act on the part of a judge in the rebel confederacy to exercise his functions as he would be compelled to do undoubtedly in carrying out those cruel and proscription laws of confiscation against the property of Union citizens? Was it not a direct offense against the Government of the United States to do so? Were not his judgments declaring confiscation, his approval of judicial sales, and all other judicial acts connected with the execution of such laws in as direct hostility to the authority of the United States as would be his acts as a soldier with a musket in his hands? Where does the Senator draw the line of demarcation between the guilt on the one hand and the guilt on the other, or where is the line of distinction between guilt and innocence in the two cases?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Before the Senator takes his seat, I wish to ask him—inasmuch as he has stated that he personally makes the charge to the Senate—whether Mr. PATTERSON held a judicial office under the State of Tennessee or under the so-called government of the confederate States? Is the charge that he held an office under the State or the confederate government?

Mr. HOWARD. My information upon that particular question is not ample, but I submit to the Senator that there neither is nor can be any distinction between the two cases. The State of Tennessee, as a State, was as much an enemy of the United States as all the insurrectionary States combined acting under the denomination of the confederate government. That government was made up of the various insurrectionary States as the political elements composing it; and a judge in a State acting under a State commission and carrying out laws hostile to the Government of the United States was just as guilty, in my judgment, as if he had been acting as a confederate judge in the execution of confederate statutes. I can draw no distinction between the two cases.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I understood the Senator, in reply to what I submitted, to attempt to draw such a distinction. When I quoted the case of Chief Justice Hale, when I cited the opinion of that eminent jurist and great statesman, Mr. Collamer, now deceased, to the effect that the support of a government de facto by the act alone of holding a judicial office in no enlightened Government is to be regarded as a crime, the Senator arrested my remarks by saying that the confederate government so-called had enacted confiscation laws and that it would be in aid of that government to execute and administer those laws, and therefore a judge being connected with the administration of those laws would give aid and comfort to the southern cause. I understood that to be the argument of the Senator. If it did not have that point, I am not able to see that his argument had any. Now, Senators around me say that the charge is that Mr. PATTERSON exercised the office of a State judge. As such he had no duties to discharge in connection with the administration of the objectionable laws to which the Senator from Michigan has referred; those laws were to be executed in the courts of the confederacy.

Then, Mr. President, we have the case of a man who under a government de facto, a State government de facto, exercises the powers and discharges the duties of a judge. I say that is no crime; I say that is not giving aid and comfort to any cause. It is the discharge of a duty to humanity.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Let me remind the Senator from Indiana that the government of Cromwell was for many years perfectly established in Great Britain.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Twelve years, I believe.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. And it was as thoroughly submitted to as that of Queen Victoria is to-day. For many years no hostile force existed in England against it. Now, does the Senator say that while war existed upon the part of the General Government to put down the insurrection in the South, the insurrectionary government existed so de facto as to entitle officers holding under it to the same protection as those holding under Cromwell's Government, when Cromwell's Government was the only Government existing either in fact or attempted to be established in England?

Mr. HENDRICKS. As the point made by the Senator from Iowa is a point of time, I will ask him during what period of the Protectorate did Chief Justice Hale take office.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I am not able to say.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Very well, then, as the Senator is not able to say, his criticism upon that point has not much weight. Cromwell held the power in England for twelve years, or about that length of time. His government was a usurpation. It was treated so by its opponents during its entire existence. It was treated so after it ceased to exist and after the monarchs were restored to the throne. It was treated so by the execution of men connected with that government, men who had connected themselves with the political movements and the military movements of the Protectorate; but no man after the Restoration brought a charge against any judge because he had administered law and equity among the people of England. It is left for us among our race to aver that it is a crime to hold a court in a State under the State authorities, under a de facto government, if you please. It is left for us to say that a man who discharges that duty to mankind is guilty of a crime. Mr. Collamer, who was a well-read historian as well as a light in the law, stated the case of Chief Justice Hale as applicable to the case of the people in the southern States. There was no charge against that distinguished statesman that he sympathized with the southern cause; it was not questioned that he was patriotic and true to his country, but he said that the discharge of judicial powers, the exercise of a judicial office under these State governments was no crime. They were governments de facto; the authority and the power of the Government of the United States was for the time suspended and he who exercised an office which gave no aid and comfort to the rebellion was not guilty of crime. Is it the opinion of learned Senators that for five years the people of the southern States were to remain without the administration of the law? Is it the opinion of learned Senators that a government de facto being established no man dared to exercise the powers of a judge under that government for five years?

Mr. President, I believe that upon this question I am so unfortunate as, perhaps, not to agree exactly with any political party. I believe that the States of this Union are indestructible. I believe that they continued to exist during the period of the whole rebellion, and that their attempt to detach themselves from the Government of the United States and to attach themselves to another government was simply null and void. I believe that during the whole period of the rebellion the governments of the States continued to exist, and I look for the time when the Supreme Court of the United States will say that the acts of the State governments during the entire period of the revolution, which were not political in their character, and which were not to contribute aid to the rebellion, were legal and valid, and that the acts of the confederate government, so called, were ab initio void.

For myself, I do not believe that the President of the United States had any occasion to reorganize the State governments. That was my opinion about it; but he thought it to be his duty, and the people accepted his proposition, and the people gave validity and power and authority to that which he could contribute neither to. By the act of the people the new constitution has been adopted in North Carolina and other States. It is not because the President suggested that it should be done, but because the people acquiesced in the proposition and breathed into the new organization the breath of life. I believe that those State governments continued during all the period of the rebellion; that in the eye of the law their connection with the Government of the United States was never broken; that their resolutions of secession were simply nothing; that their old obligation to the United States and their legal connection with the United States continued all the while, and that it was perfectly right and proper for any man to hold a judicial office in any State of the Union. Sir, we cannot go the length of saying that in the case of a revolution, when a government de facto is established and the authority and power of the Government of the United States for the time being is suspended, the laws shall not be administered. It is in the cause of humanity that courts shall be held.

Then, upon this question, Mr. President, my opinion goes somewhat further than the technical points which have been made. If Mr. PATTERSON held the office of judge in the State of Tennessee and under the authority of the State of Tennessee, it is no treason, it is no wrong; it is a right and virtuous act, for which we cannot punish him and for which we cannot drive him from the Senate, if the people of Tennessee have rightfully elected him.

This, sir, is an important question, if we shall say that it is necessarily treason to hold any office whatever in the States of the South during the rebellion. I am not prepared to go so far. I do not think it is the spirit of the statute, or the spirit of the rule of the Senate; but, sir, I agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania upon the technical question made by him that the proposed Senator is to take the oath under the rule; and if that oath be not true, then the question comes up before the Senate whether the Senate has been offended by that act, and upon that question two thirds alone can render an effective vote.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, I desire to say in very few words that, in my opinion, looking over the whole field of the war and our operations with this rebellion, it was the loyalty of East Tennessee which saved us in the struggle; and I believe further, from the history which I have had, that of all the men in East Tennessee there is no man who, in his whole character during the rebellion, did more to sustain the loyalty of East Tennessee than the present applicant for a seat. I shall not go into the details. There seems to be a wrong impression, I think, resting on the minds of some in relation to the circumstances under which it is said he accepted the office of judge in the State of Tennessee.

Sir, when the rebellion came it found him one of the judges of the State of Tennessee. During his office as such, after the rebellion began, he charged in the face of the people of Tennessee that those who were engaged in the rebellion against the United States were guilty of treason, while the rebel Governor of Tennessee and his myrmidons were calling upon him and insisting that he should charge that to raise troops for the Federal Government was treason against the confederate States. He refused to do so. He was arrested time and again. The order of Benjamin, the pretended secretary of war, was out against him to have him seized and confined at Tuscaloosa during the whole war. It was under circumstances like these that his office expired, and at the solicitation of the Union men of Tennessee he consented to be a candidate under the laws of the State of Tennessee, no one of which had been changed but existed precisely as before the rebellion began. He consented, as I understand, to be a candidate. His competitor was an open rebel, and, as a Union man, at the solicitation of the Union men of Tennessee, he consented to run, and was elected by the loyal people of East Tennessee by four thousand majority. He took the oath of office as judge of the State of Tennessee; and when the oath was administered to him by the officer that administered it—under the circumstances by which he was surrounded, he was compelled to take the oath to which reference has been made, to support the confederate States government, and at the time he took it, to the officer who administered it he declared that he would spit upon the oath, that he took it at the point of the bayonet and under duress, accepting the office at the solicitation of the Union men to keep the office and all the power of that office in East Tennessee out of the hands of rebels, which would have crushed down still further the Union men of that State.

This, sir, is what I have been informed of the history of these transactions, and there is nothing in this, in my judgment, which shows on his part any assent of his whatever to act in behalf of the confederate government, and he never did act in behalf of the confederate government, officially or otherwise. His house was the home of the fleeing men who sought their way through the mountains from North and South Carolina. His fortune was at their disposal. He organized a system by which the men of East Tennessee ran into Kentucky and flocked to our armies by thousands upon thousands. To talk about condemning such a man as having been guilty of a crime against the United States or having intentionally violated any obligation of the duty which he owed to us, is to me simply without any foundation whatever.

I will not take up time in relation to this matter. I think what has been said by others is sufficient to justify the ordinary course of proceeding in this case as in the case of all other Senators who apply for admission.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Before the honorable Senator from Wisconsin made the remark he has just made, I had made up my mind to vote against this reference as unnecessary; but I do not know but that what he has said will compel me to vote for it. On the general subject I hold that rules as to the form and manner in which we shall admit an associate into this body coming from a State are properly settled by the majority either by a specific rule or by custom. It has been the custom of the Senate from time immemorial, undoubtedly, when credentials are presented in due form, upon their presentation to have the member qualified and let him take his seat. The very remarkable and anomalous state of things growing out of the rebellion rendered it absolutely necessary to take a somewhat different course, and when the credentials were presented by the late Senator from Oregon, Mr. Stark, certain papers were sent to me to be presented to the Senate. Those papers contained a great deal of proof, affidavits charging and going to show disloyalty on the part of the member presenting himself, disloyal sentiments and expressions. In the state in which the country then was, new as it was to our experience, I deemed that the Senate had a perfect right, and it was its duty before proceeding to make him a member of this body, to inquire into a fact so material; and when his credentials were presented I rose and presented the papers and moved the reference of the credentials and papers themselves, thus leaving the whole question to the Committee on the Judiciary to be investigated.

It was a new case which was argued at length in the Senate, and it was finally decided by the Senate that the course I proposed was a proper disposition of the subject. It thus formed a new precedent, and a precedent necessary, in my judgment, at the time, arising from the peculiar state of affairs. I afterwards became satisfied that there was nothing in the case which should properly exclude Mr. Stark, and voted for his admission.

Yesterday when the credentials of the honorable Senator from Tennessee [Mr. FOWLER] were presented, it was my opinion that in the condition of things in which we found ourselves the advisable course was to submit all the credentials coming from the late confederate States, in the first instance, to the Committee on the Judiciary. I knew that in his case that would be a mere form; but I regarded it, as a precedent, as an advisable mode of proceeding, owing to the fact that we did not know under what state of facts other gentlemen claiming to be Senators might come here from the late confederate States. My opinion was expressed to some members of the Senate, but I was overruled by wiser men than myself and some who are now perhaps in favor of referring these credentials. They thought it was not worth while to refer the credentials; they said it was contrary to usage, and we must follow the ordinary usage, which was, when credentials were laid upon our table in due form from a State which we admitted to be a member of the Union, that the Senator should be sworn in; and that course was pursued in Mr. FOWLER's case. This morning when the credentials of the other gentleman claiming to be a Senator from Tennessee were presented, that precedent having been established, though against my opinion, I was not inclined to extend one rule to one man and another rule to another. The Senate must take the consequences of its own rule established in relation to that matter. Those who have these things under consideration and who ordinarily decide them for the Senate having so determined, I did not choose to interpose any objection.

Now, sir, how does this particular case stand? I was not disposed to attach to the mere statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Michigan that importance which would induce me to change the opinion to which I had come with regard to the case, namely, that we should apply to this gentleman the same rule that we yesterday applied to his colleague; and why? Because they presented no proof, they presented no papers, they made no specific charges as of their own knowledge; they did not state that they knew any fact of themselves, nor did anybody state so. On a mere rumor, on a mere outside statement, on a rumor that somebody told somebody else that such a fact existed, I would not vary from the ordinary rule of the Senate, but would regard it as a rumor not affording a sufficient foundation for proceeding. That was the conclusion to which I had arrived in my own mind; but here the Senator from Wisconsin gets up and tells us what I did not suppose to be the fact, what had not been established, what nobody had asserted, that this gentleman actually took an oath to support the confederacy.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Certainly.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I stated, upon my information from the history of the times and of the country, what I understood the facts to be. I did not state it by authority from any gentleman. I stated it just as the Senator from Massachusetts stated his objection, and as the Senator from Michigan stated what he understood about it from rumor or from history. By way of reply to those Senators, I stated what I had heard of it, because I did not wish a statement of the facts to go out to the country in such a shape as to prejudice this case one way or the other. The Senator has no right to claim that I made any statement more than the Senator from Massachusetts or the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. HOWARD. I understood the honorable Senator from Wisconsin to make a very specific statement in regard to the taking of the oath, going into particulars.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I listened to the honorable Senator from Wisconsin with a great deal of attention, and I was surprised that, arguing that the gentleman from Tennessee should be allowed to come forward and qualify, he should have gone on and given a history of what he professed to know and a statement of the circumstances under which Mr. PATTERSON took the oath to support the confederate government, and all about it. Before that I regarded it as a case not proved, not sufficiently worthy of my attention to induce me to vote for a reference; and I was somewhat astounded at the statements of the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, professing, as I thought from the way in which he said it, to know all about the case. I supposed he spoke from authority.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I spoke from the authority of what I have seen and heard.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the Senator now says that he spoke merely from rumor, that he does not know whether the statements he made were true or not, that he does not know anything about the facts, that is another thing.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I stated what I have been informed and what I believe to be true. If the Senator takes my statement upon it, I believe it to be true that when the oath was administered to him which is said to have been administered it was at the point of the bayonet. Now let the Senator take the statement.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I am perfectly willing to take it; I have been taking it all along; [laughter;] and I am ready to take more of it if the Senator has got any more that he wants me to take. I do not like that style of address, though; that kind of phisic does not operate much on me.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. As to the style of address between the honorable Senator and myself, or the honorable Senator and other Senators in the Chamber, I am perfectly willing to submit my style as compared with his to the judgment of the Senate. I do not think that I assume any more authority when I speak to the Senate or to Senators than does the honorable Senator from Maine. I sometimes speak earnestly, it is true; I do not deny that; but I have no disposition to dictate to any one or to dogmatize to any one.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It happens to be the case that whenever a gentleman gives a fling at me or bids me defiance in a very assuming manner, and I undertake to reply, it is said at once, "Oh, I will compare my general reputation for good nature and good manners with the Senator at any time." [Laughter.] He does not undertake to meet the case; but he falls back on his record. The case is just as I stated, and I do not like to be addressed in that sort of style.

As I said before, in his zeal with reference to this particular case, the Senator from Wisconsin undertook to state facts, and he did not talk about suppositions or hearsay or anything of that kind, but he stated them as facts known to himself in the plainest and most palpable form that a man could state them. He undertook to say that he would state the facts, and he did go on to make a recital of them, and now he says that after all he was only talking rumor. As the Senator really cannot tell whether he was undertaking to state the facts or to state a mere rumor, and is so undecided about it, I do not know that it is worth while for me to predicate a vote on his statements; but if I was convinced from any evidence before the Senate at this time upon which reliance should be placed that this gentleman had taken the confederate oath, I would insist on a reference and an inquiry. I do not say that even if that was proved to my satisfaction there might not be circumstances under which I would vote that he should be admitted; but I say that if that fact were shown it would be sufficiently grave, in my judgment, to require that the case should go through the form of a reference to the Committee on the Judiciary that we might have the facts and circumstances connected with it reported to us. I might perhaps come to the same conclusion that the honorable Senator from Indiana has arrived at upon a certain state of facts. I will not undertake to pre-judge on that subject. That might be the result in my own mind; there might be circumstances that would excuse it, perhaps; but it would make the case sufficiently grave, in my judgment, to justify the Senate in referring the matter to the Committee on the Judiciary that we may know exactly what the facts are.

Mr. GUTHRIE. This proceeding strikes me as wrong. We have established a test oath which is a very rigid one, and I have some doubts in my own mind whether it is constitutional as applied to members of Congress; but we have enforced it upon all who have taken seats since its enactment. This motion is predicated upon the fact that the Senator who presents his credentials cannot take that oath, and we are to refer it to a committee to inquire into the fact and report to the Senate whether he can legitimately take it, and if he can he is then to be sworn in. Now, how long is this to take? The committee are to hear proof; of course they are to hear counter-proof; and instead of this question being decided by the Senate, it is to be decided by the committee. This investigation may go over until next December. The people of the country had entire confidence in our sincerity when we agreed to receive Tennessee; but are we now to establish a precedent by which every man's case may be investigated by a committee sitting as court of justice swearing witnesses pro and con before he is allowed to take his seat? It strikes me it is for the Senator whose credentials are presented to say whether he can take this oath. If he can, prima facie I think we have to admit him. If he cannot take the oath we reject him, as a matter of course. It is a question for the Senate. If we are satisfied after he is sworn in that under all the circumstances he ought not to have taken the oath, it furnishes ground for expulsion. I rather think we had better let him take the oath without this reference, and I shall vote against the reference, because it would be a most curious proceeding in a court of justice to appoint triers to know whether a juror was competent to sit before he had presented himself and was called as a juror.

Mr. CONNESS. During the progress of the past year particularly, there has been very much said upon the exact issue that is now before the Senate; that is, the power of this branch of Congress and the other, or to use the language of the honorable Senator who has so often spoken here from Wisconsin, [Mr. DOOLITTLE,] of each House for itself to determine the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members under the Constitution of the United States. Whenever it has been asserted that the legislative department of this Government had a right to determine whether a State was entitled to representation or not, Senators like the Senator from Wisconsin have taken the position that Congress was restricted from dealing with the question, and that each House must deal with the question, under the Constitution, for itself. Now, a case is presented; a Senator applies for admission; the second from the State of Tennessee. The first has been admitted, there being no question in regard to his capacity for taking the oath and entering upon his duties; and he took the oath and took his seat. The second applies and a question is raised. What question? It is stated that the candidate for admission, or rather the Senator who proposes to take his seat in this body, was elected to an office under the so-called confederate government; that he took the oath of office to support that government; that the nature of his office required him to pass upon the confiscation of the property of loyal men; that those acts were inconsistent with his fealty to the United States and now constitute an inconsistency with his taking the oath that the law prescribes for a Senator. The objection is made to his taking his seat, and it is put upon that ground, on which it is moved to refer the case to a committee of this body. The Senator making the application states that he desires it to be so referred; he wishes the whole record examined that it may be determined before he takes the oath whether he can do so or not, whether it is a case in the judgment of the Senate to which the Senate can take exception; and Senators rise here and oppose the reference. The Senator from Wisconsin particularly, who has so often declared that each House for itself under the Constitution must determine the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members, opposes the reference, and the Senator from Kentucky, last on the floor, says: "Let the Senator take the oath first, and then if it be found that he could not have taken the oath properly and legally, I will vote to expel him." A very pretty proceeding!

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The Senator from California will allow me a word. I do not at all question the right of the Senate to inquire into his qualifications or into his election or his return; but all I insist on in this matter is that we should pursue the same rule in this case that we do in other cases, the same that was pursued in the case of Stockton, from New Jersey. He was admitted and sworn, his case referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. They reported in that case and the Senate decided that he was not properly elected. Just precisely so in this case, if the Senate decide that Mr. PATTERSON is not properly elected or not properly qualified, they pass on the case; but shall you pass on the case before he is admitted to the seat prima facie?

Mr. CONNESS. I submit that this is another question altogether. This is a question under the test oath. The Senator from New Jersey could take the test oath; he did take it; there was no question about that; but the objection to this Senator taking his seat is that he cannot take the oath legally and properly. Therefore the inquiry in this case must take place now properly, and all the argument that has been addressed to this case as it appears to me should have occurred upon the report made from the committee of this body to which the case is to be referred.

Mr. President, in view of Senators from the rebel States taking their seats again in this body, it behooves the Senate and is a necessity that an exact rule should be established on the subject. I do not mean to pronounce on the merits of this case at all. I know nothing about this Senator's case. If it shall appear that he ought to take his seat in this body no Senator will welcome him more cheerfully than I shall; but it is essential to him, to his standing among the members of this body, to the Senate, to the country, that the case be examined, the proper rule laid down, and I think in that all ought to agree.

Mr. DAVIS. I object most to the form of the proposed reference of this matter to the committee, and I object to a reference at all at this time. The Constitution requires every member of the Senate to take an oath to support that instrument upon his admission to a seat. If a gentleman who claimed to be a member refused to take that oath, of course it would not only be the right but the duty of the Senate to prevent him from taking the seat, to exclude him from the Chamber. Now we have another oath under the act of Congress in addition to that. The act of 1862 provides—

"That hereafter every person elected or appointed to any office of honor or profit under the Government of the United States, either in the civil, military, or naval departments of the public service, excepting the President of the United States, shall, before entering upon the duties of such office, and before being entitled to any of the salary or other emoluments thereof, take and subscribe the following oath or affirmation."

Now, sir, what is the condition that is offered by this law to a gentleman who presents himself here claiming a seat as a member of the body? He is required to take the oath. Who is to be the judge whether he can take the oath or not? Himself and himself alone. As a general rule, a man who is entitled to any right or privilege upon taking an oath is the sole judge whether he can take the oath or not. That question is referred to him. He may take it falsely; and if he takes it falsely he commits the crime of perjury if it is an oath administered according to law, and he is then amenable for having perpetrated that offense. What does the Senate now propose to do? To inquire beforehand whether Mr. PATTERSON can correctly and truly take this oath or not.

Whence does the Senate derive such a power as that? What law, what principle of constitution or law authorizes them, after they have determined that this gentleman shall take the oath, to investigate beforehand whether he can take it consistently with truth or not? Does this act authorize any such investigation by the Senate? Not at all. There is no pretense of power for any such imposition by the Senate. It is just like any other oath which an officer is required to take before he enters upon the discharge of the duties of his office, or which a private citizen is required to take as a precedent condition to his acquisition of a right. Unless there is a power created and invested with the authority to inquire whether he can take the oath truly or properly, all that is to be done is to tender the oath to him. If he takes it he is entitled to the right, whether it be an official right or a right of property or any other right that is to rest in him on taking the oath. Whether he has taken it truly or not, is a matter for after inquiry; and if he has taken it falsely he has committed a crime which is to be punished not by the prevention of his taking the oath, because that would not be punishment, but he is allowed to take the oath and if he has committed the offense he is responsible for the legal penalty that is declared against it.

Sir, the high authority of the Senator from Vermont, now deceased, has been referred to here, and there is no higher authority. What did he say when application was made by Messrs. Willey and Carille to take their seats in this body as Senators from the State of Virginia? I will read a single short paragraph from his speech on that occasion. The right of these gentlemen to take their seats was controverted by Mr. Bayard, of Delaware, and by other gentlemen who were then members of the Senate. On that point Mr. Collamer said:

"It seems, Mr. President, that objections are taken to the reception as members of this body of the gentlemen who have presented their credentials."

These gentlemen offered themselves at the bar, presented their credentials, and asked permission to take the oath and to be admitted to their seats as members of the body. Upon that state of fact the deceased Senator Collamer was then remarking, and after having stated that fact, what does he add?

"I think it will be difficult to find a precedent in the history of this body by which men who presented papers prima facie good were not allowed to take their seats. I think the thing never did happen. They have been sometimes deprived of those seats afterward on investigation, but I have never known them rejected at first. So much for the precedent."

The deceased Senator stated the precedents of our Congress, and especially of the Senate, truly. Whenever, and up to that very time and including that case, a gentleman presented to the Senate a credential in due form of law as a Senator, he was admitted, in the language of Senator Collamer, in the first instance to his seat, and if there was a valid objection to his retaining his seat it was made the subject of after inquiry before the proper committee.

Let me illustrate that point by a reference to the qualifications of a Senator. A Senator is to be thirty years of age, he is to have been nine years a citizen of the United States, he is to be a resident of the State from whence he was elected. In the absence of all or any of these qualifications he is not entitled to take his seat. All of these qualifications may not in fact exist, any of them may not in fact exist; but if he presents his credentials in due form of law, that upon its face, according to the uniform precedents of the Senate, entitles him to take his seat, whether he is qualified or disqualified by being under thirty years of age, by having been for a less period than nine years a citizen of the United States, or not being a resident of the State from whence he is elected, is a subject for inquiry by the proper committee after he has been allowed to take his seat. If the present applicant was not thirty years of age he would not be entitled to his seat; but would any Senator move to exclude him when he presented his credentials upon that ground, and in order to inquire into the fact whether he possessed that qualification or not before he was admitted to the seat? He might not be a citizen of the United States at all; he might be an unnaturalized foreigner; he might not be a resident of the State that has given him his credential by its proper authority; but whether any or all these objections exist to his taking his seat is not inquired into when he presents himself at the bar with a proper credential in his hand and asks to be admitted to take the oath and his seat. All that is to be done, of course; and after that is done then the inquiry whether he has the requisite qualifications or not is to be made under the direction of the Senate and reported upon by its proper committee.

I voted against the law imposing this oath at the time of its passage. I believed then, as I now believe, that it is a flagrant violation of the Constitution, that it is Congress adding qualifications to members of Congress when the Constitution alone can do that thing; but without making that question at all, I now take the position that it cannot be inquired into, it cannot be examined into whether the present applicant can truly take the oath which is prescribed by the law that I have read; that is a matter, in the language of Judge Collamer, for after inquiry; all he has to do to entitle himself to a seat in this body is to show his credential from the Governor of the State of Tennessee in the usual form. That has been presented, and it is not controverted that he has it in due form. Upon that warrant he is entitled to be admitted to his seat, he is entitled to have the oath of office and the test oath administered to him if he is disposed to take that oath. If he refuses either to take the oath to support the Constitution or to take the test oath, by the terms of the law he cannot be admitted to his seat; but if he is willing to take these oaths, the question whether he can take them properly is submitted and can be submitted, in the first instance, only to him. If he is willing to take these oaths he is entitled prima facie to his seat in this body; and if he takes either oath falsely it becomes a subject for after inquiry by the Senate; and for the crime of perjury, which would be perpetrated by taking the oath falsely if it be a valid oath, he would be subject to expulsion by the Senate.

Mr. WILSON. I hope we shall have the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] to refer these credentials to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to inquire into the qualifications of Mr. PATTERSON.

Mr. SUMNER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 26, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Conness, Creswell, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Ross, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, Williams, and Wilson—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Doolittle, Guthrie, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane, McDougal, Nesmith, Norton, Sherman, Van Winkle, and Wiley—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Clark, Cragin, Dixon, Fowler, Grimes, Riddle, Saulsbury, Wright, and Yates—10.

So the motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the bill (S. No. 20) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 759) authorizing the refunding of certain taxes;

A bill (H. R. No. 807) amendatory of the preemption and homestead laws;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 196) to construe an act further to provide for the safety of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, to regulate the salaries of steamboat inspectors, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 197) authorizing a contract with Vinnie Ream for a statue of Abraham Lincoln.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I call for the order of the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be considered as before the Senate.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator from Maine will indulge me a moment, there is a bill pending on the Senate table from the House of Representatives that comes back with some amendments. The amendments are verbal in their character mostly. I desire to concur in them all; it will only take a moment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the appropriation bill does not lose its place, I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. House bill No. 791 is regularly before the Senate. The bill suggested by the Senator from Missouri will be taken up by unanimous consent, no objection being made.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 20) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast.

The amendments were to change the names of corporators or to alter the phraseology of the bill, with the exception of the addition of the following additional section:

Sec. 21. And be it further enacted, That whenever in grants of land or other subsidies, made or hereafter to be made to railroad or other corporations, the United States has reserved the right, or shall reserve it, to appoint directors, engineers, commissioners, or other agents, to examine said roads or act in conjunction with other officers of said company or corporations, all the costs, charges, and pay of said directors, engineers, commissioners, or agents shall be paid by the respective companies. Said directors, engineers, commissioners, or agents shall be paid for said services the sum of ten dollars per day for each and every day actually and necessarily employed, and ten cents for each and every mile actually and necessarily traveled in discharging the duties required of them, which per diem and mileage shall be in full compensation for said services; and in case any company shall refuse or neglect to make such payment no more patents for lands or other subsidies shall be issued to such company until these requirements are complied with.

Mr. BROWN. The amendments of the House of Representatives are merely the addition of a few names to the corporators, the change of a few words to make the language of the bill conform more accurately to the language of land-grant bills as heretofore passed, and I move that they be concurred in. I have examined them all carefully.

The amendments were concurred in.

APPROVAL OF BILLS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. MOORE, his Secretary, announced that the President had approved and signed, on the 25th instant, the following bills and joint resolutions:

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 121) providing for the examination of the accounts of the State of Massachusetts for moneys expended during the war for coast defense;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 125) granting the right of way through military reserves to the Union Pacific Railroad Company and its branches;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 111) for the relief of Sergeant Milton McKinnon;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 126) to authorize the use of certain plates of the United States exploring expedition by the Navy Department;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 132) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and settle the accounts of Caleb T. Fay and William Y. Patch, late assessor and collector of internal revenue at San Francisco; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 139) for the benefit of the Illinois Soldiers' College and Military Academy.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolutions from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 759) authorizing the refunding of certain taxes—to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (H. R. No. 807) amendatory of the preemption and homestead laws—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 196) to construe an act further to provide for the safety of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, to regulate the salaries of steamboat inspectors, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Commerce.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 197) authorizing a contract with Vinnie Ream for a statue of Abraham Lincoln; was read twice by its title.

Mr. BROWN. I have the authority of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to ask that that resolution be not committed. They have examined it and concurred in it, and I ask that it be put on its passage.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That should go to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope it will be referred to the Library Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the joint resolution cannot be considered now. It will be referred to the Committee on the Library.

GENERAL HOSPITAL.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 214) to incorporate the General Hospital of the District of Columbia, which was to add to the second section of the bill the words "and the property held by said corporation shall be devoted exclusively to the purposes of such hospital."

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GRIMES. I am satisfied that if the Senate would proceed to the consideration of executive business for three or four minutes, for the purpose of referring the messages that have been sent in, a very long space of time might be saved, perhaps a day or two. Some of them are very voluminous and must be considered. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HENDERSON, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the report of the Secretary of the Senate communicating a detailed statement of the payments from the contingent fund of the Senate for the year ending December 3, 1865, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that the report be printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 444) to reorganize and fix the pay of certain officers of the Post Office Department, reported it without amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 103) to refer the petition of Benjamin Holliday to the Court of Claims, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILLIAM WINDOM of Minnesota, Mr. SIDNEY CLARKE of Kansas, and Mr. LEWIS W. ROSS of Illinois, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bill and joint resolution of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 309) to authorize Samuel Stevens, a Stockbridge Indian, to enter and purchase a certain tract of land in the Stockbridge reservation, Wisconsin; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 117) for the relief of Charles M. Blake.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the joint resolution (S. R. No. 86) to provide for the publication of the Official History of the Rebellion, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bill and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 808) for the relief of Martha A. Estill, of the State of California;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 92) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to pay certain claims out of the balance of an appropriation for the payment of necessary expenditures in the service of the United States for Indian affairs in the Territory of Utah;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 198) authorizing the purchase of a certain collection or museum, and the transfer of certain funds therefor by the Commissioner of Agriculture; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 199) for the relief of certain Chippewa, Ottawa, and Pottawatomie Indians.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 179) in relation to the district courts of the United States for the States of California and Louisiana;

A bill (S. No. 324) for the relief of John Hastings, late surveyor and depository of public moneys at Pittsburg;

A bill (S. No. 424) to incorporate the Washington Temperance Society, of the city of Washington, District of Columbia; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 123) to change the place of holding the terms of the circuit court for the district of West Virginia.

BENJAMIN HOLLIDAY.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendment to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 103) to refer the petition of Benjamin Holliday to the Court of Claims, which was disagreed to by the House of Representatives; and

On motion of Mr. POMEROY, it was Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendment to the said resolution, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. CLARK, Mr. HOWE, and Mr. DAVIS.

OFFICIAL HISTORY OF THE REBELLION.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. No. 86) to provide for the publication of the Official History of the rebellion; and

On motion of Mr. WILSON, it was Resolved, That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the said resolution.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bill and joint resolutions from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 808) for the relief of Martha A. Estill, of the State of California—to the Committee on Claims.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 92) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to pay certain claims out of the balance of an appropriation for the payment of necessary expenditures in the service of the United States for Indian affairs in the Territory of Utah—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 198) authorizing the purchase of a certain collection or museum and the transfer of certain funds therefor by the Commissioner of Agriculture—to the Committee on Agriculture.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 199) for the relief of certain Chippewa, Ottawa, and Pottawatomie Indians—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

DONOHUE, RYAN AND SECOR.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up Senate joint resolution No. 141, to which I am sure there will be no objection.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I must insist upon going on with the regular order of business, which is the deficiency bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am sure this resolution will give rise to no debate. It will take but a moment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If it will give rise to no debate, I give way, but with the understanding that if it does it shall be laid aside.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. No. 141) for the relief of Donohue, Ryan & Secor, builders of the iron-clad monitor Camanche. It provides for the payment to them of $179,993 80 for losses sustained by them in the construction of that vessel.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to know why this case is singled out from all the others, and whether it comes now from a committee.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope the honorable Senator from Maryland will now let this matter go over as it will give rise to debate.

Mr. JOHNSON. If there is any opposition to it, I will not, in accordance with the understanding, press it at this time; but I do not think there will be. This case was reported without objection in the other bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Very well; the other bill was opposed strenuously.

Mr. JOHNSON. The bill was, but not this case.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think there were objections to the whole of these claims.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Nobody objected to this.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I objected and voted against the bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope my friend from Maryland will now allow me to go on with the regular order of business.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator from Illinois will not oppose this, I think.

Mr. FESSENDEN. He does oppose it.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLONEL H. C. DE AHNA.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I now renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 150.

Mr. FESSENDEN. With the understanding that it will not displace the regular order of business, and that it will take no time, I shall not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion can be entertained only by unanimous consent, there being another subject before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 150) to provide for payment of the claim of Colonel H. C. De Ahna for military services. It directs the proper disbursing and accounting officers of the Treasury to pay to Henry Charles De Ahna a sum equal to the pay, allowances, and emoluments of a colonel of infantry in active service for one year from March 31, 1862, and he is to be considered honorably mustered out of the military service.

Mr. HENDERSON. I should like to know where those services were rendered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is unable to answer.

Mr. FESSENDEN. As it will give rise to debate, I hope my friend from Rhode Island will postpone its further consideration for the present.

Mr. HENDERSON. I shall oppose it.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I withdraw the consideration of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid aside, and the bill regularly before the Senate will be proceeded with.

DEFICIENCIES IN APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 791) to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with several amendments.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move that the amendments be considered as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That course will be adopted, no objection being interposed. The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to insert the word "namely" after the word "extension" in line twenty-five, in order that it may be understood that it refers to the two clauses following.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is merely a verbal correction and will be made, no objection being interposed.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Finance was in section one, line fifty-one, after the word "dollars" to insert:

Provided, That from and after June 30, 1866, the regular compensation of the female folders in the dead-letter office shall be at the rate of fifty dollars per month.

So that the clause will read:

For twenty per cent. additional to the salaries of female clerks employed in the Post Office Department, as per act of June 25, 1864, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, $4,000. Provided, That from and after June 30, 1866, the regular compensation of the female folders in the dead-letter office shall be at the rate of fifty dollars per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section one, after line sixty, to strike out the following clauses:

For additional compensation to the Assistant Attorney General, $500.

For amount required for salaries of clerks, $2,800.

For temporary clerks, additional compensation to clerks, and so forth, $10,000.

For contingent expenses, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line eighty-three, to strike out the following:

Salary of the deputy solicitor of the Court of Claims: The salary of the assistant solicitor of the Court of Claims shall be the same as that of the solicitor of said court.

Mr. CRESWELL. I am not aware of any reason for striking out the eighty-fourth, eighty-fifth, and eighty-sixth lines in regard to the salary of the deputy solicitor of the Court of Claims.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The reason is that no appropriation is made in it. It does not state what it is or anything about it. No information was received by the committee in regard to it, and we found no papers on file in relation to it.

Mr. CRESWELL. Then the deputy solicitor of the Court of Claims is to be without his salary.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This clause provides that it shall be the same as that of the solicitor. It is to equalize their salaries.

Mr. CRESWELL. That is for the assistant.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is to equalize it and bring it up, I suppose. I have no objection to this amendment lying over until the Senator can look it over and ascertain what the present salary of the solicitor is and the difference between it and the salary of the assistant and deputy, and then, if he will offer a proper amendment making an appropriation, the question will be fairly before the Senate.

Mr. CRESWELL. I will do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The amendment will be passed over for the present.

The next amendment was in section one, line fifty, to insert the word "five" before "dollars;" so that the clause will read:

For salary of marshal of the eastern district of New York from March 22, 1865, to June 30, 1866, $255 35.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section one, after line one hundred and thirty-four, to insert the following:

To complete the repairing and furnishing of the President's House, $20,000.
